ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT. SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1628 OF 1924.

December 11, 1925.

JAGRUP SINGH—PLAINTIFF—

INDRASAN PANDE AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 12 (3)— Person "claiming pre-emption," meaning of—Vendee, or intended vendee, whether included.

The vendee, or proposed vendee, or contemplated vendee, or intended vendee, is a person "claiming pre-emption" within the meaning of the clause "more persons than one of the same class claiming pre-emption" in s. 12 (3) of the Agra Pre-emption Act. [p. 1, col. 1.]

Iswar Datt Upadhiya v. Mahesh Datt Upadhiya, 89 Ind. Cas. 114; 23 A. L. J. 862; L. R. 6 A. 451 Civ.; (1925) A. I. R. (A.) 747, followed.

The ordinary meaning of "to pre-empt" is to purchase in preference to others, that is to say, even of the whole world, and pre-emption is the effect of the purchase. The vendee, if he is successful in the end over other competitors, does in fact pre-empt and is, therefore, properly spoken of as a person claiming pre-emption. [p. 1, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 30th July 1924.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a simple question of law on the construction of s. 12 sub-s. (3) of the new Pre-emption Act. That question is this. The sub-section providing that in a case "where there are more persons than one of the same class claiming pre-emption," is the vendee, or proposed vendee, or contemplated vendee, or intended vendee, a person claiming pre-emption within the meaning of the section. In the case of Iswar Datt Upadhiya v. Mahesh Datt Upadhiya (1) a Division Bench of this Court, including one member of the Court now sitting, has decided that question in the affirmative. Nothing is more important in connection with this question and with the new Act than that the decisions of this Court should be consistent, and, unless there were some very strong reasons compelling us to take a different view, we should prefer to follow the view taken in the case just cited. In that case for some reason the respondents were unrepresented, and it might be said that that fact, to some extent, detracts from the authority of the decision because the appeal was allowed in their absence. But in this case the respondents have had the advantage of Dr. Sen to represent them and we do not think that anything could be said on behalf of the other view which has not already been said. We agree with the decision, however, on this further ground. The ordinary meaning of "to pre-empt" is to purchase in preference to others, that is to say, even of the whole world, and pre-emption is the effect of the purchase. The vendee, if he is successful in the end over other competitors, does in fact pre-empt and is, therefore, properly spoken of as a person claiming pre-emption. It has been pointed out to us on behalf of the appellant that whereas "the right of pre-emption" is spoken of in other parts of the Act, in this particular sub-section the word used with reference to what is being claimed is simply pre-emption. We are further of opinion that this interpretation satisfies another test, namely, the true construction of s. 10 where it is quite obvious that the expression "equal" or "inferior" right of pre-emption is used with reference to the vendee. We can understand how it was that the Courts below came to the decision they did. The authority to which we have referred had not then been reported. It has been found that the plaintiff is related to one of the vendors and the husband of the other vendor within four degrees. The wajib ul-arz filed shows that the property in question was obtained by one of the vendors and the husband of the other vendor from their fathers respectively, who were own brothers. The appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed subject to the condition that the plaintiff is required to pay Rs. 1,320, on account of the sale consideration, found by the Courts below, within two months from this date. If such payment is made he will get his costs here and hitherto including fees in this Court on the higher scale from the defendant vendee. If he fails to pay, his suit shall stand dismissed with costs here and below, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act (V of 1908), O XXI, rr. 66, 72—Execution of decree—Sale—Decree-holder, whether bound to bid up to any fixed sum.

There is no legal necessity for a bidder at an auction-sale, whether he be the decree-holder or an outsider, to purchase the property at the full price at which it may have been valued in the sale proclamation. On the contrary, the value of the property is really only that which it will actually fetch, assuming that there is no fraud or malpractice with regard to the bidders and that the sale has been reasonably and properly made public. Application against an order of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 16th February 1925, against that of the Munsif, First Court, Gaya.

Mr. Siva Nandan Rai, for the Opposite Party

JUDGMENT.

Bucknill, J.—This is an application in civil revisional jurisdiction made to this Court under somewhat curious circumstances.

The applicant obtained a decree for rent against the opposite party here in the Court of the Munsif of the first Court of Gaya. Having obtained his decree he then applied for execution. It would seem that there were four properties which were put up for sale and the Court allowed the decree-holder (that is, the applicant here) to bid for the properties at the sale. There seems no doubt that the valuation which was put on the properties was, that the first was put at Rs. 46, the second at Rs. 1,470, the third at Rs. 3,075 and the fourth at Rs. 55. There is nothing on the record or before me to indicate in any way that the sale proclamations were not duly published and in fact on the 21st January last the sale was proceeded with. It would appear from the record that there were other bidders besides the decree-holder. Now the Munsif made a curious order on the 22nd of January, that is to say, the day after the sale. He placed in his order-sheet the following words:—

“Decree-holder did not bid for the valuation fixed by the Court. The case is dismissed, vide order passed on the sale proclamation.”

When we turned to the sale proclamation we saw that the note or order there reads:

“The decree-holder does not wish to bid up to the value fixed by the Court. The property on sale is 28'45 acres nakli, bhaoli and belagan lands. The decree is for Rs. 566-9. He wants to purchase the property for a nominal value. This cannot be allowed; as the decree-holder does not care to bid for more, so I dismiss the case.”

Now it is very difficult to see how on the language of these two orders it was really altogether open to the Munsif to adopt the course which he did. I do not know that there is any legal necessity for a bidder at an auction-sale, whether he be a decree-holder at whose instance the property being sold is being put up for sale or whether he be an outside person, to purchase the property at the full price at which it may have been valued in the sale proclamation. On the contrary it would seem that after all the value of the property which is thus put up to auction is really only that which it will actually fetch at that auction assuming, of course, that there is no fraud or malpractice with regard to the bidders and that the sale has been reasonably and properly made public. I have no doubt that there is a good deal of force in what is urged by the learned Vakil who appeared for the opposite party, namely, that owing to there being a number of sales conducted on the same day it was not very feasible for the Munsif to have recorded at great length his reasons for his order in the order-sheet. There is nothing except the suggestion contained in the order which is endorsed on the sale proclamation where the Munsif says that the decree-holder wants to purchase the property for a nominal value which leads one to suppose that there was anything improper or wrong in the way in which the sale had been made public or in the way in which the bids took place. On the other hand, there is certainly this to be said in favour of the Munsif's view, namely, that so far as the second property was concerned the amount which was in fact bid was a very trifling one compared with the value which was put upon the property in itself. In that instance it will be observed that whilst the value was Rs. 1,470 the price bid was Rs. 232. As regards the third property put up for sale the difference was very much worse; for, there, whilst the value was Rs. 3,075 the bid for it was Rs. 231. What I think the Munsif should have done was to have expressed his views as to the unsatisfactory nature of the sale in clearer terms and to have given his reasons which ought to be substantial ones for declining to proceed with the sale. I do not think that the reasons which he has given are good reasons for dismissing the execution case; for, so far as we can see, the decree-holder had done nothing really wrong in refusing to bid up to the total value which had been fixed on the property. I think the Munsif's order should have been, after having set out his reasons, to have ordered that there should be an issue of a fresh sale proclamation under circumstances of proper publicity which would ensure that at the next auction when the property should be put up for sale there should be suitable bidders. Under such conditions no doubt the properties would fetch whatever they were really worth and what the public was ready to pay for them. It may be said with regard to the 1st and 4th properties that the prices which were offered were substantially equivalent to the prices at which the two properties were valued and that is certainly so. At the same time these two properties are of very little account aggregating just Rs. 101 in value. It does not, therefore, seem desirable to split these two properties away from the other two or to regard the two properties entirely separately.

I should mention that after the decision by the Munsif it would seem that the decree-holder preferred some sort of appeal to the District Judge of Gaya. What exactly happened before the District Judge it is difficult to understand. From the order-sheet of the 5th February there seems to be a note by the serishatadar saying that the order complained of is not appealable (vide O. XLIII, r. 1 and s. 104, C. P. C.) On the same day the District Judge minutes: "put up in presence of Pleader." No date is mentioned as to when it should be put up. But on the 16th February we get an order of the District Judge "Pleader absent. File." Whether this is tantamount to the dismissal of the appeal or whether this is tantamount to the adjournment of it I do not know. However, to my mind the conclusion is after all the same, for although the matter has come up to this Court by way of complaint against what appears to have been the serishatadar's order of the 5th February, there is also a complaint quite clearly made that the order which the Munsif passed on the 22nd January was illegal. I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the order which was passed by the Munsif on the 22nd January is an unsatisfactory one.

It must be set aside and the Munsif ordered to re-instate; the execution case, to direct that a new sale proclamation shall be issued and that such precautions should be taken with regard to the publicity of the conditions under which the sale will be held so as to ensure that a reasonable and proper sale will be held upon the date fixed. There will be no order for costs in this application.

Z. K.

Order accordingly.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 175, 182—District Judge, order of—Appeal, third, to High Court whether lies.

Section 182 of the Agra Tenancy Act only allows a second appeal to the High Court and not a third appeal.

Therefore, no appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed by the District Judge on an appeal from an appellate order of a Collector.

Lachmi Narain v. Nirotam Das, A. W. N. (1906) 272; 29 A. 69; 3 A. L. J. 688, followed.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 22nd of August 1925.

Mr. S. N. Varma, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This purports to be an appeal from an order passed by the District Judge on an appeal from an appellate order of a Collector. Thus it is a third appeal to the High Court. Section 182 of the Agra Tenancy Act only allows a second appeal to the High Court and not a third appeal. Section 175 bars all appeals which are not provided for. It is, therefore, clear that the appeal does not lie.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relies on the case of Chhajmal Das v. Sirya (1) where a learned Judge of this Court entertained a third appeal. That case was contrary to the decision in Lachmi Narain v. Nirotam Das (2) reported in the same volume at page 251, and must be deemed to have by implication been overruled by the decision of the Bench in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Nirotam Das (3) reported in the same volume at page 272. As no appeal lies, this appeal is accordingly dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 150 OF 1924.

Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coyajee.

PATVARDHAN—PLAINTIFF—

VISHVANATH KHANDERAO RASTE—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Agreement between adoptive and natural fathers reserving right of making Will to adoptive father, legality of.

An agreement between the adoptive father and the natural father of the minor about to be adopted, made at the time of adoption, whereby full powers are reserved to the adoptive father to dispose of the family properties by Will, is not valid according to the Hindu Law and is not binding on the adopted son. [p. 4, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Suit No. 1021 of 1921.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Mr. W. B. Pradhan), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 6,580 with costs of the suit and future interest at six per cent from the estate of the deceased testator Rao Badadur Khanderao Vishwanth Raste in the hands of the defendant. The plaintiff claimed this amount as the arrears of annuity of Rs. 400 a year payable to her under the Will of her deceased father.

The claim has been dismissed by the lower Court on various grounds, and we think that this appeal can be disposed of in a very simple manner.

The defendant was adopted in 1896, and Ex. 82, the tharavpatra, was executed at the time as constituting an agreement between the natural father of the defendant, who was then a minor, and the adoptive father. One clause of the agreement was to this effect that the adoptive father had made a Will; that the adopted boy should act up to the terms of the Will, and in case the adoptive father made other Wills, the adopted son should behave according to the terms of the other Wills. That clause in effect gave the adoptive father an absolute right to dispose of all his property even after the adoption in any way he pleased. The Will under which the plaintiff claimed was made after the adoption. At that time the joint family consisted of adoptive father and the adopted son, and according to Hindu Law the father would have no power to make dispositions by Will of the joint family property.

We do not think an agreement of this nature is in consonance with the principles of Hindu Law with regard to agreements which can be made at the time of the adoption between the adoptive father and the natural father of the boy taken in adoption. The result of such an agreement would be that the adopted son would lose his right in his natural family, and would either acquire no rights at all, or would only acquire rights which were liable to be defeated, in his new family. The appellant being aware of the difficulty of the tharavpatra endeavoured to rely upon the payments made to her by the adoptive father before he died. Such payments, which, as a matter of fact, were not disputed by the adopted son and had never been disputed since the death of the adoptive father, could only be considered as gifts in presenti of certain cash, and could not possibly constitute a claim to anything in the nature of any annuity.

We agree with the Judge that Ex. 82 offended against the law of minors and the general principles of Hindu Law as regards adoption. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

There is a radical difference between s. 53 and s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Under s. 54 the Court is not concerned with the motive of the transferee but only with that of the debtor. It is he who is said to have given the preference and whether the transferee acted in good faith or not is immaterial. Where, however, the three months' limitation contemplated by s. 54 has expired, it is open to the transferee to prove that whatever the motive of the transferor may have been, he on his part acted in good faith. And where the consideration of the transfer is a past debt the transferee stands in a better position than otherwise. He has his own interests to serve and owes no duty to the other creditors to protect their interests. He is in the absence of any statutory limitation imposed by the Law of Bankruptcy, as much at liberty to secure the payment of his debt by superior diligence as by accepting a voluntary preference provided he goes no further than what is necessary to serve his own purpose [p. 8, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The Official Receiver has applied under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for annulment of a mortgage-deed executed by the two insolvent brothers Valabdas and Sunderdas on the 1st September 1921 in favour of their paternal aunt Lachmibai. The two brothers belong to Shikarpur. They carried on business at Karachi with the aid of gumshastas in the firm name of Naraindas-Sunderdas; Naraindas being their father who died in 1916. The deed recites that Jamnadas husband of the mortgagee had an account with the firm of Naraindas Sunderdas; on which a sum exceeding Rs. 14,000 was due to him and that he had advanced a further sum of Rs. 10,000 to the two brothers on 28th March 1921 and the two brothers had by a letter dated 17th May 1921 agreed with Jamnadas to mortgage to him a half undivided share in their residential house at Shikarpur in the sum of Rs. 24,000 made up of the two sums of Rs. 14,000 and 10,000 and that Jamnadas having died on 25th May 1921 the mortgagors had in consequence of the arrangement made with Jamnadas executed the mortgage-deed in favour of his widow and legal representative.

The two brothers were adjudicated as insolvents on 11th December 1922 in pursuance of an application presented to this Court on 31st October 1922 by one of the creditors of the insolvents. The incumbrance purported to have been created by the mortgage-deed, assuming it to have been in pursuance of the letter dated 17th May 1921, is within two years of the order of adjudication.

Section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is a re-enactment ipsissimis verbis of s. 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 and the exception contained in s. 36 of the old Act in favour of "an incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration" and a similar exception contained in s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act have been the subject of judicial interpretation. It has been consistently held by the different High Courts that where an incumbrance made within two years of adjudication is challenged in the Insolvency Court the onus lies on the incumbrancer to prove both good faith and valuable consideration, cf. Official Assignee of Madras v. Annapurnammal (1), Anantarama Aiyar v. Yussuffji Omer Sahib (2), Official Assignee of Madras v. Sambanda Mudaliar (3) and Nilmoni Chowdhuri v. Basanta Kumer Banerjee (4), Muhammad Habibullah v. Mushtaq Hussain (5).

It has not been seriously disputed that the same considerations apply to s. 53 and that it is for the opponent to prove both valuable consideration and good faith in order to entitle him to succeed.

The evidence of the consideration for the deed appears to be fairly strong and conclusive.

The insolvents carried on their business with the aid of gumashta and maintained regular books of account. They have produced their books from Sambat 1974 onwards. These books show large sums of money due to Jamnadas from time to time. The balances due to him when the account books of Sambats 1974, 1976, 1977 and 1978 were closed and fresh account books kept were Rs. 16,956-12-9, Rs. 14,725-0-6, Rs. 13,887-8-6 and Rs. 15,195-7-9 respectively. No amounts appear to have been withdrawn by Jamnadas in Sambat 1974 or the year 1921. There are corresponding entries in the account books kept by Jamnadas himself. Exhibits 16 to 18 are the entries in his books. Exhibit 19 is a Vatak or memo. of account prepared by the insolvents' gumashtas and handed over to Jamnadas in the usual course of business and prove a similar indebtedness of the insolvents to Jamnadas. No evidence has been called in rebuttal to prove that about Rs. 15,000 were not due to Jamnadas by the insolvents' Karachi firm.

It would also appear that Jamnadas had a banking account with the firm of Pirbidas Kanayalal of Shikarpur who had a branch firm in Bombay as well. Another Shikarpuri firm carrying on business at Bombay in the name of Tejbhandas Thariomal had a branch firm at Karachi of the same name. A sum of Rs. 10,000 was paid by the firm of Pirbidas Kanayalal at Bombay to the firm of Tejbhandas Thariomal of Bombay on behalf of and under instructions from Jamnadas. The Karachi branch firm of Tejbhandas Thariomal appear in their turn to have paid the Rs. 10,000 to the insolvents on 28th March 1921. Harbhagwandas the Manager of the Bombay Branch of Pirbidas Kanayalal has produced an entry from sahi book of his firm of the payment of Rs. 10,000 to the firm of Tejbhandas Thariomal on account of Jamnadas and duly signed by him. The Manager partner of Pirbidas Kanayalal Shikarpur has produced a debit entry Ex. 9-1 from his Shikarpur books showing that Rs. 10,000 were duly debited to Jamnadas' account in their books. Pahlajrai, the present Manager of the Karachi branch of Tejbhandas Thariomal, has put in an entry from his cash book of the payment of Rs. 10,000 to the insolvents' firm which is signed by their gumashta Gobindo, and has also produced the letter, Ex. 13, given by Jamnadas to them, authorising them to pay Rs. 10,000 to the insolvents. The insolvent Valabdas has explained that this sum of Rs. 10,000 was an advance to the insolvents and not to their firm. It was, therefore, credited in their gharoo (private) books as paid to them by Jamnadas and then transferred by them in their capital account in the shop books as an advance from them. Exhibits 22 to 25 are entries in the insolvents' gharoo books. Exhibits 26 and 27 are the corresponding entries in their firm books. The sum of Rs. 10,000 was indubitably paid by the insolvents to their firm as part of the capital and had been duly accounted for. It has not been shown that the insolvents had any other source where from to bring the Rs. 10,000. I, therefore, hold that the mortgage deed is for valuable consideration.

An attempt was made on behalf of the opponent to prove that at the time of the further advance of Rs. 10,000 the insolvents had agreed to execute a deed of mortgage in favour of Jamnadas. The only evidence on this point is the statement of the insolvent Valabdas. I have no hesitation in holding that his evidence on this point is false. There is no mention of the alleged oral agreement in the letter, Ex. 7-2, which is said to have been given by him to Jamnadas on 17th May 1921. The whole tenor of this letter shows that there could have been no oral agreement between the parties to create a mortgage prior to this letter. It recites that a sum of Rs. 15,000 or 16,000 were due by the insolvents' firm to Jamnadas and that the insolvents had taken from him a further sum of Rs. 10,000 which he had sent for from the firm of Pribdas Kanayalal at Bombay through Tejbandas Tharional and that about Rs. 25,000 or 26,000 plus interest were due by them and then it recites as follows:

"On account of the same we have undertaken to mortgage with you without possession the half portion of our house for Rs. 24,000 in words twenty four thousand. Whenever you choose deed will be executed in your favour and registered. We have agreed to execute for a period of five years. The interest will be paid at the rate of 8 annas per cent., per mensem. Therefore, this chit is given to you in writing."

If there was a prior oral agreement one would have found specific mention of it in this letter. There is no mention of this oral agreement in the mortgage deed either. The explanation of Valabdas as to the reason why he did not pass this writing in favour of Jamnadas at the time of the advance is preposterous. He states that at that time it was arranged that insolvents were to give in mortgage to Jamnadas such of their properties as he might select and it was only after Jamnadas made his selection that he passed the letter Ex. 7-2. Jamnadas was their uncle and knew all about their property and this delay of about one month and 24 days to make the selection is unaccountable.

It would appear from the evidence that the insolvents were in financial difficulties from the end of 1920. They traded in piece-goods and had bought both on the sterling and rupee basis large quantities of cloth for forward delivery at a time when the exchange had risen to over 2 shillings to the rupee. In December 1920 the exchange dropped down to 1 shilling 5 pence thereby seriously affecting the insolvents. The price of cloth purchased on the rupee basis had also gone down to a certain extent through other causes.

In December 1920 they sold some of their property to Pirbidas Kanayalal to keep them going and it appears that in March 1921 they either borrowed from Jamnadas the sum of Rs. 10,000 or appropriated to themselves this sum which had been paid to them by Tejbandas Tharional on account of Jamnadas, and used this amount for the same purpose. They evidently expected the exchange to go up and the prices to rise. They appear to have taken some deliveries of piece-goods upto April 1921 though such deliveries were not so brisk. The exchange instead of showing any improvement grew from bad to worse and in May 1921 Messrs. Kahn and Kahn through whom the insolvents had imported large quantities of piece-goods fixed the exchange in respect of all the insolvents goods at 1 shilling 3 $\frac{3}{4}$  pence. The fixing of the exchange by Messrs. Kahn and Kahn deprived them of all chances of reducing their estimated losses by a rise in exchange. The estimated loss due to Messrs. Kahn and Kahn at this date was about a lac of rupees. They had other losses to pay. Their attempts to execute certain transfers in favour of their relations and particularly their submitting to an award in favour of their mother followed by a consent decree which is the subject matter of another application appear to be all subsequent to this date. I am of the opinion that the promise if any made by the insolvents to Jamnadas to secure his claim was made in May 1921 and not at the time of alleged advance of Rs. 10,000.

I entertain some doubts if Ex. 7-2 is the letter handed over by Valabdas to Jamnadas at the time it purports to have been written. It refers to a half share of the house being given in mortgage. The insolvents owned at that time the whole house. The award transferring half of this house to their mother is dated July 1921. No explanation has been offered why the insolvents agreed in May 1921 to mortgage only a half share of the house to Jamnadas unless it be assumed that before this letter was given the insolvents had agreed to give the other half to their mother. The opponent has relied on a recital made in the alleged Will of Jamnadas Ex. 7-1 which is said to have been made on 21st May 1921 about the writing given to Jamnadas. This genuineness of this Will is being litigated in another Court and I do not propose to discuss the evidence as to its genuineness in the present proceedings. Clause 5 of this Will assuming it to be genuine does not give the purport of the letter passed in favour of Jamnadas and is inconclusive. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to hold definitely if Ex. 7-2 is the letter given to Jamnadas. Whether the insolvents promised on the 17th May 1921 with Jamnadas that he would secure to him the re-payment of the debt already advanced or if Ex. 7-2 has been substituted for another after the death of Jamnadas. It would equally appear that there was no obligation on the insolvents to execute the mortgage-deed in favour of their aunt on the 1st September 1921 and its execution without any pressure from the aunt amounts to fraudulent preference within the meaning of s. 54 of the Act. If the petition for insolvency had been filed within three months of this date, I would have had no hesitation in declaring it to be void. Different considerations however arise in the circumstances of the present case. There is a radical difference between ss. 53 and 54. In s. 54 the Court is not concerned with the motive of the transferee but only with that of the debtor. It is he who is said to have given the preference and whether the transferee acted in good faith or not is immaterial. Where, however, the three months' limitation contemplated by s. 54 has expired, it is open to the transferee to prove that whatever the motive of the transferor may have been, he on his part has acted in good faith. And where the consideration of the transfer is a past debt, the transferee stands in a better position than otherwise. He has his own interests to serve and owes no duty to the other creditors to protect their interests. He in the absence of any statutory limitations imposed by the Law of Bankruptcy, is as much at liberty to secure the re-payment of his debt by superior diligence as by accepting a voluntary preference provided he goes no further than what is necessary to serve his own purpose. See the observations of Mukerji, J., in Hakim Lal v. Moosahar Sahu (6). What then are the limitations imposed by the Law of Bankruptcy on the rights of the creditor to secure to himself the re-payment of a past debt? Where he has secured an advantage by his superior diligence, it would appear that he cannot be deprived of such advantage either under s. 53 or s. 54 of the Act. Where he has not secured it by such superior diligence but has accepted a preference voluntarily made by his debtor, he may not retain it, if an insolvency petition is filed for the adjudication of the debtor within three months of such preference. It would, therefore, follow that if the three months have elapsed, it is open to the creditor to say that in accepting such preference he has only secured to himself his own interests, and to rely on the presumption arising therefrom to prove his good faith. The onus then shifts on to the Official Receiver to prove other circumstances to warrant an inference that the act of the creditor in accepting a preference was an act of bad faith according to the Law of Bankruptcy. On behalf of the Official Receiver an attempt was made to show that there were other circumstances in the present case to rebut the inference arising in favour of the opponent as a creditor. In the first place it was said that the property mortgaged to him was substantially the whole of the property by the insolvents, and it was urged that as such it was an act of bankruptcy and void as not having been accepted in good faith. Reliance was placed on the recent case of the Official Assignee of Bengal v. Yokohama Specie Bank Ltd., (7). Though I afforded an opportunity to the Official Receiver after he had closed his case to prove that this property was substantially the whole of the insolvents' property, he has failed in his attempt. Admittedly the insolvents had another property at Karachi which was mortgaged by them with Messrs. Tattersall & Co. for Rs. 16,000 on the 22nd February 1922. They had a certain amount on stock-in-trade, and it was open to the Official Receiver to show what its value was. He has not done so. The insolvents have, on the other hand, put in certain statements to prove that they took delivery of a considerable quantity of piecegoods after the mortgage-deed. The opponent is a woman, and it cannot be assumed without further proof that she knew that her nephews were to give to her all that they possessed. If Ex. 7-2 is genuine, and the mortgage-deed was executed in pursuance of the promise made by the insolvents to Jamnadas, it would appear that at that time the insolvents possessed one more immovable property which they mortgage with Messrs Hiranand Naraindas for Rs. 15,000 and had also other considerable assets.

It is no doubt true that after May 1921, the insolvents at no time possessed sufficient assets to pay off their creditors in full, and though I have a shrewd suspicion that the object of the insolvents to attempt to carry on their business for over a year after they were to their knowledge hopelessly gone, was to benefit some of their relations and to make it difficult for the Official Receiver to take possession of all the property which would otherwise have been available for distribution, I find it difficult to hold that the incumbrance in favour of the opponent falls within the principle enunciated in the Calcutta case.

It was further alleged on behalf of the Official Receiver that as the opponent had no issue, the object of the mortgage-deed was to secure to the insolvents the advantage of the transfer, the opponent holding the property on their behalf as a benamidar. A considerable amount of argument was addressed at the Bar with regard to the validity of the alleged Will of Jamnadas, and especially the provision in respect of "dharam". It is however not necessary for me to go into the question either of the validity of the Will or of the bequest to "dharam" as it would appear that the possession of the opponent de hors the Will is even better. As a Hindu widow she is entitled to an absolute estate in the cash left by her husband. I am not, however, prepared to hold in the absence of any evidence on the point that the mortgage-deed was executed in favour of the opponent as a benamidar for the insolvents. Admittedly Jamnadas has left two brothers who are both alive, and it cannot now be said whether on her death, the property left by her would vest in the insolvents or in the brothers of Jamnadas. This will depend on who are alive at the time the inheritance opens up on her death. It is to be regretted that I should have arrived at this conclusion which deprives the creditors of their right to claim a rateable distribution out of the half share of the residential house mortgaged to the opponent. The conduct of the insolvents in continuing to carry on their business from certain mala fide motives requires a separate consideration and cannot be made a ground for setting aside the incumbrance in the absence of proof of bad faith on the part of the opponent. This application, therefore, fails and is dismissed. In the circumstances of this case; I make no order as to costs. If the Official Receiver wishes to appeal against this decision, I shall readily grant him the required permission.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs filed this suit seeking to recover the sum of Rs. 26,671-9-0 from the first defendant, and praying for a declaration that the pledge of the shares mentioned in Ex. E to the plaintiff was binding on the second defendant, and that the second defendant had no right to prohibit the transfer of the said shares to the name of the plaintiffs. They also prayed that they might be authorised to sell the shares mentioned in Ex. D and appropriate the net proceeds towards part satisfaction of the decree to be passed in their favour.

Plaintiffs alleged that the first defendant had borrowed certain amounts from them on security of certain shares. On April 12, 1921, it was found that Rs. 38,000 were due by the first defendant and the first defendant passed a writing to the plaintiffs whereby he promised to pay the plaintiffs the said sum of Rs. 38,000 on demand with interest, and gave details of the shares which were to remain as security. Thereafter the plaintiffs had received a certain amount of interest on certain shares and also sold certain shares under the instructions of the first defendant. On making up the account the amount of Rs. 26,671-9-0 was found due to the plaintiffs against which the plaintiffs had in their possession the shares mentioned in Ex. D to the plaintiff, out of which fourteen shares of the Emperor Edward Mills and one share of the Nagpur Mills stood in the name of the second defendant. The plaintiffs had in their possession the share certificates and transfer forms signed by the second defendant, who had given notice to the companies concerned not to transfer the shares to any other person. The first defendant had failed to pay the sum of Rs. 26,671-9-0, and hence the suit was filed claiming the relief abovementioned.

The first defendant filed a written statement asking for an account but at the hearing he admitted the claim.

The second defendant in his written statement alleged that in April 1920 the first defendant had induced him to join the first defendant in cotton business as financing partner, representing that he only owed Rs. 16,000 on the transaction of the Firm of Framroze Boga & Co. of which he had been a partner and which had been dissolved. Relying on the representation the second defendant agreed to become a partner with the first defendant upon the terms of two writings dated April 24, 1920, and as the second defendant had not sufficient cash it was arranged that he should hand over to the first defendant certain shares with blank transfers signed by him on which the first defendant should be at liberty to borrow money for the purposes of the said business. The aggregate value of the shares was Rs. 2,03,839 and amongst them were fourteen shares of the Emperor Edward Mills and one share of the Nagpur Mills. Thereafter the second defendant discovered that the first defendant's liabilities in the Firm of Framroze Boga & Co., far exceeded Rs. 16,000 and that he had employed the money raised on the security of the said shares of the second defendant in paying off those liabilities. When the second defendant threatened the first defendant with proceedings he executed a writing in favour of the second defendant, on May 20, 1920 and on January 28, 1921, executed a writing of his property known as the “Bharat Building” to secure re-payment of one lakh.

Accordingly the second defendant contended that the first defendant had obtained possession of the said shares by means of an offence and fraud, so that the pledge of the shares in favour of the plaintiffs by the first defendant was not valid and binding on the second defendant.

By way of counter-claim he prayed that the plaintiffs might be ordered to return the shares to him.

The following issues were raised at the trial:—

(1) Whether the suit shares were handed over to the first defendant under the circumstances mentioned in para. 3 of the written statement?

(2) Whether the first defendant obtained possession of the shares by means of an offence and fraud?

(3) Whether the pledge alleged by the plaintiffs was valid and binding on the second defendant?

(4) Whether second defendant was entitled to his counter-claim?

The Trial Judge believed the story of the second defendant that first defendant told him that the liabilities of the old firm amounted to Rs. 16,000 only, but was of the opinion that the second defendant was willing that the money to be raised on pledge of the shares was to be utilised in paying off that liability besides helping to start the new business.

On the second issue he decided that the first defendant obtained the shares by a material misrepresentation of fact, but that as the interests of a bona fide pledgee under s. 178 of the Indian Contract Act had intervened, the second defendant could not be placed in the status quo ante. Consequently he held that the pledge was valid and binding on the second defendant who was entitled to redeem the shares on payment of the amount for which they were pledged.

A fifth issue had been raised whether the second defendant had not ratified all the acts of the first defendant whereby he was estopped from disputing his liability to the plaintiffs.

The Judge held that the mere fact that he took further security from the first defendant did not amount to a ratification.

The second defendant has appealed.

His main ground of appeal was that the learned Judge should have held that the first defendant had obtained possession of the shares from the appellant by means of an offence or fraud.

He contends that first defendant falsely represented that his old debt was only Rs. 16,000 and that if he had known that the debt amounted to a very much greater sum he would not have given the first defendant the shares to pledge.

What the appellant's case against the first defendant was on January 25, 1921, is made clear from his Solicitors' letter of date, Ex. No. 2. After referring to the writing of April 21, 1920, whereby first defendant agreed to execute a mortgage in respect of two of his properties in favour of the second defendant whenever called upon to do so for securing the moneys to be advanced and the fact that second defendant handed over certain shares with blank transfer forms signed by him to enable the first defendant to raise moneys thereon for financing the new business which was to be started, he complains that the moneys so raised were utilised for liquidating the private debts of the first defendant in abuse of the confidence reposed on him by the second defendant without his knowledge and consent so that the new business was never started. On second defendant discovering this he wanted to prosecute the first defendant but he promised to redeem the shares very shortly. As the first defendant had neither redeemed the shares nor executed the mortgage though he had given a fresh writing on August 10, 1920 (Ex. 2), he was called upon to redeem the shares within twenty-four hours or pay the value thereof and in default proceedings either civil or criminal would be taken against him. There is no suggestion in that letter that the original intention was that first defendant should pay off old debts to the extent of Rs. 16,000 out of the amount borrowed on the shares or that second defendant would be entitled to give notice to the different companies not to register any transfers.

In his evidence the second defendant said :—

"Framroze Boga was dissolved in April 1920. First defendant proposed I should finance his business after the dissolution. I said I had shares and he could raise money on them to continue a business with me as partner. He said the existing liabilities were Rs. 16,000. My shares were not to go towards that. I would not have given those shares to the first defendant if I had known the liabilities were Rs. 80,000. About August 1920 I came to know he had raised monies on my shares and used them for his own purposes. Then I got the writing of August 10, 1920, executed by first defendant. I also got the first defendant to execute a promissory note for Rs. 1,30,000 on April 30, 1920. On January 28, 1921, I took a second mortgage of the first defendant's Bombay building. I threatened first defendant with legal proceedings (that was by the letter of January 25, 1921), and he gave me the second writing."

On August 21, 1920, the second defendant had given the first defendant a writing Ex. F, authorising him to borrow monies on the shares given to him either by making badlus or by overdrawing monies by depositing the said shares with some Bank or with big Shroffs.

Cross-examined about that document he said :—

"I did not understand when I signed it that I was giving first defendant unreserved liberty to pledge. The letter is plain enough. I say it did not authorise first defendant to pledge the shares for any purpose he wanted. First defendant said he had to discharge liability of Rs. 16,000 and he wanted money for that also. The shares of value of those I deposited were to finance this business also. First defendant got these shares from me by fraud viz., obtaining them for partnership and thus misapplying them."

It is difficult owing to these contradictory statements to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion whether first defendant was authorised or not to spend out of the monies borrowed on the shares, Rs. 16,000 or any other sum towards discharging his own liabilities. It is true that there is some foundation for the allegation to this effect of the second defendant in the writing Ex. 6 given by the first defendant to the second defendant on April 24, 1920, but against that there is the statement of the second defendant in his evidence that his shares were not to be used by the first defendant for raising money to pay off his own liabilities. The first defendant said he did not tell the second defendant his private liabilities were Rs. 16,000. Second defendant did not ask what were the liabilities of the firm the first defendant was continuing. The shares were not given for the new business. They were given so that he could raise margin money. Second defendant had given him shares before by way of margin money. On his own confession the first defendant was guilty of misappropriation of the monies borrowed on the shares. The second defendant's case cannot stand higher than this : "I know the first defendant wished to wind up his old business. He told me the liabilities of that business were Rs. 16,000 and I was willing that monies should be raised to pay off those liabilities and provide the capital for our partnership business. If I had known that first defendant's liabilities were Rs. 80,000 I would not have consented to start a new business with him, and I would not have handed over the shares."

But in my opinion the case set up in Ex. 2 is the right one and that the second defendant gave the shares to the first defendant to raise money thereon for the new business.

The question, therefore, is, as propounded by the Advocate-General whether the persons who advanced money to the first defendant on the shares standing in the name of the second defendant were bound to make inquiries as to the first defendant's title to deal with the shares, or whether the second defendant by putting into the hands of the first defendant his shares with blank transfers signed by him was estopped from disputing the title of a holder of the shares and transferees who received them in good faith from the first defendant and advanced money to the first defendant on security of the shares.

It is impossible to lay down any general rule. The answer to the question must depend on the facts of the case. The decision in France v. Clark (1) is not of much assistance. France, the registered holder of certain shares, deposited the certificates with Clark as security for £. 150 and gave him a blank transfer signed by himself. Clark deposited the shares and the transfer with a third party as security for £. 250. The third party filled in the transfer in his own name and sent it in for registration. It was held he had no title against France except to the extent of what was due from France to Clark. A person who without inquiry takes from another an instrument signed in blank by a third party and fills up the blanks cannot, even in the case of a negotiable instrument, claim the benefit of being a purchaser for value without notice so as to acquire a greater right than the person from whom he himself received the instrument. Clark was regarded in the light of an equitable mortgagee of the shares. The documents themselves showed that Clark was not the owner and there was no evidence of a mercantile usage that the holders of such documents were treated as having the right to transfer. Blank transfers with share certificates were not negotiable instruments. In this case the first defendant was the agent of the second defendant to raise money on the shares. I cannot agree with the learned Judge when he says the first defendant was a principal. The letter of

(1) (1884) 26 Ch. D. 257; 53 L. J. Ch. 585; 50 L. T. 1; 32 W. R. 466.

April 24, 1920, is clearly an authority to the first defendant to raise money on the shares on behalf of the second defendant, the moneys to be utilised according to the terms of Ex 2 in the business to be started by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as partners. The first defendant being authorised to pledge the shares it cannot be said that he had obtained possession of them by means of an offence or fraud. At the most it may be said that he induced the second defendant to negotiate with him with regard to starting a new business by misrepresenting the amount of his liabilities in his old business. Such a misrepresentation would enable the second defendant to avoid the agreement to start the new business and to recover the shares entrusted to the first defendant for the purpose of raising money for that business. The question whether the pledge of the shares before the rescission of the contract would be invalid is considered by Messrs. Pollock and Mulla in their notes to s. 178 of the Indian Contract Act, at page 639. The authors think that the use of the term "fraud" in juxtaposition to offence would seem to indicate that it is confined to the substantive wrong of deceit. If possession of goods obtained under a contract voidable on the ground of fraud is possession obtained by fraud a pledge by the possessor could be invalid even before the rescission of the contract although an out and out sale would be valid under s. 108. I agree with their conclusion that it was not the intention of the Legislature to depart from the Common Law, and that the obtaining of goods or documents by fraud of which the proviso to s. 178 speaks must mean obtaining possession by such a trick or fraud as excludes real consent and, therefore, cannot be the foundation of any contract. The fraud, if any, committed by the first defendant was not committed in obtaining possession of the shares but in his disposition of the moneys obtained by pledging them.

Even assuming that the pledgee on being asked to lend money on the shares with blank transfers standing in the name of the second defendant was put on inquiry with regard to the title of the first defendant, he would have been shown the letter of authority signed by the second defendant.

I think, therefore, the decision of the learned Judge was right and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Coyajee, J.—I agree in holding that the pledge of the share certificates created by the first defendant in favour of the plaintiffs is valid: s. 178, Indian Contract Act. The term "goods" used in that section is very wide (s. 76 of the said Act), sufficiently wide to include share certificates [Fazal v. Mangaldas (2).] In my opinion the evidence in this case which is fully discussed in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, makes it clear that the first defendant had not obtained those certificates from the second defendant by means of "fraud" within the meaning of that expression as used in the proviso to s. 178. The proviso, it would seem, does not exclude from the operation of the section the case of goods obtained under a contract voidable on the ground of fraud. For it would be anomalous that although a person who has obtained possession of goods under a contract voidable at the option of the other party to it can transfer full ownership of these goods before the contract is rescinded (Exception 3 to s. 108), he cannot make a valid pledge at all of the same goods.

In this case the second defendant handed over the share certificates and transfer forms duly signed to the first defendant on April 24, 1920. On that day two documents (Ex. E and Ex. No. 6) were exchanged between them. The one passed by the second defendant gave the first defendant authority to raise moneys on the pledge of those certificates in language both plain and wide. It says:—"I authorise him and give my consent to borrow monies either by making badlas or by overdrawing monies by depositing the said shares with some Bank or big shroffs." The material statements in the other document are:—"With regard to the cotton brokerage business which I have been carrying on... in the name of Messrs. Framroze Boga and Company and with regard to the current business of the said brokerage which I have taken upon myself in the said firm you have this day (given) to me certain shares... to enable me to borrow monies thereon... For the monetary assistance which you have given to me I bind myself to make an agreement with you as soon as the accounts of my old customers are settled." The agreement here referred to was a contemplated partnership agreement between the parties. It seems to me that the effect of the evidence of the second defendant read with these documents and with his attorney's letter of January 25, 1921, (Ex. No. 2), is this: Not that the pledge of the share certificates was unauthorised, but that the monies so borrowed were wrongly applied by the first defendant to unauthorised uses. But with this the plaintiffs have no concern. They have acted in good faith in making the loan on the pledge of the share certificates.

In my opinion the decree of the learned Judge is right and this appeal must fail.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

EXECUTION FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 170 OF 1925.

December 3, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji.

PEAREY LAL—PURCHASER—APPELLANT

THE ALLAHABAD BANK LTD., MEERUT —DECREE HOLDER AND Babu BAIJNATH PRASAD AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 58—Money-decree—Attachment of property—Objection by transferee from judgment-debtor—Decision, finality of—Appeal, whether lies—Property attached being decree in favour of judgment-debtor, effect of—Execution of decree—Insolvent judgment-debtor—Question of title between scheduled creditors decision of—Revision—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 50.

Where an objection is raised by a transferee from the judgment-debtor to attachment of the property in execution of a money-decree, and the question arises whether the transfer in favour of the objector is good or not, the question relates to the title to the property sought to be attached, and comes within the purview of O. XXI, r. 58, C. P. C., and the decision is final, subject to the result of any suit that might be instituted, and is not open to appeal. The fact that the property attached is a decree makes no difference. [p. 15, col. 1.]

There is nothing in s. 50 of the Provincial Insolvency Act which says that any question of title raised between two scheduled creditors will be decided by the Insolvency Court, and a decision of such question by the Execution Court is not open to revision. [p. 15, col. 2.]

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 12th of December 1924.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shambhu Nath Seth for Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an execution first appeal and has arisen under the following circumstances. A certain suit

No. 428 of 1922 was instituted by two persons Baij Nath and Murli Dhar against one Ganeshi Lal as defendant No. 1 and the Allahabad Bank Ltd., as the defendant No. 2. The suit of Baij Nath and Murli Dhar was decreed for a sum of about Rs. 8,000 against Ganeshi Lal but it was dismissed as against the Bank. The Bank was awarded costs to the amount of Rs. 513-12. The decree was passed on the 27th of March 1923. On the 12th of May 1924 the Allahabad Bank applied for the attachment of the decree obtained by Baij Nath and Murli Dhar against Ganeshi Lal in order to realise the money due to the Bank. Previous to this application for attachment, by a sale-deed dated the 6th of February 1924 Baij Nath and Murli Dhar had sold the decree held by them against Ganeshi Lal to the appellant, Pearey Lal. Ganeshi Lal was declared an insolvent. Pearey Lal as a transferee of the decree obtained by Baij Nath and Murli Dhar against Ganeshi Lal got himself entered in the schedule of creditors. The Allahabad Bank had a debt payable by Ganeshi Lal which arose out of a different transaction and in that capacity the Bank was also entered in the schedule of creditors of Ganeshi Lal.

The Allahabad Bank in their application mentioned the fact that Baij Nath and Murli Dhar had sold their decree to Pearey Lal and that Pearey Lal had obtained an entry into the schedule of creditors of Ganeshi Lal. The Bank asserted that the transfer to Pearey Lal by Baij Nath and Murli Dhar was a fictitious one and prayed that the decree might be attached and the Insolvency Court might be requested to send the money that may be due on account of the decree of Baij Nath and Murli Dhar in Court for payment to the Bank.

Pearey Lal raised two objections. First, he said the question of title as between the Bank and Pearey Lal should be settled by the Insolvency Court and secondly he said that he was a bona fide transferee for value and the decree was not attachable as the property of Baij Nath and Murli Dhar. The Court below has found both the points against Pearey Lal and hence the appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Seth that the appeal is incompetent inasmuch as the objection of Pearey Lal was one that fell within the purview of O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C. and the order of the Court below was final subject to the result of any suit that Pearey Lal might bring to prove his title.

Dr. Katju maintained that the appeal was maintainable under s. 47 of the C. P. C. and in case the Court should hold otherwise he requested that his appeal might be treated as a petition in revision.

On the question as to whether an appeal lies or not I am clear that no appeal lies. The position is this. A (the Bank) has obtained a decree against B. (Baij Nath and Murli Dhar) for money. In execution of that decree A attaches a certain property (in this case a decree) belonging to B. Before the attachment C (Pearey Lal) has obtained a sale-deed in his favour in respect of the property attached. The question has arisen as to whether C's title is good or whether the transfer in C's favour is fictitious. The question has been raised by a person who is not a party to the decree. The question to be litigated is as to title to the property sought to be attached. In my opinion the case comes clearly within the purview of O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C., and the decision is final subject to the result of any suit that may be instituted. Dr. Katju's contention is that the property to be attached being a decree Pearey Lal, the moment he obtained an assignment of it, in his favour, became a legal representative of the judgment-debtor and that, therefore, the case fell within the purview of s. 47 of the C. P. C. He conceded that if the property attached had been anything but a decree O. LVIII, r. 21 would have applied. I do not see how the case can come within the purview of s. 47 merely because the property to be attached happens to be a decree. Further, the question to be decided is not one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. It is whether the sale-deed on foot of which Pearey Lal claims to be a representative is a fictitious one or not. This question has nothing to do with the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree which was passed in favour of the Allahabad Bank and against Baij Nath and Murli Dhar.

I hold that no appeal lies.

Considering the appeal as a petition in revision, I have to see whether the Court below had any jurisdiction or not to decide the question, that is to say, whether the Court below or the Insolvency Court should have decided the question whether Allahabad Bank was entitled to attach the decree passed in favour of Baij Nath and Murli Dhar, in spite of the supposed transfer of it by the debtors in favour of Pearey Lal. Dr. Katju has pointed out s. 50 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as authorising the Insolvency Court to dispose of the question. That section simply says that in certain cases at the instance of a receiver or a creditor the Insolvency Court may order the expungement of an alleged creditor's name from the schedule of the reduction of the amount of the debt due to him. But there is nothing in the section which says that any question of title raised between two scheduled creditors will be decided by the Insolvency Court. I hold that the Court below had the jurisdiction.

Such being my finding it is clear that I need not go into the merits of the appeal.

I have however heard Dr. Katju on the merits also and find myself in agreement with the finding of the Court below.

The Bank's case as made out in their petition of objection dated the 29th of June 1925 (page 7 of the Paper Book) was to the effect that the Bank's debtors had no means whatsoever, except the decree against Ganeshi Lal, by which to pay the debt due to the Bank, vide para 3. The witness that was examined on behalf of Pearey Lal stated that he had not seen Baij Nath at Meerut since the sale deed was executed in favour of Pearey Lal and he was unable to say whether Baij Nath had left Meerut for good or not. Baij Nath executed the sale-deed for himself and as an attorney for Murli Dhar. Evidently, therefore, Murli Dhar was not at Meerut. This circumstance must have weighed greatly with the Court below as it weighs with me. The debtors of the Bank have left the town having sold their valuable decree for Rs. 8,000 for the small sum of Rs. 300. Dr. Katju told me that the receiver had declared a dividend of only Rs. 400 and odd in favour of Pearey Lal. His argument is that this was the only sum recoverable under the decree of Baij Nath and Murli Dhar from the Insolvency Court. But I am not aware whether there are or not other assets of Ganeshi Lal to be realised. Some explanation ought to have been offered in the Court below as to why the valuable decree for Rs. 8,000 was sold almost for a song. I agree with the Court below that the transfer in favour of Pearey Lal was a fictitious one.

The appeal fails on each and every point and it is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Defendants' predecessor agreed with the plaintiffs' predecessors that the latter could, within a period of ten years from the date of the agreement, tender a certain sum of money and demand conveyance of certain property from the former. In a suit for specific performance of the agreement by the plaintiffs against the defendants :

Held, (1) that if the agreement was to be treated as a contract it was unenforceable as being without consideration ;

(2) that if the agreement amounted to a mere offer, not having been accepted by the persons to whom it was made in their lifetime, it could not be accepted by their successors-in-interest after their death, and was not, therefore, capable of being sued upon.

Second appeal from a decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 205 of 1921, confirming that of a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bassein, in Civil Suit No. 143 of 1920.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—In this suit the plaintiffs sued for specific performance of the contract for sale of the suit land by the 1st defendant's brother Juzia which the plaintiffs said was entered into on December 5, 1910, by Juzia Rumav on the one hand and on the other by Farsha Degu Kurel, father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, and Simav Ina, husband of plaintiff No. 3 and brother of plaintiff No. 4, both dead at the time of the suit. The terms of the document on which the plaintiffs relied are set out at page 2 of the print. The effect of that document was that Farsha and Simav could within a period of ten years from the date of the document tender Rs. 1,500 and demand a conveyance from Juzia. There are two ways in which the document can be read ; (1) as an offer by Juzia which was to remain open for ten years acceptable by Farsha and Simav at their option ; or (2) as an agreement by Juzia that he would hold the property for ten years at the disposal of Farsha and Simav and to sell to no one else. The latter would be a contract and the first would be an offer. If the document amounts to a contract then there was no consideration proceeding from Farsha and Simav for the agreement by Juzia to sell the property to no one else during the ten years. Therefore, the contract would be unenforceable as being without consideration. But if the document amounts to a mere offer to Farsha and Simav that a conveyance would be given on their tendering Rs. 1,500 within ten years, it would remain an offer and would not become a contract until the offer was accepted. Then the question would arise whether the offer made to Farsha and Simav could be accepted by their legal representatives. No authority has been shown to us for such a proposition, and it seems to me uncontestable that if A makes an offer to B and nothing further is done before B dies, B's representatives could not claim to have a right to accept the offer made by A to B. On this ground it seems to me that the representatives of Farsha and Simav, who are the present plaintiffs, are either suing on a contract without consideration or are claiming a right to sue for a declaration that they are entitled to accept an offer made to their ancestors, which is not a right recognised in law. It seems to me, therefore, that the suit should have been dismissed and accordingly we make that order with costs throughout.

Crump, J.—I concur.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff sued for redemption of a 2-annas share in the village of Jindaspur on payment of the sum of Rs. 500 principal money secured by a mortgage-deed dated the 26th of August 1862. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for redemption but required him to pay in addition to the Rs. 500, principal sum, the sum of Rs. 419-9-0 which had been expended by the mortgagee in getting possession from a prior mortgagee. It refused to credit the mortgagee with interest after the date mentioned in the mortgage-deed as that up to which interest would be payable by the mortgagor. On appeal the Subordinate Judge upheld the first finding of the original Court but allowed interest for a period subsequent to that just mentioned. The plaintiff appeals against the decision of the lower Appellate Court on both grounds.

Four persons originally held 16-annas in village Jindaspur. On the 25th of June 1859, two of them Mohan Lal and Beni Prasad mortgaged the whole 16 annas to Raja Tej Kishen for Rs. 450. It is not disputed that they were in a position to mortgage the whole 16 annas. Now one of the four persons Mohan Lal was recorded as owner of 10-annas share out of the 16-annas share from before this mortgage. His 10 annas share was confiscated in 1860 by Government for rebellion and granted to Ram Ghulam. There is evidence on this record, namely Ex. V to show that the confiscation had the effect of Government acquiring not only the equity of redemption but absolute rights in the 10-annas share. It is a qanungo's report. Accordingly Ram Ghulam acquired an unincumbered share in 10 annas share. On the 26th of August 1862 another of the four persons Beni who was recorded as owner of a 2 annas share, his 2 annas share to Ram Ghulam for Rs. 500. It is this mortgage of which redemption is being asked in the present case. The mortgage-deed records that the mortgagor was leaving Rs. 56-4 with the mortgagee for redemption of the 2-annas share from Raja Tej Kishan. In pursuance of this deed Ram Ghulam attempted to redeem the property from Raja Tej Kishan's transferee by offering the Rs. 56-4 and brought a redemption suit to that effect. It was held by the Assistant Collector of Unao under a judgment dated the 16th of May 1878 that he could only redeem 2 annas share by paying up the total sum for which the whole 16-annas share had been mortgaged to Raja Tej Kishen. In that suit he had made one of the present plaintiffs, namely, Gauri Shankar, who is the son of Beni, the mortgagor, a co-plaintiff. The lower Courts held that under the mortgage-deed in suit the mortgagor in effect gave a warranty to the mortgagee that he would get possession of the 2-annas payment of Rs. 56-4 and that as the mortgagee had to pay Rs. 450 the mortgagee is entitled to get the difference between the two sums in addition to the mortgage-money. The first question that arises in this appeal is whether they were correct in so holding.

Whatever was the contention for the appellant-mortgagor in the lower Court, we find that in the Court of first appeal his contention was that Ram Ghulam having obtained from Government 10 annas out of the 16-annas originally mortgaged was bound to contribute to that extent himself in redemption of a prior mortgage for Rs. 450. We are, however, satisfied that this objection fails for the following reason: Ram Ghulam obtained the property from Government free of incumbrance. The burden, therefore, of the whole of the mortgage was thrown on the 6-annas of which the equity of redemption remained with the mortgagors. Accordingly the contention in the lower Appellate Court failed. In this Court it has been urged that both Beni and Ram Ghulam well understood the facts of the case and that Rs. 56 4 would not suffice to redeem the original mortgage. It is said that the agreement was that Ram Ghulam should redeem the whole mortgage but only held Beni liable for two-sixteenth of it. With this argument we do not agree. We construe the mortgage-deed to mean, as urged by the defendants, that the mortgagor covenanted that the mortgagee should get possession of the 2-annas on payment of Rs. 56-4. The mortgagee has failed to get possession of that owing to a decision of a Court with the correctness of which we are not concerned. The curious thing about this decision of 16th May 1878 is that the Court only decreed possession of 2 annas on payment of Rs. 450 and not possession of the 6-annas share remaining to the mortgage. This decision appears to us to be an accident which could not be foreseen by the parties to the mortgage and both on the interpretation which would give to the mortgagee and on the principle underlying s. 65 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, we consider that the mortgagor is bound to bear the whole expenses incurred in obtaining the promised possession of the property.

The appellant also appeals against the lower Court's decision that he must pay interest after the date up to which the deed recites that interest shall be paid and urged that the decree of the Court of first instance on this point should be restored. The lower Court has cited certain rulings which have again been relied on by the respondents' learned Counsel in this case. The language of the mortgage deed is quite clear, namely, that interest shall be payable at a certain rate so long as possession is not obtained by the mortgagee up to 8 years and that after 8 years the only remedy of the mortgagee was to sue for foreclosure. The rulings quoted to us are all to be distinguished from the present case. They were based on deeds which had no express provision that interest should cease at a certain date but only provided that interest was payable until the date on which sale or foreclosure could be claimed. In the face of the clear language of the deed we agree with the Court of first instance that no interest could be decreed after the 8 years.

Accordingly we allow this appeal in part and dismiss it in part and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The parties will get their costs in this Court according to their success and failure and the defendant will get whole costs in the lower Appellate Court.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1884), s. 261—Suit against Municipal Council for declaration of title to land—Notice, whether necessary—Madras Survey and Boundaries Act (IV of 1897), s. 13, applicability of—Dispute as to boundaries, absence of—Adverse possession—Sweeping land, effect of.

Defendant Municipality sent a notice to the plaintiff informing him that he had no right to a certain piece of land and that he should establish his right by suit. The plaintiff thereupon instituted a suit against the Municipality for a declaration of his title to the land:

Held, that the suit was not one on account of any act done by the Municipality within the meaning of s. 261 of the Madras District Municipalities Act and that no notice was, therefore, necessary to be served on the defendant under that section [p. 19, col. 1.]

In order to apply the provisions of s. 13 of the Madras Survey and Boundaries Act, it is necessary to show that there was a dispute before the boundary was settled, or an appeal was preferred from the settlement of the boundary. The meaning of the section is that when there has been a dispute between parties as to a certain boundary line and that dispute has been settled by a competent officer, that decision is binding and can only be set aside by taking appropriate steps for that purpose within a certain time, [p. 1, cols. 1 & 2]

The act of sweeping a piece of land occasionally does not amount to adverse possession against the true owner. [p. 19, col. 2]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the District Judge, South Malabar, in A. S. No. 129 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cochin, in O. S. No. 14 of 1918.

Mr. A. V. K. Krishna Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. A. Ananta Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree declaring plaintiff's right to certain land in Cochin Municipality. The District Judge has found that the land is used as a right of way, that it belongs to the plaintiff and that recently the Municipality interfered with his possession and that consequently he is entitled to the declaration sued for.

The main objection taken is that no notice of this suit was given to the Municipality under s. 261 of the District Municipalities Act of 1884 but inasmuch as this is a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property, it is difficult to see how it can be treated as a suit "on account of any act done by the Municipal Council." No doubt in the plaint, the cause of action is stated to be the putting and beating of gravel on the plaint site but if one looks into the facts it appears that the plaint has not been accurately drafted and the real cause of action is the notice sent by the defendant informing the plaintiff that he had no right to the property and that he should establish his right by a suit. In that view I do not think this is a case which can come under s. 261 of the District Municipalities Act. In this connection I may refer to President of the Taluk Board, Sivaganga v. Narayanan (1) and also Syed Amcer Sahib v. Venkatarama (2) and Govinda Pillai v. Taluk Board, Kombakonam (3).

The next objection is that the suit is barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of s. 13 of the Survey and Boundaries Act. In order to apply the provisions of this section, it is necessary to show that there was a dispute before the boundary was settled or an appeal preferred from the settlement of the boundary. In fact it means that when there has been a dispute between the parties as to a certain boundary line and that dispute has been settled by a competent officer, that decision is binding and can only be set aside, by taking appropriate steps within a certain time. In the present case there does not appear to have been any dispute at all. In fact the District Judge finds that notice of the settlement of the boundary is not proved to have been served upon the plaintiff. This objection must also fail.

The District Judge has found that the property belongs to the plaintiff and that the only act of adverse possession by the Municipal Council has been the act of sweeping the land occasionally and that cannot be said to be adverse possession as against the real owner. There is no other reason for not accepting his finding in accordance with which his decree is right.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for possession of a certain property specified in the plaint. The parties are the descendants of one Kashi Ram. Kashi Ram had four sons, namely, Ratan Din Manodut, Siridat and Acharji. Ranchur Bakhsh plaintiff is one of the two sons of Sri Dat Deokali defendant No. 1 is the son of Mandat and Suraj Bakhsh defendant No. 2 the son of Acharji. Chhatarpal defendant No. 3 is the brother of the plaintiff. The plaintiffs' case was that Ratan Din was owner of the plots in suit, that he died childless about 30 years ago and was succeeded by his widow Musammat Biranji, that she also died in 1912 leaving the parties as her nearest reversioners and that the plaintiff was entitled to a one-fourth share, but was in possession of a one-sixth share only. He, therefore, claimed a one-twelfth share over and above the share already possessed by him. The suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on various grounds. The claim was decreed by the first Court and the defendants' appeal was dismissed by the Court of first appeal. It was held that Ratan Din was the owner of the plots in suit but after his death Musammat Biranji had been in possession of the land in suit till 1912. It was pleaded by the contesting defendants in respect of two plots Nos. 22 and 622 that the plaintiff had taken a mortgage of the plots from them and was, therefore, estopped from denying their title so far as these plots were concerned. The lower Courts rejected the defence holding that there was no estoppel in the circumstances of the case. The contesting defendants have now appealed to this Court. Their learned Counsel has confined his arguments to the question of estoppel only. He contends that the plaintiff cannot question the right of the appellants in respect of plots Nos. 22 and 622 as he had taken a mortgage of those plots from the appellants. I am not prepared to accept the contention. It was a simple mortgage and was executed by Deokali appellant No. 1 on 30th May 1904. Musammat Biranji died in April 1912. It is clear that the mortgage was void as Deokali as the reversioner of Musammat Biranji had no rights to mortgage the plots in dispute in her lifetime.

As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1) "a transfer made by a next reversioner during the lifetime of the widow is inoperative under the Hindu Law, as at its date he has no interest capable of transfer but merely an expectancy."

It is true that as between a mortgagor and his mortgagee neither can deny the title of the other for the purposes of the mortgage but the present suit is not a suit based on or connected with the mortgage. In my opinion the plaintiff is not estopped from questioning the validity of the mortgage in the present suit. No other point was argued in this appeal.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed. I dismiss this appeal and order the contesting appellants to pay the costs of the contesting respondents.

The decree of the lower Court is confirmed in all respects.

A plaintiff who seeks possession summarily under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act must show that at the date of the suit he is entitled to such relief. A landlord, therefore, cannot bring a suit in ejectment under this section where his tenant has been dispossessed by a third party. [p. 21, col 2.]

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere by way of revision with a decree under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. Where, however, the remedy under the section is clear, the parties will not necessarily be driven to another suit. [p. 21, col 1.]

Petition, under s. 112 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Poonamalle, in O. S. No. 475 of 1922.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs in two connected suits Nos. 475 and 476 of 1922 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Poonamalle brought under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act were unsuited on the ground that on the date of the suits, the plaintiff lands although trespassed upon by defendants were leased to others and, therefore, only their lessees and not plaintiffs themselves were entitled to sue. This petition is brought in order to revise that decision.

Plaintiffs have their remedy by way of suit and in such circumstances this Court will not ordinarily interfere by way of revision, Devata Sri Ramamurthi v. Venkata Sitaramachandra (1). But if the remedy is clear, the parties will not necessarily be driven to another suit, [Sri Krishna Doss v. Chandook Chand (2).] Therefore, the question for determination in this case resolves itself into whether there is clear authority supporting or contravening the decision of the District Munsif.

There has been sharp divergence of judicial opinion upon the point as was clearly revealed when it came before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court. Blennerhassett, J., could see no reason why a landlord who has put a tenant in possession should not himself sue to eject a trespasser. Edge, C. J., affirmed as prevailing all the world over that when a man creates a tenancy under him which entitles the tenant to the exclusive use of the property the man creating the tenancy cannot have any right to actual possession so long as the tenant is entitled to possession. It was accordingly held with the concurrence of four other Judges that in these circumstances plaintiffs might be entitled to a declaratory decree that the trespasser could not interfere with his right to receive rent; and a decree to be put into possession of the rents; but so long as he did not himself possess the right to enjoy physical possession, he could not eject the trespasser [Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (3).]

Two years later the question came before a Bench of this Court, which assumed it to be an elementary rule that a plaintiff who seeks possession must show that at the date of the suit he was entitled to such relief [Ramanadan Chetti v. Pulikutti Servai (4).]

So far the law on the matter was clear and the next Madras ruling [Jagannatha Charry v. Rama Rayer (5)] hardly affected the previous decisions, for it was held that the landlord must be entitled to possession at the time of suit, and he was so entitled in that case because the lease had terminated immediately after the dispossession of the tenant by a third person and the tenant was no longer interested in the matter. But unfortunately the head-note to this ruling is drafted as if affirming that a landlord can always bring a suit for possession when his tenant has been dispossessed by a third party. For this unqualified statement there might seem at first to be better authority in Rangaswamy Iyengar v. Krishna Govindan (6) when Sankaran Nair, J., sitting alone does appear to allow a landlord to sue for physical possession of property of which his tenant had been dispossessed. But though that is the effect of the judgment, the reasoning proceeds on the assumption that it is only a question of receiving rent, a matter about which as Sir John Edge showed in Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (3) there is no difficulty. An earlier Madras case is cited [Innusi Pillai v. Sivagnana Desikar (7)] which also is entirely confined to the question of rent; and before concluding Sankaran Nair, J., makes it clear that he is not differing from Ramanadhan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4). It is not an easy judgment to understand, but it is no authority for holding that the landlord can sue in these cases.

In Krishna Nambudri v. Secretary of State (8), Wallis, J., and Abdul Rahim, J., re-affirmed [Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4)] and its statement of the elementary rule.

Thus it may be said that at this date there was no real difference of opinion and the ruling of the Allahabad High Court Full Bench prevailed.

In Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Odayar (9) a plaintiff who had long been out of possession seems to have suggested that if his tenant had been in possession (which was not the fact) there would be no bar of limitation. His plea was rejected on the facts but his hypothesis was fully discussed by Sundara Iyer, J., who has assembled the various rulings on the point.

His Lordship says that it is held that the landlord where his tenant is ousted by a trespasser may sue under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act in Rangaswami Iyengar v. Rama Rayer (6) and Innasi Pillai v. Sivagnana Desikar (7). But as shown above none of these cases is real authority for that broad proposition. He says that Ramanathan Chetty v. State (8) and Krishnan Nambudri v. Secretary of State (8) are against him, but on the whole is inclined to hold that the landlord has a cause of action (page 155*). This opinion it may be noted is obiter and is not very strongly expressed.

In 1914 it was held in Somai Ammal v. Vellayya Sethurangam (10) that if a landlord had given a lease to a tenant the landlord might eject a trespasser in order to put his tenant into possession. The tenant in that case "had not been put in possession at all, but was anxious to obtain possession." Such a case seems to proceed on the assumption that the landlord has a right to immediate possession in order to fulfill his contract and the elementary rule in Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4) would not then be infringed. It is not as though only the tenant had the right of immediate possession.

In Tiruvengada Konan v. Venkatachala Konan (11) it was ruled that though a landlord is not entitled to immediate or khas possession, he may obtain a decree for the possession of the reversion and for formal possession. This ruling practically follows Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (3). It also questions whether the obiter dictum in Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Odayar (9) is not too broadly stated. In 1916 the question came before Oldfield, J., and Phillips, J., Kathiri Mutte v. Kutti Chekkutti Mudaliar (12). They held that a landlord could sue to enable himself to fulfil his contract to give or restore possession to his tenant. Of course, if the ruling stopped at the words "to give" it would merely re-affirm Somai Ammal v. Vellayya Sethurangam (10) but the addition of the words "to restore" opens up the whole question and in effect this is a ruling contrary to Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4). Oldfield, J., begins by remarking that the exposition of the law in Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Udayan (9) is consistent with the decisions in Narainasawmy Naidu Garu v. Yerramali Ramkrishnayya (13) and Somai Ammal v. Vellayya Sethurangam (10). The former merely states what is more elaborately developed in the latter ruling that a landlord can sue in order to fulfil his contract to put his lessee in possession. Of course, the broader proposition in Ambalavana Chetty v. Singaravelu Udayan (9) that he can sue whenever his tenant is dispossessed is not inconsistent with these rulings. Then Oldfield, J., finds that the rulings admit exceptions to the general rule; though it seems that they establish only one exception, if it can indeed be called an exception. This rule is that on the date of the suit the landlord must show that he has a right to be in possession. If he has never put his tenant in possession and has to get possession in order to do so, he has a right to be in possession and his suit is not in contravention of the rule. But when it is also claimed that after a landlord has put his tenant into possession and that tenant has been dispossessed, the landlord may sue to restore his possession, it is not to set up an exception to the rule, it is to negative the rule altogether. Oldfield, J., proceeds that he cannot follow Krishna Nambiar v. Secretary of State (8) in so far as it rules that a landlord cannot give or restore. Krishna Nambiar v. Secretary of State (8) is not concerned with the question whether he can give; but it certainly rules that he cannot restore and in declining to follow (12) 39 Ind. Cas. 425; 5 L. W. 330; (1917) M. W. N. 339.

this ruling Oldfield, J., is maintaining the opposite and overruling Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4). No doubt his Lordship seeks to distinguish this ruling by finding on the facts that the trespasser colluded with the tenant and is, therefore, (see concurring judgment of Phillips, J.,) only the licensee of the tenant against whom the landlord can have no cause of action during the continuance of the lease. But in Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4) although it was alleged in the plaint that the tenant and trespasser had colluded there is no finding to that effect or any mention of collusion in the body of judgment, when their Lordships lay down the elementary rule they are not considering collusion.

Kathiri Kutti Musalies v. Chek Kutti Musalier (12) must be taken as contrary to Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4) in fact Phillips, J., practically states, as much in his concluding sentence.

The whole question was then reviewed by Wallis, C. J., in Davood Mohideen Rowther v. Jayarama Iyer (14). The principle underlying the rule is fully explained and the three ruling cases Ramanathan Chetty v. Pulikutti Servai (4) Krishnan Nambiar v. Secretary of State (8) Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (3) are approved. The acceptance of the obiter dictum in Ambalarana Chetty v. Singaravelu Odayar (9) as authority is depreciated with an expression of regret that Sita Ram v. Ram Lal (3) was not brought to the notice of the learned Judge. The learned Chief Justice even goes so far as to find that the landlord cannot sue in order to fulfil his contract, at page 940* differing from the view already expressed by Sadasiva Iyer, J., in (Somai Ammal v. Vellayya Sethuranaga (10) which view Sadasiva Iyer, J., re-affirms in a dissenting judgment in this case; [Uday Kumar Dass v. Katyani Debi (15)] it is held that the view of Sundara Iyer, J., in (Ambalavelu Chetty v. Singaravelu Udaya (9) cannot be justified on principle and is opposed to what is laid down by Lord Alverstone, C. J., as to the doctrine of [Walter v. Yalden (16).]

I think it clear from the above examination of the authorities that the view

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 22nd September 1924.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. Husain and Niamatullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, dated the 22nd September 1924. The facts are few and simple. On the 12th August 1911 the respondents brought a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage dated the 22nd August 1903 against the appellant. In defence the appellant claimed money due under two deeds of further charge also as the price of redemption. The Trial Court rejected the respondents' claim and decreed redemption on payment of Rs. 11,329-7. This amount was paid within the time fixed by the redemption decree together with a certain amount of costs and the respondents entered into the possession of the mortgaged property on the 25th August 1912. On an appeal to the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh the decree of the Trial Court in the matter of the amount redemption money was varied in favour of the appellant and the respondents were ordered to pay the sum of Rs. 12,119-15-3 to the appellant for the purpose of redeeming the mortgaged property. On the 12th November 1913 the respondents paid the difference between the two sums of money payable under the decree of the Trial Court and the decree of the Judicial Commissioner's Court.

The application, out of which this appeal arises, was made on the 28th May 1923 by appellant for the purpose of recovering Rs. 2,665 from the respondents as mesne profits, by way of restitution, for the period between the dates of the two deposits already mentioned. The application was made under s. 44 of the C. P. C. To save limitation the appellant claimed the benefit of s. 6 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, for the reason that at the time from which the period of limitation was to be reckoned he was a minor. One of the pleas in defence to the appellant's claim was that the provisions of s. 6 of the Indian Limitation Act were inapplicable because the appellant's application was not "an application for execution of a decree," to which those provisions apply. The Court below has accepted this plea and dismissed the application.

We are of opinion that the appeal succeeds. We are unable to discover any reason in principle for entertaining the view that an application made for restitution under s. 144 of the C. P. C. is not an application for the execution of a decree. This is particularly true in a suit founded on a mortgage to which the provisions of O. XXXIV of the C. P. C. apply. The decree in a suit for redemption, as the present suit was, enures to the benefit of the mortgagor and the mortgagee alike. Such a decree imposes an obligation on the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee for payment of the mortgage-money and in the event of payment the mortgagor enters into possession when the mortgage is usufructuary and in default the mortgagee is given the right to bring the property to sale in satisfaction of the mortgage-money. The final decree, therefore, which the Court of the Judicial Commissioner passed imposed the liability of payment of a further sum of money on the mortgagor before he was entitled to take possession. This obligation on the part of the mortgagor created a corresponding right in favour of the mortgagee to remain in possession until full payment as directed by the final decree was made. We, therefore, have no hesitation in holding that the present application is in substance an application made for seeking the aid of the Court in working out the final decree.

The right of restitution arises under a decree of the Court of Appeal which decree has varied or reversed the decree of the Court of first instance. Restitution is thus a benefit which would only accrue by executing the decree of the Court of Appeal. Under the old C. P. C. an application made under s. 583 of that Code was treated by their Lordships of the Privy Council as an application for execution in Prag Narain v. Kamakhia Singh (1). A Divisional Bench of the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Jiva Ram v. Nand Ram (2) has expressed the opinion that the law as enacted in s. 144 of the new Code is different from what it was in s. 583 of the old Code. With great respect we are unable to agree with that opinion. It is true that the words "execution" and "to execute" were used in s. 583 of the old Code and are not used in s. 144 of the new Code, but this change, in our opinion, makes no difference in substance. Those words, it appears to us, were superfluous and the law remains the same in spite of their disappearance. As we have said before, an application for restitution is the same thing as an application for execution of a decree passed in appeal when that decree varies or reverses the decree of the Court of first instance. The view taken in the Allahabad case seems to be shared by some of the Judges of the High Court at Patna [see Balmakunda Marwari v. Basanta Kumar Dassi (3) and Krupasindhu Roy v. Balbhadra Das (4) and also by the late Chief Court of the Punjab in Ram Singh v. Sham Parshad (5). With regard to these cases we content ourselves with quoting a passage from the judgment of Macleod, C. J., in the case of Hamidalli v. Ahmedalli (6) and say respectfully that we entirely agree with the opinion expressed in that quotation, which is as follows:—"No doubt, as mentioned by Mr. Mulla in his Code of Civil Procedure, last edition, page 315, a different view has been taken by the High Court of Patna and the Chief Court of the Punjab. With all due respect to the learned Judges of those Courts, it appears to me that the decision I have referred to is correct, and that an application for restitution cannot be treated as anything else than an application for execution of the decree of the Appellate Court. It is the decree of the Appellate Court which entitles the successful appellant to get back something which he had been deprived of by the decree of the lower Court, under which the then successful party had actually received possession. In order, therefore, to get back what he has lost, the successful appellant must apply for execution of the order which entitles him to get back that possession." In Kurgondiganda v. Ninganganda (7) it was held that the provisions of s. 6 of the Indian Limitation Act applied to an application made under s. 144 of the C. P. C., inasmuch as that was an application for execution of a decree. Another case decided by the Bombay High Court on the same lines is Shirbari v. Yesu (8). We wish to emphasize that the view which we are taking is supported by the authority of the opinion of Sir Dawson, Miller, C. J., of the Patna High Court in the case of Basanta Kumari Dassi v. Balmakund Marwari (9). Our opinion is further fortified by the decision of a Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Sumasundaram Pillai v. Chokkalingam Pillai (10). The same view seems to have been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Madan Mohan Dev v. Nogendra

Nath Dey (11) and Gangadhar Marwari v. Lachman Singh (12).

On the grounds stated above, we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and, as the decision of that Court had proceeded on a preliminary point we remand the case under O. XLI, r. 23, of the C. P. C., with directions that the case be re-entered in the proper register to its original number and disposed of according to law. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court in all events. The costs in the lower Court will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent, the Model Mills Nagpur, Limited, sued the defendant appellants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Nagpur, for possession of a house situated on the outskirts of Nagpur and for damages thereon.

The first three defendants are real brothers; the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the minor sons, and defendant No. 6 the minor daughter of defendant No. 1; defendant No. 7 is the minor daughter of defendant No. 2; and defendant No. 8 is the mother-in-law of defendant No. 2.

By a registered sale-deed, dated the 27th of January 1923 (Ex. P-2), the first seven defendants sold the house in suit to the plaintiff Company. The plaintiff's case, further, was that after the execution of the sale-deed the first seven defendants being the vendors, requested the Managing Director of the Model Mills, Sir M. B. Dadabhoy to allow them to occupy the premises on sufferance for a period of two months only, which was to expire on the 31st of March 1923. This was permitted. On 10th March 1923 registered notices were sent to the first three defendants requiring them to vacate the premises by the date in question, and holding them liable for damages if they failed to do so. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 wrote in reply to say that they had already surrendered the house, while defendant No. 3's notice came back endorsed as refused. The plaintiff's case further was that the first three defendants and defendant No. 8 had colluded and that the latter defendant had been dishonestly set up to obstruct the plaintiff from getting possession, the object being to obtain further money in respect of the sale transaction out of the Company. Possession of the house was accordingly claimed, as well as damages for seven months from the 1st of April to the 31st of October 1923.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5 and 6 admitted the execution of the sale-deed and stated that they have no interest therein. The case proceeded ex parte against defendant No. 3, while as regards the minor defendant No. 7 her father defendant No. 2 refused to act as guardian ad litem and accordingly defendant No. 8 was so appointed. The real contesting defendants, i. e., defendants Nos. 7 and 8, took up the following position.

Their defence was that defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 had no right to sell the property in suit, that the defendants Nos. 7 and 8 each had interest in it, that the house site was bought by defendant No. 3 and the late Hamidabibi, wife of defendant No. 2, by a sale-deed dated the 27th of October 1919, and that they had built the house thereon. Further, it was alleged that for the construction of the house the defendant No. 8 and Musammam Rahani-bibi, the mother of the first three defendants had each advanced Rs. 6,000 on the understanding that the entire premises should remain in their possession as a sort of a possessory mortgage till the re-payment of the whole amount. Further pleas as regards the shares of the various defendants in the property were offered, which it is unnecessary to consider at present.

In the first Court the original Judge who dealt with the case, gave a finding as regards the alleged advance of Rs. 12,000 by the defendant No. 8 and Rahanibibi. This finding was that the alleged contract of possessory mortgage, not being in writing and registered, could not be proved by oral evidence. The Subordinate Judge who finally dealt with the case found that the sale in favour of the plaintiff had been duly proved and that consideration had passed. He also held that Hamidabibi had been a mere benami purchaser of the site and had no real interest therein or in the house in suit. As regards defendant No. 8, she was also held to have no interest in the house in suit. It was further held that the plaintiff Company had no knowledge whatever of defendant No. 8 having any right or interest in the property when the sale-deed in its favour was executed. Again, it was held that defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were the sole owners of the house and that the names of the minor defendants were only included in the sale-deed in order to avoid future trouble. Other incidental findings were given which need not be repeated here.

On appeal the first position taken up was that the lower Court was wrong in excluding the evidence as to the alleged advance of Rs. 12,000 by defendant No. 8 and Rahanibibi. It is now urged that defendant No. 8 had never claimed mortgage interest in the house. It is not easy to see how this position can now be consistently taken up, in view of the latter portion of para. 2 of these defendants' written statement on the record. The language used in this written statement was inartistic from the legal point of view; but if it can fairly be construed at all, it certainly implies that a mortgage like lien existed on the property. It is urged that the right the defendant No. 8 claimed to have over the property might be described as a charge, and I have been referred to the fact that under the Transfer of Property Act there is no provision prescribing a definite mode in which a charge should be created; but it seems to me perfectly immaterial, however, for the purposes of the present case to go into this question, for the simple reason, that a charge cannot be enforced against a bona fide purchaser for value. That is indeed the reason why in law in this country a charge may be created orally, although, if it is in writing, the document in question must be registered. Thus, the absence of the publicity which is secured by registration cannot in the case of an oral charge prejudice the right of third parties dealing with the property for value in good faith. On this part of the appeal, therefore, my finding is that on the pleadings made by the defendants in the lower Court, that Court was correct in its excluding the oral evidence as to the alleged agreement with reference to defendants No. 8 remaining in possession of the house until the money alleged to have been advanced by her for the purchase was refunded. If, on the other hand, it had been permissible to regard this alleged agreement as constituting a charge, the appellants would be no further than before, so long as the lower Court's finding that the Model Mills Company had no notice of defendant No. 8's claim to the house stands good. No document is in existence imposing any species of lien or charge on the estate, and clearly, therefore, from this point of view defendant's only remedy in this connection is against her alleged debtors, to whom she had advanced the money in question.

I next pass to the second ground of appeal, which is to the effect that the lower Court was wrong in holding that Hamidabibi was a mere benami purchaser of the site of the house in question and that she had no interest therein. In para. 2 of the plaintiff's written statement, dated the 7th of March 1924, it was admitted that the sale-deed of 27th January 1923 contained the name of Hamidabibi, wife of Hafizulla Baig. It is unfortunate that this sale-deed has not been available in the case, but the plaintiff's sale-deed (Ex. P. 2) recites the fact that the purchase was made in the joint names of defendant No. 3 and of defendant No. 2's wife Hamidabibi.

Incidentally, I may observe here that much has been made by Counsel for the appellants of the fact that one of the most important witnesses in this case is Sir M. B. Dadabhoy, a gentleman occupying a high position in Indian society, and it has been suggested that his evidence requires careful scrutiny. I fully concur that this gentleman's evidence must receive the same scrutiny as that of any other witness. But even so, I cannot see the slightest reason for supposing, as has been suggested by the appellants, that he has been influenced in his attitude as a witness by the idea, he is said to have entertained, that the present suit was nothing more or less than an attempt at blackmail or, as I have preferred to say, an attempt by private individuals to obtain more money in respect of the sale transaction out of a wealthy Company. For my own part, I do not see a shadow of ground for suspecting, in the least, the bona fides of any part of the evidence of this witness. He states that on making enquiry with reference to the defendant's title, defendant No. 2 informed him that his wife's name had been recorded for the simple reason that he himself was then in Government service and as such was prohibited by rules applicable to him from ordinarily acquiring immoveable property. When to this all important admission by the defendant No. 2 is added the fact that none of the first three defendants entered the witness-box, there is not, in my opinion, the slightest reason for doubting the correctness of the lower Court's finding on issue No. 2 (a) and (b) to the effect that the site of the house was purchased, in reality, by the three brothers, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and that Hamidabibi was a mere benami purchaser.

The principles enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohammed Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (1) are fully applicable to a case like the present. In view of the extraordinary prevalence of benami transactions in India, even a slight quantity of evidence may suffice to prove it. In this case we have the all important admission of defendant No. 2 himself made to Sir M. B. Dadabhoy to the effect stated above. In this connection I think this statement combined with the fact that defendant No. 2 was a Government servant sufficiently establishes the point, especially as the defendant has not gone into the witness-box on the other side. I may add on this question, viz., with reference to the money required for the purchase of the site that in the defendants' lengthy written statement no mention was made of the fact that Hamidabibi had advanced the money for the site. This story seems to have been developed for the first time by defendant No. 8 when examined as D. W. No. 1. Her story then was that she advanced Rs. 300 and Azizualla advanced the other Rs. 300. The very flimsy evidence of this witness and of Wazirkhan (D. W. No. 3) is, in my opinion, wholly insufficient to establish this story of how the consideration for the purchase of the house site was obtained, and I do not think that it could, with any safety, be accepted.

The third ground of appeal is to the effect that the lower Court should have held that the plaintiff Company purchased the house with full knowledge of defendants Nos. 7 and 8's rights. For my own part, I find it impossible on the evidence on record to admit that this supposition is even a reasonable one a priori, much less that it has been established by the evidence on record. It is perfectly clear that Sir M. B. Dadabhoy, a lawyer himself, made every possible enquiry before launching into the purchase. In this connection the evidence of the prior mortgagee Narayan is highly important. His enquiries, before he had advanced money on the property, had also led him to the same conclusion, i.e., that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were the owners of the property. It would be the last thing in the world which a business Company like the plaintiff one would do to embark on a purchase of this sort without making adequate enquiry, and I cannot find any reason whatever for holding that the plaintiff Company had any notice whatever of defendant No. 8 having any interest in the house.

The 4th ground of appeal is to the effect that the lower Court ought to have held that defendant No. 2 was not the guardian of defendant No. 7 and that the alleged sale in favour of the plaintiff was not for the benefit of the minor and was not binding on her. On this point I have little or nothing to say. I fully concur with the finding of the lower Court on issues Nos. 5 and 6 which relate to this ground of appeal. It is indeed suggestive of the fact that there is collusion between all the defendants that the second defendant should in the present suit have refused to act as a guardian for his own daughter. This step has presumably been taken with the object of supporting the plea that defendant No. 7's interest was adverse to that of defendant No. 2. But the position is absurd on the face of it and requires no elaboration. The property in question clearly belonged to the first three defendants and it is, moreover, in evidence that the heavy prior mortgage in favour of P. W. No. 8 and another has been cleared off as a result of the present sale.

The 5th ground of appeal was not argued in detail. So far as the finding on issue No. 8 is concerned, no discussion is required. As regards the applicability of s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act to the case I concur with the lower Court's finding. This matter is, in reality, linked with the question of whether there has been a collusion between defendant No. 8 and the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. In a matter of this sort collusion cannot, as a rule, be proved by specific and direct evidence but can only be inferred from the general circumstances of the case. For my own part, I think all the circumstances are redolent of suspicion of collusion and fully warrant the presumption that there has been such collusion. Sir M. B. Dadabhoy's evidence is of value in this connection. It is apparent that in a fruitless attempt he made to get the defendants to vacate the house, Sir M. B. Dadabhoy had spoken with defendant No. 8 through a window and it is significant that defendant No. 8 as D. W. No. 1, in cross-examination, practically admitted the fact. This same defendant (No. 8) had on this occasion informed Sir M. B. Dadabhoy that they would vacate the house when defendant No. 2, who was presumably away on tour, had returned. I utterly disbelieve the evidence of Musammam Najmunnisa. Indeed, her evidence, read in itself, is to be disbelieved on the face of it. Her cock and bull story that she had been on bad terms with the first three defendants for a year and a half and that they had vacated the premises, is directly contradicted by Sir M. B. Dadabhoy's evidence, who saw defendant No. 3 there during the time in question. In this connection the intrinsic improbability of defendant No. 8's story is apparent on the face of it. Her husband, an Excise Inspector, who drew Rs. 150 a month, died 20 years ago, and she alleges that he left Rs. 15,000 to Rs. 20,000 in cash and ornaments behind him. She cannot even tell the name of the Bank in which some of this money is said to be deposited. The evidence, in short, proves that this woman has been living with the other defendants for many years past and has been in constant and close touch with them. It is impossible to suppose that she was not fully aware of the sale transaction from the very first and it is clearly impossible to suppose that there has not been direct and deliberate collusion between the first three defendants and herself. If the evidence of Ramchandra (P. W. No. 3), Sir M. B. Dadabhoy (P. W. No. 7) and Narayan (P. W. No. 8) be read together, the statements of these witnesses seem to me to fully warrant the presumption of collusion. From defendant No. 8's talk with Sir M. B. Dadabhoy at the house it is noticeable that she did not even then lay any claim to the house in suit and only gave an evasive reply that possession would be given when defendant No. 2 returned. Defendant No. 8 indeed alleges that on this occasion she told the Model Mills people, who had come to take possession, that she would not vacate the house because she and defendant No. 7 were interested therein, but I find it impossible, for one moment, to accept this story.

Holding, as I do, like the lower Court, that all these defendants have been colluding together, the first three defendants are also liable on account of mesne profits as claimed. I can, in short, see no reason for differing from the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Court. The case seems to me a very clear one, in which defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and defendant No. 8 have at the last moment elaborated between them a conspiracy with the object of defeating the plaintiff's claim, or at least of inducing the plaintiff to make a further payment so as to obtain the acquiescence of defendant No. 8 to the Company's entry into the house. As already shown, the theory of mortgage or of charge is in any event utterly unavailable to defendant No. 8 in the present case as an answer to the plaintiff's claim to enter as a purchaser for value. Similarly, in view of the finding as regards collusion, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 as well as defendant No. 8 are clearly liable for mesne profits to the plaintiff.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed. The appellants must bear the respondent's costs. Costs in the lower Court as already ordered.

An application has also been filed by the plaintiff under s. 152 of the C. P. C. to the effect that there has been an arithmetical or clerical mistake in the decree of the lower Court, which shows the fee as Rs. 304, whereas it ought to be Rs. 344. This is clearly so and the corresponding correction will be made in the decree.

An application by a decree-holder in respect of the property which should be proclaimed for sale in execution of the decree must be decided by the Execution Court, and the order of the Execution Court deciding such an application, if not objected to by way of appeal, must be held to be binding on the judgment-debtor during the subsequent stages of the execution proceeding. Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 25th May 1925.

Messrs. Wasi Hasan and J. Jackson, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. K. Dhaon and Niamatullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application made by the appellant to the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad in the course of execution proceedings. The appellant executed a mortgage of certain property and in the mortgage it was mentioned that he had acquired the property under a certain Will. The mortgagee obtained a decree for sale of the property mortgaged and applied in execution for sale. The execution of the decree was transferred from the Court where the decree was obtained to another Court. Before the sale proclamation was issued the decree-holder applied that he had come to the conclusion that the Will only gave the mortgagee a life-interest. Accordingly he asked that a life-interest and not an absolute title to the property should be put up for sale. This application was granted after notice had been given to the judgment-debtor and he had failed to appear. This was on the 14th February 1923. The sale was postponed for various reasons and ultimately the 20th April 1925 was fixed. On the 18th April the present appellant filed objections to the sale taking place. Amongst other was the objection that the order of the Court allowing a life-interest only to be sold was ultra vires. The lower Court decided that it was not competent to go into the question of the validity of the order which was by a predecessor-in-office, hence this appeal.

We are of the opinion that the decision of the lower Court is correct. It is not necessary for us to decide whether the Court was originally correct in allowing the application of the decree-holder for sale of the life-interest only. The matter was settled by an order of the Court having jurisdiction. Any application by a decree-holder in respect of the property which shall be proclaimed for sale is rightly one to be decided by the Execution Court. That Execution Court may decide it rightly or wrongly. It may even decide that it has jurisdiction, where, on a proper view of the law, it might be held that it had no such jurisdiction. The time for appealing against the decision has gone by and it must stand as a final decision. Accordingly we see no reason to interfere with the decision of the lower Court and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 480 OF 1922.

October 29, 1924.

APPAJEE PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—

APPELLANT

MANIKA MUDALI—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Promissory note, suit on—Consideration alleged by plaintiff, disproof of, effect of—Procedure.

In a suit on a promissory-note plaintiff stated that cash consideration had passed at the time of the execution of the promissory-note. The defendant's plea was that the pro-note was executed as a sort of security for his good conduct in connection with a partnership which was being carried on between him and the plaintiff's brother. The Trial Court found that no cash consideration had passed and that the story of the defendant was true, the pro-note having been executed as security for accounting for sums drawn by the defendant as a partner.

Held, that on the finding of the Trial Court the suit was bound to be dismissed and that that finding could not be construed as declaring the contingent liability of the defendant at the time of the settlement of accounts.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Vellore, in A. S. No. 136 of 1921, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirupathur, in O. S. No. 361 of 1919.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar for Mr. V. C. Seshachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only point urged in this second appeal is that the Subordinate Judge's finding is not a legal finding. The suit is on a promissory-note. The plaintiff stated that cash consideration passed, at the time of the execution of the promissory-note. The defendant's plea was that no cash consideration passed at the time, but it was executed, as a sort of security, for his good conduct, in connection with the partnership which was being carried on between him and the brother of the promisee of the promissory-note. The Subordinate Judge found that no cash consideration passed and the story of the defendant is true. Mr. Sesha Iyengar wants to build an argument upon the last but one sentence of his judgment.

"The result is inevitable that the promissory-note Ex. A, renewing Ex. B is also a security merely for accounting for sums drawn by defendant as a partner."

From this, he wants to argue that the Subordinate Judge found that there was a contingent liability, arising at the time of the settlement of accounts. I am not prepared to agree with him. All that the Subordinate Judge was required to find was whether the story of the plaintiff was true or false and he distinctly held that the case of the plaintiff was not true and the case of the defendant was substantially true. That being so, it is unnecessary to consider the decisions in Sri Ram v. Sobha Ram-Gopalrai (1) and Vishnu Ramchandra Joshi v. Ganesh Krishna Sathe (2), relied upon by Mr. Sesha Iyengar.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the Patna High Court (Sir Dawson Miller, C. J. and Mr. Justice Ross)

in Appeal No. 54 of 1921, dated 16th March 1922 and printed as 66 Ind. Cas. 88.

Mr. E. B. Rarkes, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Dube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ameer Ali.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff Jamuna Singh in the Court of one of the Subordinate Judges at Patna for possession of a property called Mouza Bariarpur in that District. He claims to have acquired his title by purchase from his assignors, defendants Nos. 11, 12 and 13.

The property in dispute, though of comparatively small value has already been the subject of a series of litigations.

The following pedigree will give a general idea of the various parties whom the plaintiff has impleaded in the case:—

Another wife m. Hira Misir alias Ramcharan m. Dayar Kuar.

N. B.—The name of Raghunandan's father does not appear in the Record. He had two wives, one of whom was the sister of Dhanukdari and mother of Raghunandan, the other wife being the mother of Balmukund and Chatterbhuj (defendants Nos. 6 and 7).

The Mouza Bariarpur belonged originally to one Dhanukdhari Missir, who died, it is alleged, some 50 years ago, leaving him surviving a widow named Monakka Kaur. As Dhanukdhari left no issue, his widow succeeded to the estate and held possession until her death in 1902. She appears to have created in her lifetime a zur-i-peshgee lease in respect of part of the property in favour of the 9th defendant.

The plaintiff alleges that on Monakka's death there were no agnatic relations of Dhanukdhari. He has, however, as he says, made all persons claiming reversionary rights through females parties to the suit. His case is that among them his vendors, namely, Rajendra, Ram Sohawan and Ram Nirekhan, who have assigned to him their rights in the property in question, are preferentially entitled to the succession of Dhanukdhari.

The 1st defendant, Mahabir Prasad Tewari, the present appellant before the Board, on the other hand, alleges that Monakka before her death made a Will in his favour and devised to him the property in suit, and that he obtained possession of the same, which he has retained until now. It appears that he obtained on the 16th April, 1903, Probate of the Will shortly after the death of Monakka from the Court of the District Judge of Patna. It is not disputed, however, that the devise by Monakka was invalid.

The first defendant's real case is that at the time inheritance to Dhanukdhari's estate opened, on the death of Monakka, the preferential heir to his succession was his agnatic relation Gopal Misser. His place is shown in the pedigree. Gopal Misser is still alive, and the appellant has obtained from him an assignment of his rights and interests. The appellant has also purchased, it appears, the right and interests, if any, of several of the other defendants.

In 1903 a suit was brought by the Secretary of State for the possession of Mouza Bariarpur on the allegation that Dhanukdhari had died without leaving any heir, that Mahabir, the appellant, had no title to the property and that it had accordingly escheated to the Crown. It is alleged by the appellant that this suit was really prompted by defendant No. 9.

A number of persons, almost all of whom have been made defendants in this action, came forward as claimants in the suit of the Secretary of State. The suit was finally dismissed by the High Court of Calcutta on the 14th May, 1908.

Soon after its dismissal the appellant brought a suit against Adit, the 9th defendant, for redemption of the usufructuary mortgage created by Monakka. The appellant based his right to redeem on the assignment to him by Hanuman (whose name will be found in the pedigree) of his rights and interests in the property, and the first Court made a decree in his favour in these terms:—

"In accordance with my decision of the other issues I hold that the plaintiff will get a declaration that he is the proprietor of the disputed Mouza Bariarpur as mentioned in the plaint and that the defendant No. 1 will be declared to be a zarpeshgidar of the mouza, and it will also be declared that the plaintiff will get  khas possession of the disputed mouza on payment of Rs. 200, as stipulated in the 2nd ticca patta (dated 1st September 1902)."

The Subordinate Judge held in effect that the assignment by Hanuman, whom he considered to have a preferential reversionary right, entitled the defendant to redeem the property from Adit. This view appears to have been accepted by the High Court, and the decree of the first Court was affirmed. On an appeal to this Board it was declared that Rajendra and his two brothers were preferentially entitled. The decrees of the Courts in India were reversed and the appellant's suit for redemption was dismissed [Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (1)].

The present suit by the plaintiff was brought on the 8th September 1914. It was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the 31st October 1917, on the ground that he (the plaintiff) had failed to prove that his vendors were preferential reversioners. In the meantime, as already stated, it had been declared by the Board on the 18th January 1921, that the plaintiff's vendors had the preferential right, and the High Court has accordingly upheld the claim, and made a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

Counsel for the appellant admits that in face of the ruling by the Board he could not impugn the reversionary right of the plaintiff's vendors, but he contends that the defendant is in possession and in order to eject him the plaintiff must show that there is no other reversionary heir in the same degree or nearer than his assignors whose title he (the defendant) can urge against the plaintiff's claim for ejectment. In other words, the action being one of ejectment the defendant is entitled to plead in defence the right of some one else equally entitled with the plaintiff's vendors. Mr. Justice Bucknill of the High Court of Patna in his careful judgment has shown that the defendant had failed to prove satisfactorily that the parties whom he had put forward were entitled to the property in preference to the plaintiff's vendors.

The evidence on which the appellant relied has been read to their Lordships, and Mr. Raikes has put before the Board every point in support of his case. Their Lordships, however, see no reason to differ from the High Court. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A mistaken advice of a Counsel that an appeal lay from an order dismissing an application for the amendment of a decree, causing a bona fide wrong impression on the client and a delay in the filing of an appeal from another appealable order in execution proceeding, cannot furnish a sufficient ground for condoning the delay under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. R. N. Padhe, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The only question with which I am at present concerned is whether the present appeal which purports to be one against orders in Execution Case No. 7 of 1924 in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, is barred by limitation or not. Admittedly, on the face of things, the present appeal is barred by some 147 days but the appellant's case is that he should be given the benefit with reference to s. 5 of the Limitation Act of the period from 6th January 1925 to 15th August 1925 during which he was bona fide pursuing a wrong remedy in First Appeal No. 3 of 1925.

The facts of the case are sufficiently clear from my judgment in the latter appeal and need not be repeated here. Reliance on behalf of the appellant has been placed on the following decisions:—

Shib Dayal v. Jagannath Prasad (1), Vaithyanatha Aiyar v. Govindaswami Odayar (2) and Nagindas Motilal v. Nilaji Moraba Naik (3).

In the first quoted of these cases the learned Justices held that an honest mistake on the part of a litigant caused by erroneous advice given to him by his Vakil in the district, by reason of which an appeal was not filed until it was barred by limitation, was a good ground for the application of s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. In that case it was laid down that, although the primary principle in dealing with this matter must be that the proposed respondent to an appeal has a right to hold his judgment and that such right ought not to be interfered with after the lapse of the prescribed time unless there are special circumstances for doing so, yet in each case in India the question must be considered on its merits. In this particular case the deciding factor was that the legal profession in the District Court was not in such a state of efficiency as to make it expedient to resile from the degree of the latitude which the Allahabad High Court had hitherto allowed to litigants in this matter. In the Madras Law Journal case quoted a delay due to an error on the part of the Vakil in not filing an application with regard to the legal representative with a shorter period which had recently been introduced by an Amending Act, was condoned. The decision in the case of Nagindas Motilal v. Nilaji Moraba Naik (3) ran on similar lines. An analogous decision is to be found in Dattatraya Sitaram v. Secretary of State for India (4). Special weight has also been laid on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Indar Singh v. Kashi Ram (5). In that case however, the question concerned was one of whether the delay due to an application for review of judgment should have been condoned or not.

On behalf of the respondent reliance has been placed on a decision of Prideaux, A. J. C., in Ishwardas v. Bismilla Khan (6). Obviously, however, in that case there had been gross negligence on the part of the Pleader concerned. In Padamraj Phulchand v. Metsvice Bhashan Kesha Ltd., (7) by Prideaux and Kinkhede, A. J. Cs., it was held that where an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council was made 29 days beyond time and the party concerned alleged that he was misled by the advice of his Counsel who was not aware of the reduction in limitation brought about by Act XXVI of 1920, there was no cause for condoning the delay.]

In a case like the present, therefore, the principle from which we must start is that the respondent in the present case has a vested right in the order of the lower Court in his favour which it is now sought to attack and he should not be deprived of this advantage unless there has been on his part some conduct raising an equity against him, or unless there has been some inevitable accident. Now it cannot be said that the mistake of the appellant committed presumably on the advice of his Counsel in seeking to attack by way of an appeal the order dated 22nd October 1924, which was in reality an order dismissing an application for amendment of a decree, was a mistake of such a nature as to amount to an inevitable accident. I cannot find in the circumstances of the present case any such special features as would permit of my holding in the appellant's favour in this connection.

In the present instance the execution proceedings were stayed while the application for amendment of the decree was under consideration. Immediately the execution proceedings restored, it was open to the appellant to have appealed against the orders of 6th November 1924 and 18th December 1924. Instead of doing this he deliberately chose to pursue the remedy of appealing against the order dismissing an application for amendment of the decree. It is not each and every mistake of a Counsel which per se is to be considered a sufficient ground for automatically giving his client the benefit of s. 5 of Indian Limitation Act. The present case does not seem to me to be one in which there are any sufficient grounds for exercising my judicial discretion in the way I am asked to by the appellant. For the above reasons, therefore, I am unable to condone the delay, which has occurred in filing the present appeal and it is dismissed as time-barred. Appellant must bear respondent's costs. I fix Rs. 30 as Pleader's fees.

Section 39 (2) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act does not mean that no division of a tenancy holding held by two or more tenants should be effected, it merely says that if such a partition has been arrived at and the distribution of land has taken place it shall not be recorded in the revenue papers until the consent of the land-holder has been obtained. The section is no bar to a claim by one of several joint tenants to get his share in a cultivatory holding divided by means of a partition suit filed in a Civil Court.

Second appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 23rd April 1924, confirming that of the Sub-Judge, Bahraich, dated the 29th October 1921.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Aditya Prosad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for partition of a certain cultivatory holding in village Jaitapur, District Gonda. The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are co-sharers in the said holding each owning one third. Both the Courts below have granted to the plaintiff a decree for partition in respect of one-third share in the said land.

The only point that has been argued before me is a point of law that a cultivatory holding could not be partitioned without the consent of the landlord, which has not been obtained in this case. I was referred to cl. (2) of s. 39 of the Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) which runs as follows:—"No division of a holding occupied by two or more tenants, and no distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof, shall be recorded, unless the consent of the land-holder and of all the tenants concerned has been attested before a Revenue Court or the kanungo."

The argument put forward is precisely the same which was put forward before the learned District Judge and I fully agree with the view taken by him. Section 39, cl. (2) does not mean that no division of the holding held by two or more tenants should be effected, it only says that if such a partition has been arrived at and the distribution of land has taken place it shall not be recorded in the revenue papers until the consent of the land-holder has been obtained. It is clear that this provision of law is intended for the purpose of protecting the rights of the land-holder. Any partition of a cultivatory holding should not obviously be binding upon the landlord if effected without his consent. The liability for the payment of rent among the tenants cultivating a particular holding is a joint one and they are not entitled to convert their joint liability into a separate liability without the consent of the landlord. This, however, does not mean that the tenants cannot partition their holding among themselves. As an illustration a similar case of a partition among the co-sharers of a village possessing proprietary rights styled as an "imperfect partition" might be quoted. The co-sharers in such a case partition their joint proprietary holding and distribute the land revenue among themselves, though their liability for the Government revenue still continues to be a joint one. I, therefore, am of opinion that s. 39, cl. (2) cannot be construed as a bar to the claim of the plaintiff-respondent to get his share in the cultivatory holding divided by means of a partition suit filed in a Civil Court. It is, however, clear that no such partition could be recorded in the revenue papers until the landlord had given his consent to it.

The appeal fails and is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff sued for possession of certain property on the allegation that the defendants were in possession of it as trespassers. The defendants claimed to be in possession of the property as the reversioners of the last male-holder. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court and the dismissal was upheld by the lower Appellate Court. During the pendency of a second appeal by the plaintiff in the High Court one of the defendants-respondents died and his legal representatives were not brought upon the record within the prescribed period.

Held, that inasmuch as the relief sought against the defendants in the plaint was joint and indivisible, the appeal must be held to have abated in toto and that it was not open to the plaintiff to urge that as the defendants claimed to be in possession as the reversionary heirs of the last male-holder the appeal should be held to have abated only with regard to the deceased respondents' share in the estate of the last male-holder according to the pedigree-table set up by the defendants.

Lala Mehar Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued for possession of land and houses alleged to have been sold to him by Musammatt Ilaicho and of which he asserted that defendants Nos. 2 to 5 were in possession as trespassers. These defendants were Gurdas subsequently deceased, his son Ram Dev, his grandson Dasaundhi Ram and his nephew Ram Lal. The suit was dismissed and the dismissal was upheld by the learned District Judge. The plaintiff came to this Court in second appeal joining as respondents Musammatt Ilaicho, Dasaundhi Ram, Ram Dev and Ram Lal. Dasaundhi Ram is dead leaving Ram Dev his uncle as his legal representative. The appeal, however, has already been dismissed against Ram Lal by another Judge of this Court.

A preliminary objection is raised that the appeal cannot proceed against Ram Dev since the decree in favour of the defendants other than Musammatt Ilaicho was joint and the plaint alleged them to be in possession jointly as trespassers.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiff-appellant resists this contention stating that the finding of the Court below was that these defendants were reversionary heirs of Phillo the deceased husband of Musammatt Ilaicho and in possession of the land in suit rightfully in that capacity, and that a certain pedigree table set forth in the lower Appellate Court's judgment is correct. He argues that, according to this pedigree table, the shares of each of the defendants can be ascertained and separated, and that the appeal can proceed against Ram Dev for half the land in suit.

Authority, however, is against this proposition. The situation is precisely the same as if the appeal had abated against Ram Lal and there is a case practically on all fours decided recently by a Division Bench of this Court. It is Civil Appeal No. 1776 of 1917 which is printed as Sardara v. Allayar (1). In that case the (1) 73 Ind Cas 604; (1923) A. I. R. (L.) 132.

appeal had abated against one of several defendants-respondents and the position taken up by the plaintiff-appellant was that the defendants were all trespassers and were all in occupation of the land in suit. The learned Judges refused to listen to an argument that, because the defendants owned other land in well defined ancestral shares, it must be taken that they also held this land in accordance with the same ancestral shares. That position, they remarked, was contradictory to the suit as framed and after considering a large number of previous decisions of the Chief Court and of this Court the learned Judges decided that since the relief sought was joint and indivisible against all the defendants respondents the inevitable consequence of the abatement of the appeal against one of them was the complete abatement against all.

The situation is very similar in the present case. The defendants were alleged in the plaint to be trespassers and to be in possession of the land in suit jointly. Together with Gurdas his son and his grandson were impleaded as defendants and to assert now that the defendants were in possession in definite shares according to their position in the pedigree table is contradictory to the suit as framed.

For this reason and because no relief is claimed against Musammatt Ilaicho I dismiss the appeal with costs.

The order was passed ex parte, the appellant being absent. On the next date of the hearing of the case, the minor was not produced, but the Court was asked to cancel its previous order. The Court refused to do so, and the appellant appealed against this later order:

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 15th August 1925, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 16 of 1925.

Mr. B. V. Pradhan, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the District Judge, Nagpur, on the 15th August 1925, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 16 of 1925. The present appellants were on the 23rd July ordered to produce the minor child Tara aged seven years in Court with a view to her being restored to the custody of her father. That order was passed ex parte, the present appellants being absent. On the 15th August 1925, the next date of hearing, the minor was not produced, but the District Judge was asked to cancel his order of the 23rd July 1925. This the District Judge refused to do, particularly in view of the present appellants' contumacy in not having obeyed the previous order for the production of the minor child in Court. It was only apparently as a consequence of an order of this Court dated the 7th September 1925, that the child was produced at a later hearing of the case, viz., on the 19th September 1925, in the Court of the District Judge.

What is now urged is that the minor should not be handed over in the custody of her father until the objections of the present appellants to this course have been considered and adjudicated upon. It seems to me that the appellants have mistaken their remedy in this connection. The order of the 23rd July 1925 was an order passed ex parte. It was open to the appellants to have applied for setting aside that order and that they did not do. The District Judge's order of the 15th August 1925 was in reality a consequential order following on the earlier order of the 23rd July 1925, and I do not think that, in the circumstances, any appeal lies, against the order of the later date mentioned. Even if I could regard the present appeal as an application for revision of the order of the 23rd July 1925, a course which would involve much straining of the actual legal position, I should not have been prepared to interfere in view of the fact that there was obvious contumacy and direct disobedience of the order of the District Judge for the production of the minor. It may of course be that the District Judge may still be prepared to consider any objections which may be urged to the handing over of the custody of the minor pendente lite to her father (respondent). That is a matter within his discretion, but so far as the present appeal is concerned it seems to me that it is bound to fail and it is dismissed accordingly. Appellant must bear respondent's costs. Pleader's fees Rs. 20.

Proceedings under s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are proceedings not merely for ejectment, but to have a fair and equitable rent assessed by the Court. If the tenant refuses to accept the agreement filed under the provisions of the section, it is then that a suit for ejectment under the section can be commenced. [p. 38, col 2.]

The word "agreement" in sub-s. (7) of s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act refers not to the agreement mentioned in the previous sub-sections but to the agreement arrived at between the landlord and the tenant when the Court has fixed the fair and equitable rent and the tenant has elected to pay that rent and not to be ejected from the holding [p. 39, col 1.]

The rent accruing due during the pendency of proceedings under s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not suspended by virtue of the proceedings, and a suit after the termination of such proceedings to recover such rent is governed by Art. 2 (b) of Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act and the period of limitation provided in that Article is not extended by the operation of s. 14 of the Limitation Act. [p. 39, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a decision of the learned District Judge of 24-Pargannas, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the Third Court of Alipur. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the Port Canning and Land Improvement Company, Ltd., as landlords to recover from the defendants who were non-occupancy raiyyats rent for a period of seven years from 1320 to 1326.

There is no dispute with regard to the years 1323 to 1326 inclusive. But the dispute between the parties is as to whether or not the rent for the years 1320, 1321 and 1322 is barred by limitation. The appellants contend that their claim for these three years is not barred and they say that this is so because during these years they were prosecuting a claim under the provisions of s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. These proceedings were commenced on the 28th of March 1913. Now, the suit under s. 46 was dismissed by the first Court, and by the lower Appellate Court. But on appeal to this Court the claim for enhancement was allowed on the 24th of June 1919, this Court holding in second appeal that the appellants were entitled to have a fair and equitable rent fixed by the Court. The matter was sent back to the first Court for the fixing of a fair and equitable rent and when this was fixed there was an appeal against the first Court's decision and the fair and the equitable rent was not finally fixed until some time in the year 1923. The present suit was commenced on the 14th April 1920, rent being claimed at the old rate as, for the reasons which I have stated, the fair and equitable rent directed to be fixed by this Court on the 24th June 1919 had not at that time been determined. But the appellants say that it was necessary for them to commence their suit claiming rent at the old rate, as they did, because if they had left the matter to run any further, in their view the land was not sufficient in value to realize the decree for rent which they ultimately would obtain. It thus appears that the appellants support their claim for the rent for the three years 1320, 1321 and 1322 on the ground that, they say, their claim for the rent must be deemed to have been in suspense from March 1913 until June 1919 when the s. 46 case was in progress and they say they could not really have brought their suit during these years as rent was not fixed and finally determined.

The defendants on the other hand contend that by virtue of the provisions of Art 2 (b) of the Third Schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act the rent for these three years is not now recoverable.

Article 2 (b) provides that the period of limitation for the recovery of an arrear of rent in other cases not provided by the previous sub-section is three years from the last day of the agricultural year in which the arrear fell due. The respondents further contend that proceedings under s. 46 are merely proceedings for ejectment and it has been held in various cases of this Court that during the pendency of a suit for ejectment the claim for rent is not in abeyance by reason of the suit. Now, in my view it is not right to say that the proceedings under s. 46 are merely proceedings for ejectment for I think they are proceedings not merely for ejectment but to have a fair and equitable rent assessed by the Court. If the tenant has refused to accept the agreement filed under the provisions of s. 46 it is then alone that a suit for ejectment under that section can be commenced. There is nothing, therefore, I think, in this point.

But the real difficulty appears to be whether there are any provisions of the Limitation Act which provide for the suspension of the rent during the pendency of the s. 46 proceedings unless there is to be found some such provision in the Limitation Act then the provisions of Art. 2 (b) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act must operate. Now, it seems to me that the only section of the Limitation Act which could be applicable is s. 14 of that Act which provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceedings whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal against the defendant, shall be excluded where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it. Now, the real question, therefore, is whether the proceedings under s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be treated as proceedings founded upon the same cause of action as the claim in this suit. This really depends, I think, upon the construction to be put on the word "agreement" in sub-s. (7) of s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act Section 46, sub s. (1) provides that no suit for ejectment shall be instituted against a non-occupancy raiyat unless the landlord has tendered an agreement to pay an enhanced rent and the tenant within three months before the institution of the suit has refused to execute it. Sub-s. (2) provides that a landlord tendering an agreement may file it in the office of the Court for service on the raiyat and that it shall be served forthwith and that such service shall be deemed to be a tender. The "agreement" referred to in sub-ss. (1) and (2) of course is not strictly an agreement as has been pointed out by this Court in the case of the Port Canning and Land Improvement Company, Ltd. v. Nayan Chandra Paramanik (1). But it really is an offer made to the tenant which the tenant can refuse or reject as he likes. Then sub-s. (3) provides that if a raiyat on whom an agreement has been served executes it and within one month from the date of the service files it in the office from which it issued it shall take effect from the commencement of the agricultural year next following. Sub-section (4) refers to the same agreement and provides for notice to the landlord in the event of the agreement having been executed by the raiyat. Sub-section (5) again refers to the same agreement and provides that if the raiyat does not execute and file the agreement under sub-s. (3) the tenant shall be deemed to have refused to execute it. Sub-section (6) again refers to the same agreement and provides that if the raiyat refuses to execute the agreement the Court has to determine a fair and equitable rent for the holding. Then we come to sub-s. (7) which provides that if the raiyat agrees to pay the rent determined by the Court under sub-s. (6) he is to be entitled to remain in occupation of this holding at the rent fixed by the Court for a term of five years from the date of the agreement. Does the word "agreement" in sub-s. (7) refer to the same agreement which is mentioned in the first six sub-sections, or is it something else? It is suggested that the agreement mentioned in sub-s. (7) is the agreement arrived at between the parties when Court has fixed a fair and equitable rent and the raiyat has agreed to pay the same. The conclusion that I have come to is this that upon a true construction of sub-s. (7) that is the meaning of the word "agreement" in that section; and I have arrived at this conclusion for two reasons. First of all, because it seems very strange that if the agreement referred to in sub-s. (3) is the same agreement as is referred to in sub-s. (7) the agreement in one case is to take effect from the commencement of the agricultural year next following and in the other case from the date of the agreement itself. It is certainly somewhat curious that there should be this difference in time from which the agreement is to take effect if the agreement referred to in sub-s. (7) is the same agreement as is mentioned in sub s. 3. The second ground is this—sub-section (7) provides that if a raiyat agrees to pay the enhanced rent fixed by the Court he is entitled to remain in occupation for a term of five years from the date of the agreement. If the agreement there is to be construed as the agreement filed by the landlord under the provisions of sub-s. (2) one might arrive at this extraordinary result—that a tenant would get no period of term at all if the proceedings under s. 46 had been sufficiently protracted. In any case it seems to me that he would never get the full term of five years mentioned in the sub section because in this reading of the "agreement" the time occupied in s. 46 proceedings would have to be deducted from the period of five years mentioned in sub-s. (7). For these reasons I think upon the true construction of sub s. (7) the word "agreement" therein is not the agreement mentioned in the previous sub-sections but the agreement arrived at between the landlord and the tenant when the Court has fixed the fair and equitable rent and the tenant has elected to pay that rent, and not to be ejected from the holding.

In this view, therefore, in my opinion the limitation is not saved by virtue of the provisions of s. 14 of the Limitation Act, as it cannot be said that s. 46 proceedings are founded upon the same cause of action as the proceedings in the present suit. I do not see any other section of the Limitation Act under which the limitation can be saved.

We have been referred to various cases. The learned Judge in the Court below has relied on the case of Watson & Co. v. Dhondra Chandra Mukerji (2). But I do not think that that case is really decisive of the question that arises in this suit. A reference to the judgment at page 12* makes it clear that the reason of that decision was that the claim in that suit was barred by limitation on the ground that according to the decision of the Court the defendants still continued to be tenants of the zemindar under their patni lease even though the zemindar had denied the existence of this lease. Therefore it could not be contended that the claim for rent was in suspense during the pendency of the litigation with regard to the lease. The case that seems more nearly applicable to the facts of the present case is the decision in Hem Chunder Choudhury v. Kali Prosanno Bhaduri (3). Then there had been a suit for enhancement of rent and the Judicial Committee held that the fact that a suit for enhancement of rent had been brought by the plaintiff within the period covered by the rent suit and in the enhancement suit the plaintiff had claimed enhanced rent for the years covered by the rent suit stayed the operation of the Law of Limitation. Their Lordships say at page 11† that the appellants claimed the arrears of 1298 in that enhancement proceedings but this claim was then disallowed as premature, that they are not now entitled to the benefit of the decree for enhancement and to recover the arrears of the enhanced rate. It, therefore, appears that in that case the claim in the rent suit was expressly and exactly covered by the claim in the enhancement suit which for the reasons I have indicated is not the case here.

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 234; 22 C. W. N. 558; 28 C. L. J. 87.

(2) 3 O. 6; 2 Ind. Jur. 209; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 596.

One cannot help sympathising with the position of the landlord in the present case. But in the circumstances it is clearly impossible for them to claim rent at the old rate during the pendency of the enhancement proceeding. The result may, therefore, be that in this state of circumstances the landlord cannot recover the full benefit of the decree for enhancement which he obtained in proceedings under s. 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But that is a question for the Legislature and not for us. We can administer the law as we find them and as we understand them.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 379 OF 1924.

July 13, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.

PANDURANG GOVIND FATE—

DECREE HOLDER—APPLICANT

versus

MAIFUZHAI—OBJECTOR—NON-APPLICANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 58—Erroneous view of law—Objection proceedings, order in—Revision.

If a Court, upon an erroneous view of the scope of a section of the C. P. C., applies it to a case to which it has no application, the Court acts without jurisdiction; and the High Court would interfere with its decision in revision. [p. 42, col. 1]

Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath, 7 B. 311, 7 Ind. Jur. 656, 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 229, followed

The mere fact that the unsuccessful party in objection proceedings under O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C. has to file a separate suit under r. 63 of the Order and the onus of proof will be on him, does not afford sufficient ground as to why the High Court should revise the order in those proceedings [p. 42, col. 2.]

Application for revision against an order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, dated the 17th October 1924, in Execution Case No. 119 of 1922.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. V. Wazalwar, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The applicant (decree-holder) Pandurang Govind Fate has applied in revision against an order in execution of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Nagpur, under which certain moveable property, which had been attached, was released on an objection filed under O. XXI, r. 58, C. P. C., by the non-applicant Maifuzbhai. The latter filed an objection to the attachment on the ground that the property in question was already in his possession in the capacity of a supratdar under a decree passed in Civil Suit No. 27 of 1922, in which the decree-holder was also the same as the present applicant. The grounds of the application are firstly, that the objector, on his own allegations, had no locus standi under O. XXI, r. 58, to maintain the objection, and that the lower Court acted illegally and without jurisdiction in having released the property from attachment. It is secondly urged that, in any event, the lower Court failed to take notice of the fact that the present decree-holder pleaded that the property attached in the present proceedings was not the same as that attached in Suit No. 27 of 1922, and that the order releasing the property was, in any event, premature, as the lower Court failed to give an opportunity to the present applicant to produce evidence on the above question of fact.

On the application for revision coming on for hearing, the Pleader for the non-applicant raised an objection that a remedy by way of revision did not lie in the circumstances of the present case and it will be accordingly convenient, first of all, to deal with this point. On behalf of the non-applicant it has been pointed out that O. XXI, r. 63, provided a special remedy by way of suit for any party by an order passed under r. 60 or r. 61 of O. XXI, C. P. C. Reliance has been placed in this connection upon the decisions, amongst others, in Gopal Das v. Alaf Khan (1), J. J. Guise v. Jaisraj (2) and Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (3). The decision in J. J. Guise v. Jaisraj (2) is directly to the point. Burkitt, J. remarked at page 407* thereof as follows:—

"The learned Counsel for the applicants admits that they have open to them a remedy by way of suit in which they can question the decision of the Subordinate Judge so far as it is injurious to them. Admittedly they have not availed themselves of that remedy, and, therefore, adopting and acting on the precedents above cited, I think that this Court should not grant to them the extraordinary remedy by way of revision for which they have applied. For this reason, I think this application should be rejected."

In Debi Das v. Ejaz Husain (4), Knox, J., referred to J. J. Guise v. Jaisraj (2) just quoted and remarked as follows:—

"What was laid down in that case was that this Court should not grant the extraordinary remedy by way of revision when a remedy by way of suit lies open. Ordinarily, I am prepared to subscribe to that, but in this matter each case must be judged upon the circumstances peculiar to it. The subject-matter is valued at Rs. 40. The decree-holder is purporting to act under a decree which he obtained on 17th November 1902. The application for execution, which has in no way been traversed, shows that his path in execution has been a very thorny one. I have held that the order

(1) 11 A. 383; A. W. N. (1889) 151; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 672.

(2) 15 A. 405; A. W. N. (1893) 172; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 979.

(3) 7 B. 341, 7 Ind. Jur. 656, 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 229.

(4) 28 A. 72; A. W. N. (1905) 191; 2 A. L. J. 749.

complained of was an order entirely without jurisdiction, and, therefore, it appears to me most consonant with equity to place the parties as far as possible in the position they occupied before the judgment-debtor moved the Court to pass the order which it had no jurisdiction to pass."

Knox, J., thus in the case in question was not prepared to lay down an absolute rule that when an express remedy by way of suit or otherwise was provided for, no application for revision could, in any event, lie, and he held that in such a matter each case must be judged upon the circumstances peculiar to it.

The question of the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court under s. 662 of the old C. P. C. was considered most elaborately in Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (3) by a Full Bench and the following principle was, amongst others, laid down at page 372* thereof:—

"Where a decree or order of a Subordinate Court is declared by the law to be, for its own purposes, final, or conclusive, though in its nature provisional, as subject to displacement by the decree in another more formal suit, the Court will have regard to the intention of the Legislature that promptness and certainty should, in such cases, be in some measure accepted instead of juridical perfection. It will rectify the proceedings of the inferior Court where the extrinsic conditions of its legal activity have plainly been infringed; but where the alleged, or apparent, error consists in a misappreciation of evidence, or misconstruction of the law, intrinsic to the inquiry and decision, it will respect the intended finality, and will intervene peremptorily only when it is manifest that, by the ordinary and prescribed method, an adequate remedy, or the intended remedy, cannot be had."

On behalf of the applicant reliance has been placed on the remarks of Hallifax, A. J. C., in Ramchandra Fate v. Shridhar (5). The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner therein held that, even though a remedy by regular suit was open to the applicant in that case, yet he was prepared to interfere on the ground that the slower remedy by regular suit would leave the applicant suffering injustice and undue hardship, and that this ground alone was sufficient to call for the exercise of the revisional powers of the Court in his favour. Each case of this sort must, however, be judged on its merits, and I am not prepared to admit that the present applicant is likely to suffer exceptional hardship or injustice, even though it were to be held that the present application by way of revision did not lie. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss in the present case the question as to whether I should be prepared to accept fully the standard laid down by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in the case quoted in this connection.

I turn next to the principle enunciated in the Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (3) quoted above, a decision which has been followed in many other later cases, and is quoted, with approval, in Brajabala Devi v. Gurudas Mundle (6). It becomes, therefore, necessary to consider whether the lower Court was correct or not in holding that r. 58 of O. XXI, C. P. C., covered the case of the present objector. If a Court, upon an erroneous view of the scope of a section of the C. P. C., applies it to a case to which it has no application, such a Court would act without jurisdiction, and, ... the principle laid down in Shi : v. Joma Kashinath (3) quoted above, this Court would, in the circumstances, be prepared to interfere. Now the applicant's position in this connection is that the objector as a mere supratdar had no locus standi with regard to the objection he filed to the attachment. It is suggested in this connection that he was in possession only on behalf of the judgment-debtor. Were this so, the Court would undoubtedly have acted without jurisdiction. I am, however, not prepared to assent to this proposition. The supratdar was, to all intents and purposes, in possession of the property on behalf of the Court and practically held the position of a Receiver. Therefore, in the present case I do not think that any application for revision can lie, and I fully accept the above quoted principle.

The other grounds for interference, viz., that the lower Court erred materially in not taking further evidence and investigating the question as to whether the property in each attachment was the same, do not seem to me to be such as would justify interference on the revisional side in this Court. Rightly or wrongly, the Judge of the lower Court, on the evidence before him, has held that the property was the same. The mere fact that if the applicant has to file a separate suit under O. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C., in this connection and that the onus of proof will be on him in this connection, seems to me to afford no sufficient ground as to why this Court should exercise its revisional jurisdiction in such a matter. If such a consideration were to afford the guiding principle in the question as to whether an application of this sort lies under s. 115, r. 63 of O. XXI, might as well not be on the Statute book at all, because parties aggrieved by an order passed under r. 60 or r. 61 of O. XXI would very naturally choose the cheaper and more speedy remedy of revision.

Holding, as I do, therefore, that the lower Court did not act without jurisdiction, I do not think the present application for revision can be entertained on the other allegations made therein. The applicant must seek his remedy by way of separate suit in the way provided for in the C. P. C. The application for revision is accordingly dismissed. The applicant must bear the non-applicant's costs. Pleader's fees Rs. 15.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2268 OF 1924.

March 21, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

PAL SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

GANGA SINGH AND ANOTHER—

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal, second—Mortgage or sale—Question of fact.

The question whether a certain transaction is a mortgage or a sale is a question of fact and cannot be agitated in second appeal.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 13th August 1924.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Kidar Nath Chopra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit for pre-emption. The following facts will disclose the nature of the question to be decided:—

One Musammat Ram Kaur, widow of Jawand Singh, inherited some land from her husband as a life-tenant. She applied to the Collector to sell 49 kanals, 6 marlas for Rs. 2,000, to one Dharam Chand, a non-agriculturist. The application was rejected on the 8th of February 1921. Thereupon by a deed dated the 11th of June 1921, she made a mortgage without possession in favour of Ganga Singh in respect of 39 kanals, 11 marlas for Rs. 1,100. The following conditions were entered in the deed:

(1) The mortgage was not to be redeemed for 20 years, and

(2) interest was to be paid at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. On the same date the mortgaged land was leased to the mortgagee for 20 years, the rent reserved being Rs. 40 per annum. The land revenue Rs. 12-0-9 was to be paid out of this yearly rent.

The plaintiff Pal Singh, a reversioner of Jawand Singh, sued for pre-emption on the allegation that, though the deed of the 11th of June 1921, on the face of it purported to be a mortgage-deed, the transaction was really a sale and that the form of the mortgage was adopted in order to defeat the right of pre-emption. A declaration was also claimed by the plaintiff to the effect that the alienation being without consideration and necessity shall not affect his reversionary rights. This latter relief was refused and no question as to it arises now. The claim for pre-emption was decreed by the Trial Court which was of opinion that the transaction was really a sale. On appeal the learned District Judge took a different view on the evidence and having found that the transaction really was one of a mortgage and not that of a sale dismissed the claim of the plaintiff.

This second appeal was preferred by the plaintiff and has been argued before me by Mr. Tek Chand, his learned Counsel. The chief contention put forward before me is that the conditions entered in the mortgage deed are such and the amount of the mortgage money would be so much at the end of 20 years that no reasonable person would think of redeeming the property. His contention is that, according to the condition relating to interest, the accumulated amount at the end of 20 years would come to Rs. 5,280. Thus along with the principal amount of Rs. 1,100 the total sum payable by the mortgagor for the redemption of the property would come to Rs. 6,380. The learned Counsel further contends that the fact that a patta was given to the mortgagee for 20 years clearly shows that it was intended to place the alienee in possession from the very beginning as a vendee. The total amount of rent for 20 years at the rate of Rs. 40 per annum would be Rs. 800. Out of this Rs. 240-15-0 would have to be deducted on account of revenue for 20 years. Thus the net total rent for 20 years would be Rs. 559-1-0. If this amount is deducted from Rs. 6,380 the balance left is Rs. 5,820-15-0. It is further argued that, according to the evidence on the record, the highest market value of the land at the date of the transaction was Rs. 50 a kanal. Thus the price of 39 kanals, 11 marlas or putting it roughly as 40 kanals would be Rs. 50 × Rs. 40 equal to Rs. 2,000. It is contended by the learned Counsel that no one would think of redeeming the land of the value of Rs. 2,000 by paying Rs. 5,820-15-0. The argument is plausible and had it been possible for me to interfere with a finding of fact recorded by the lower Appellate Court I might have agreed with the learned Counsel as to the effect of the evidence but the learned District Judge has found in unmistakable terms that the intention of the parties was to effect a mortgage. This is purely a question of fact and the finding of the learned District Judge is conclusive in second appeal. There are numerous rulings to be found reported in the various volumes of the Punjab Record in which it is laid down that the question whether a certain transaction is a mortgage or sale is a question of fact, see for instance Sunder Das v. Dhanpat Rai (1), Ahmad Khan v. Alam Khan (2) and Kapur Chand v. Chet Ram (3). Moreover, having regard to the fact that the deed on the face of it is a mortgage-deed, the mortgagor can redeem the mortgage if he likes and as long as there is a right of redemption it is impossible to say that a sale has taken place and the mortgagor cannot recover possession of the land on payment of the redemption money. It is not a question of the construction of a document which may be treated as a question of law. The question of intention is purely a question of fact, and I am constrained to hold that the findings of the lower Appellate Court are binding on this Court, and there is no room for interference in second appeal.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch III, para. 11—Decree transferred to Collector for execution—Collector, jurisdiction of Civil Court, powers of—Execution of decree—Property misdescribed in warrant of attachment—Auction-sale, validity of—Knowledge of parties.

No sooner is an order for transfer of a decree for execution to the Collector made than he is seized of the case and not on the date such order reaches him. Any transfer of the attached property subsequent to the date of the order of transfer during the pendency of the proceedings before him is void, [p 45, cols. 1 & 2.]

During the period the Collector has jurisdiction the Civil Court ceases to have any power to act in execution of the decree transferred [p 45, col 1.]

A mere misdescription in a warrant of attachment of property does not invalidate the auction sale and is merely an irregularity if the parties knew what had been attached and had been actually sold [p. 45, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 12th July 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 33 of 1924.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. D. Khandekar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Narain Teli, sued the defendants Ganpati and Tikaram in respect of a mortgage-deed dated 3rd October 1921 executed by Ganpati for Rs. 300 of which Rs. 85-8-0 was due on a previous mortgage. Tikaram was joined in the suit as he was alleged to have purchased the mortgaged subject which consisted of a half share in absolute occupancy field No. 62 in Mouza Kesori, Nagur. Tikaram's defence in the first Court rested amongst other grounds on the contention that the mortgage was void having been executed, while Collector's proceedings were pending thereanent.

The Subordinate Judge held that the mortgage-deed in suit was not void under Sch. III para. 11 of the C. P. C. The field we are concerned with is admittedly No. 62 but the Subordinate Judge found that in the Schedule attached to the warrant of attachment the number of the field was given as No. 63. On 30th September 1921 the decree was ordered to be transferred to the Collector and before him steps were taken as regards field No. 62 which was admittedly in the judgment-debtor's possession. The Subordinate Judge accordingly held that there having been no attachment of field No. 62, there would a fortiori be no valid sale thereof. The Collector's proceedings, therefore, being without jurisdiction, could not affect the validity of the mortgage-deed in suit executed on 3rd October 1921 and decree in favour of the plaintiff was granted accordingly.

The defendant Tikaram appealed against this decision and the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, held that although the order of transfer to the Collector was passed by the Executing Court on 30th September 1921 the proceedings did not reach the Collector till 16th November 1921; he accordingly held that the Collector was not seized of the proceedings on 3rd October 1921. On these and connected findings he dismissed the appeal.

The first point for decision in this appeal concerns the last mentioned finding. Reference has been made in this connection by the Pleader for the appellant to the phraseology of para. 1 of Sch. III of the C. P. C., viz., "Where the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector under s. 68, . . . ." as well as to the initial portion of para. 11 idem.

It is urged in view of these provisions that the Collector must be considered to have been seized of the case as from the date 30th September 1921 the date on which the order of transfer was passed and that in view of this fact the mortgage in suit was void under para. 11, Sch. III referred to above. An exactly similar point was considered by Hallifax, A. J. C., in Narayan v. Vithu (Second Appeal No. 573 of 1922, decided on 26th June 1924) where the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner remarked as follows:—

"This view also I am unable to accept. At the moment a Civil Court transfers a decree to another Court, whether it be another Civil Court or the Collector, it ceases to have any power to act in execution of that decree. But it cannot possibly be said that there is an interval, varying with the length of time the papers happen to take to reach the other Court, during which no Court has any jurisdiction. The possession of rights or powers does not depend upon knowledge of them. The Collector's position in this matter is exactly analogous to that of an heir to an estate, who has full power to deal with it from the moment of the death of the person he succeeds though he may not hear of it for months, and any alienation of his property by another during those months is no less invalid because he was not aware of his rights."

I find myself in complete agreement with this view. Clearly during the period from 30th September 1921 to 16th November 1921 either the Executing Court or the Collector had jurisdiction and the question for decision is which was seized of the case. I am aware of the decision of West, J., in Mahadaji V. Karandikar v. Hari D. Chikne (1), but for my own part I entertain no doubt that during the period the Collector has jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is to all practical purposes excluded, cf., Madho Prasad v. Hansa Kuar (2). The question before me, however, is as to from what date the Collector had jurisdiction for the purpose of the applicability of para. 11 of the said Schedule. It cannot be denied that, if there had been no ministerial or office delay in forwarding the case to the Collector and if Form C had been sent to him on 30th September 1921 or the following day, he would have had jurisdiction forthwith and para 11 would have applied. Now, having regard to the obvious principle underlying the said provision, I am satisfied that the desirability provided for therein must have been intended by the Legislature to have had effect from the date the order of transfer to the Collector was passed. From that date the Executing Court may be regarded as ceasing to exercise jurisdiction for all practical purpose. The initial language of para. 11 is significant in this connection. It is—

"So long as the Collector can exercise jurisdiction."

Potentially in the present case the Collector could exercise jurisdiction from 30th September 1921 although actually he did not do so till 16th November 1921. Two decisions of this Court have been quoted on behalf of respondent viz., Sonba v. Ganesha (3) and Harlal v. Narayan (4). The first decision does not deal with the exact point involved in this case and in the second one there was a mere remark by Hallifax, A. J. C., that the original proceedings "began on 2nd June 1917 when the Form C was received by the Collector." The same learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in the unreported case quoted above has given a more considered finding on the point involved, a finding with which I agree and the remark relied on by respondent in the 18 N. L. R. case quoted was a mere obiter which I do not regard as necessarily conclusive.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the present mortgage as having been executed during the pendency of the Collector's proceedings was void provided that the property sold therein was legally sold.

On the remaining point for decision as to whether it was Ganpati's field which was attached, I think the appeal must go back to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision on the merits. The real point for decision in this connection has been missed entirely by the Additional District Judge. That point is—was it applicant's field which was actually attached or not? There may have been only a misdescription of it in the warrant. A mere misdescription would not necessarily invalidate the sale and would amount to a mere irregularity if the parties concerned knew what had been attached and had been actually sold.

The judgment and decree appealed against are accordingly reversed and the appeal will go back to the lower Court for a fresh decision in accordance with the above remarks. Appellant will receive a certificate for refund of Court-fees. Other costs of this appeal will follow the event.

The giving of an erroneous decision on a point of law is not an irregularity or an illegality in the exercise of jurisdiction and does not justify interference in revision.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues for money due on a hundi drawn by the defendant in his favour. He had transferred the hundi to a certain firm, which, on failing to recover the money, through the Bank, returned the hundi to the plaintiff, with the Bank's note as to non-payment.

The Trial Court placed the onus of proving consideration for the hundi on the plaintiff, and found that he had not discharged it, and also held that the plaintiff could not sue on the hundi without its being re-endorsed to him by the firm to which he had transferred it. The Senior Subordinate Judge, to whom the plaintiff appealed, held that the onus should have been on the defendant to prove that there was no consideration for the hundi, and also held that the plaintiff could maintain the suit on the hundi. He, therefore, remanded the case for re-trial. The defendant has applied to this Court for revision.

There is, in my opinion, no ground for interference in revision, even supposing that the lower Appellate Court's decisions on the two points above mentioned were wrong, as the giving of an erroneous decision on a point of law is not an irregularity or illegality. *Karimullah v. attacked in revision. I dismiss the application with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant's husband Bhola (since deceased) executed the deed in question in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 73 on the 10th June 1917. The deed in suit is alleged to be a mortgage-deed by which 10 bighas 10 biswas tenancy land was transferred to plaintiff to secure payment of Rs. 73. The bond provided that the money borrowed would be re-paid on Baisakh Sudi Puranmashi 1327 Fasli and that should the money be not re-paid till the end of 1327 Fasli the creditor would be entitled to continue in possession. The deed in suit was described as a mortgage-deed. It appears that the plaintiff remained in possession of the tenancy during the lifetime of Bhola. He was, however, dispossessed by the defendant from the land after the death of Bhola in July 1922. He brought the present suit on the 20th March 1925 to recover Rs. 73 with interest, total Rs. 100. He prayed for a simple money-decree against the defendant.

The claim was resisted by the defendant on various grounds.

The learned Munsif framed several issues and rejected the claim holding that the mortgage in suit being a mortgage of tenancy land was void ab initio.

The plaintiff applied in revision under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act.

The applicant's learned Counsel has referred to the rulings in Ram Autar v. Ram Asre (1) and Bhairon v. Balak (2). The ruling in Bhairon v. Balak (2) is an authority for the proposition that a mortgage by a tenant-at-will is not void ab initio.

The deed in suit purports to be a mortgage-deed but it was not registered as required by law (see s. 59 of Act IV of 1882). The plaintiff himself has prayed for a simple money-decree on the basis of the deed. It is to be determined if he can sue for the money on the basis of the deed and if his claim is within time. The point of limitation was not considered or decided by the learned Munsif though he had framed an issue on that point.

The application is allowed the suit is remanded to the Court below with direction to re-instate it under its original number and to dispose of it after determining the remaining points involved in the manner required by law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

An assignee of a decree made an application for being substituted in place of the decree-holder and for execution of the decree. The application was dismissed as the assignee produced no evidence to prove the assignment. A subsequent application for execution made by the assignee was dismissed on the ground of res judicata. Thereafter the assignee transferred his rights under the assignment back to the decree-holder, who then assigned the decree to a third person and the latter made an application for execution of the decree.

Held, that by the re-assignment of the decree in favour of the decree-holder, the latter obtained no better right to execute the decree than the assignee himself possessed and that consequently the second assignee was in no better position than the original assignee or the decree-holder and was not entitled to execute the decree. JUDGMENT.—Madhanna and Markandi obtained a money decree against Pandurang in Civil Suit No. 359 of 1917. On the 15th August 1921 they assigned this decree to Tukaram. Tukaram applied to be substituted in place of the decree holders and for execution of the decree. This application was dismissed as Tukaram produced no evidence to prove the assignment. Tukaram made a second application for execution which was dismissed on the ground of res judicata. Thereafter Tukaram transferred his rights under the assignment back to the decree-holders Madhanna and Markandi. Madhanna and Markandi then assigned the decree to Sambhashiva and Raghoba. The proceedings out of which this appeal arises were taken by Sambhashiva and Raghoba for execution of the decree. The Original Court dismissed the application on the ground of res judicata. The lower Appellate Court set aside that order and directed the execution to proceed. The judgment-debtor appeals.

It is admitted in this Court that if Tukaram had transferred the decree to a third party instead of re-transferring it to the decree-holders such third party would have been bound by all the disabilities of Tukaram and could not have executed the decree.

The lower Appellate Court in this connection writes:—

"The question of the principle of res judicata as being applicable to the present case is the preliminary point on which the decision of the lower Court is based. The lower Court has not decided the case on its merits. The main question in this case is whether by the transfer dated the 11th July 1922 the original assignment in favour of Tukaram had become extinguished, or, the re-transfer dated the 11th July 1922 clothed the original decree-holders with the rights of mere transferees from Tukaram. I should think that the original assignment dated the 15th of August 1922 became void by means of the re-sale or re-transfer by Tukaram in favour of Madhanna and Markandi the original decree-holders. The lower Court has not cited any authority nor has the Pleader for the respondent in this Court shown me any law on the subject whereby the transfer by Tukaram did not result in extinguishing the assignment in favour of Tukaram. When under the re-sale the decree-holders Madhanna and Markandi became entitled to execute the decree afresh, it seems to me that the only result that could ensue from the re-transfer was the voiding of the assignment in favour of Tukaram which was dated the 15th of August 1921. In this view the principle of res judicata would not apply even though the motive of the several assignments be what it is suspected to be. In short the present appellant cannot be held to be a representative of Tukaram and be bound by what orders had been passed against Tukaram. I hold, therefore, that the applicant is entitled to execute the decree and that the question on the merits should have been tried by the lower Court."

It is not easy to follow what the lower Appellate Court means unless it be supposed to hold what it has not anywhere said that in spite of the assignment by the decree-holders their right to execute the decree continued to exist in a state of suspense. The argument advanced by the learned Pleader for the respondents is that all that the Court decided in the two proceedings taken by Tukaram in execution was that Tukaram was not the assignee of the decree-holders. That being so, the actual assignment upon which Tukaram's applications were based must be treated as ineffectual or non-existent and the decree-holders' original right to the decree continued to exist as if no assignment had been made and he was competent to assign it to the respondents. The subsequent re-transfer by Tukaram to the decree-holders, it is said, was a superfluity. I cannot accept this argument which amounts to this, that an assignment valid in all respects and treated as such by the parties thereto may be nullified by the assignee's failure to produce evidence in proof of it when he applies for execution. The decree-holders had parted with all their rights and had no dormant or suspended right which could be said to have been revived. The assignment in favour of Tukaram remained in force as between the parties thereto in spite of the decisions in proceedings taken by Tukaram, and it must be held that whatever right the decree-holders acquired subsequent to the transfer to Tukaram was acquired by them only as Tukaram's transferees and there was not any right in suspense which had revived. It is, as I have said above, admitted that if Tukaram had transferred his right under the assignment to a person other than the decree-holders, that person could not have been entitled to execute the decree because of the decision against Tukaram in the proceedings taken by him. I see no reason why the fact that Tukaram's transferees are the decree-holders should make any difference. I hold that the decree-holders as the transferees of Tukaram were in no better position than Tukaram and were debarred from executing the decree. That being so, their transferees also have no right to execute the decree. I set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the case for further trial and restore the order of the first Court. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in all Courts and bear their own. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act (IV of 1910), ss. 52, 52A—Notice that tenure has been included within zemindari, publication of, proof of—Notice published before passing of Amending Act of 1910, whether can be proved by certificate granted subsequently—Cess, liability to pay.

The publication of the notice mentioned in s. 52 of the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act must be strictly proved before the liability of the holder of a tenure in respect of a cess can arise. [p. 49, col. 1.]

A certificate given by the Collector in accordance with the provisions of s. 52A of the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act that a notice under s. 52 of the Act has been duly published, is conclusive proof of the fact that the publication was made. It is immaterial that the certificate refers to a publication which took place before the passing of the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act IV of 1910 which added s. 52A to the Bengal Cess (Amendment) Act. The Amending Act only provides the method of proving the publication of the notice. It creates no new right nor does it affect any existing right. A notice published before the passing of the Amending Act, may, therefore, be proved by the production of a certificate from the Collector given after the passing of the Amending Act that the publication had been duly made.

Mr. Narendra Chandra Bose and Babu Nalin Chandra Paul, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of suit for recovery of cesses from the holders of a rent-free tenure. The plaintiff's case was that he was made liable for the payment of cesses for the rent-free tenure held by the defendants and had paid the same, that he now brought the suit for the recovery of the amount so paid, that the inclusion of this rent-free tenure within the zemindari of the plaintiff was duly published by the Collector under s. 52 of the Cess Act on the 29th of June, 1908, and that after the publication of the notification the defendants became liable to pay the cesses to the plaintiff. The defendants in the suit denied the publication of the notification, under s. 52. It appears from the case of Ashanulla Khan Bahadur v. Trilochan Bagchi (1) that the publication of such notice should be strictly proved before the liability of the defendants can arise. To obviate the difficulty of proving such Notification Act IV of 1910 (B. C.) added s. 52A to the Cess Act which runs as follows:—"Whenever any notice has been duly published under s. 52, the Collector shall sign a certificate to that effect, and such certificate shall be conclusive proof that the publication has been duly made." It appears that in compliance with this section the Collector of Midnapore signed a certificate on the 28th of November 1921. The plaintiff in order to prove the due publication of the notification under s. 52 produced the certificate so signed by the Collector and contended that this certificate should be accepted as the conclusive proof of the fact that the notification under s. 52 was published on the 29th of June 1908.

The Courts below have held that this certificate by the Collector is not sufficient in law for proving the publication of the notification under s. 52, because the publication was made before the amending Act came into operation. As there was no other independent evidence in proof of the fact of the publication the plaintiff's suit was dismissed by both the Courts below.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has contended that this was not the case of giving any retrospective effect to any enactment. Under s. 52A the Collector may sign a certificate at any time after the publication of the certification under s. 52 of the Cess Act. The certificate produced in the case proves that notice under s. 52 was published on the 29th of June 1908. The amending Act only provides the method of proving the publication made; it creates no new right nor does it affect any existing right. There is nothing in s. 52A which prevents the Collector from signing a certificate at any time after the publication has been made. When such a certificate is given according to s. 52A such a certificate will prove conclusively that the publication was made. This certificate proves conclusively the publication on the 29th of June 1908. The liability of the defendants is established when such a publication is proved and the certificate proves that publication.

I think, therefore, the contention of the appellant must prevail and it should be held that the plaintiff has conclusively proved by the production of the certificate that the notification under s. 52 was published on the 29th of June, 1908.

The judgments of the Courts below are set aside and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance for the trial of the suit on the merits. The plaintiff will get the costs of this appeal. Costs of the lower Courts will abide the result.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 235—Directors of Company, decision of—Imprudent act—Personal liability of Directors, when arises—Personal gain acquired by Director—Refund—Managing Director, duties of—Act inspired by personal motives—Liability.

Directors of a Company acting within their powers and with reasonable care, and honestly in the interests of the Company, are not personally liable for losses which the Company may suffer by reason of their mistakes or errors of judgment. [p. 57, col. 1]

Facts which show imprudence in the exercise of powers conferred upon the Directors of a Company will not subject them to personal responsibility; the imprudence must be so great and manifest as to amount to gross negligence, as for example where the Directors are cognizant of circumstances of such a character, so plain, so manifest, and so simple in operation, that no man with any ordinary degree of prudence acting on his own behalf would have entered into such a transaction as the Directors have entered into. But if the Directors are authorized to do an act in itself imprudent, they are not to be held responsible for the consequences of doing it. [p. 56, col. 2, p. 57, col. 1.]

In respect of duties which, having regard to the exigencies of business and the Articles of Association, may properly be left to some other official, the Directors are, in the absence of grounds for suspicion, justified in trusting that official to perform such duties honestly. [p. 57, cols. 1 & 2]

The Directors must, however, observe good faith towards their share-holders and towards those who take shares from the Company and become co-adventurers with themselves and others who may join them. The maxim caveat emptor has no application to such cases, and Directors who so use their powers as to obtain benefits for themselves at the expense of the share-holders, without informing them of the fact, cannot retain those benefits and must account for them to the Company so that all the share-holders may participate in them. [p. 57, col. 2]

The mere fact that the Directors of a Company carrying on a banking business allow advances to be made on the strength of a promise by the debtor to execute a mortgage instead of the mortgage itself, does not amount to an act of misfeasance on the part of the Directors so as to make them personally liable to the extent of the amount of the advances. [p. 56, col. 2]

Where the Directors of a Bank permit a depositor to make an over-draft and one of the Directors who is a creditor of such depositor receives a portion of the amount represented by the over-draft in payment of the debt due to him by the depositor, such Director cannot be allowed to retain the amount to the detriment of the share-holders and the creditors of the Bank and is liable to refund it to the Bank. [p. 57, col. 2.]

The duties of a Managing Director are of a higher standard than of an ordinary Director, and where by any act of the Managing Director which is inspired by motives of personal gain the Bank suffers loss, the Managing Director is liable to make good such loss [p. 58, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

(October 5, 1925)—These proceedings originated in summons issued under s. 235 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, on an application presented by one Mr. S. C. Mitra, who was appointed liquidator by a resolution of the share-holders dated the 15th September 1923 of the Company called the Bank of Oudh Limited. The array of the respondents to the liquidator's application is as follows:—

1. Thakur Nawab Ali Khan, taluqdar of Akbarpur, district Sitapur.
2. Lala Jai Ram Das, merchant, proprietor of Lyallpur Sugar Company.
3. Raja Hukum Tej Pratap Singh, Raja of Pratapner.
4. Kunwar Shri Krishna.
5. Lala Jagmohan Lal Rastogi.
6. Kalidas Kapur.
7. Lala Bhola Nath Mehrotra, rais.
8. Mr. F. A. Labantik, Engineer.
9. Babu Manohar Lal Gupta.
10. Mr. Jang Bahadur Sinha, merchant.
11. Kunwar Sarup Narain, zemindar.

To this were added Mr. C. S. Oehme and Pandit Ramnath Dave under the order of the Court dated the 14th April 1925.

The Company was incorporated on the 25th October 1920 and the Bank was floated sometime in February 1921. The last-mentioned respondent, Pandit Ramnath Dave, was appointed Manager of the Bank by a resolution passed at a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the 6th November 1920. He occupied that position till the date of liquidation. The other respondents were the Directors of the Bank and the respondents Lala Jagmohan Lal and Babu Jang Bahadur Sinha were also Managing Directors. The following table will show at a glance the date on which each of the respondents joined the Board of Directors and also the date on which he ceased to be a Director.

12	Mr. C. I. S. Oehme ...	19th February 1921	12th July 1921

Lala Jagmohan Lal held the office of the Managing Director from the 19th December 1921 and continued to hold it till the date of liquidation. Babu Jang Bahadur Sinha was the Managing Director from the 19th February 1921 till the 12th August 1921. The respondent, Raja Hukam Tej Protap Bahadur Singh, died during the pendency of these proceedings and no steps have been taken to bring on the record any of his legal representatives. Service of summons could not be effected, in spite of strenuous efforts, on the respondent, Kunwar Sri Krishna. Mr. Oehme lives for some time past at Rangoon. He has appeared neither personally nor through any Pleader of the Court. I have thought it advisable to conclude these proceedings by treating Raja Hukam Tej Protap Bahadur Singh, Mr. Oehme and K. Srikrishna as no party to the application and have given liberty to the liquidator to take any legal action he may deem fit as against these persons hereafter. It is also necessary to mention that one Babu Peare Lal Bhargava was also a Director of the Bank from the date of its incorporation till about the middle of July 1921 when he died.

The liquidator claims compensation from the respondents for their acts of misfeasance and breach of trust in respect of the following four transactions:—

1. Over-draft without any security allowed to Mr. E. A. Labanti to the extent of Rs. 91,516 between the 4th March 1921 and the 20th September 1921.

2. Over-draft without any security allowed to Mr. E. A. Labanti from the 20th September 1921 to the 7th July 1922 to the extent of Rs. 41,393-15-4.

3. Over-draft without any security allowed to Messrs Labanti and Co., Limited of Lucknow from the 21st October 1921 up to the 12th June 1922 to the extent of Rs. 4,303-5-6.

4. Over-draft without any security allowed to the Upper India Investment Limited (now in liquidation) from the 19th April 1922 up to the 6th February 1923 to the extent of Rs 28,927-5 0.

The ground on which the liquidator seeks to make the respondents personally liable for the sums of money mentioned above together with interest thereon is stated in a somewhat cryptic form in para. 7 of the application. That paragraph is as follows:—

"7. That the transactions detailed in para. 5 of the application are on the face of them so reckless and extravagant in their nature as lead the applicant to infer either fraud or gross and wilful negligence on the part of the persons concerned in the management of the aforesaid Bank and are nothing short of breach of trust on the part of the Directors of the Bank during whose tenure of office the aforesaid transactions were entered upon."

The respondents have generally denied that they are guilty of any act of misfeasance or breach of trust of fraud or gross and wilful negligence. They have also pleaded ignorance of the transactions which form the subject-matter of the charges stated in the liquidator's application and good faith. One of the respondents, Thakur Nawab Ali Khan, has also put forward bar of limitation to the applicant's claim. Some of the respondents have entered the witness-box and given evidence in relation to the subject-matter of the charges. They are Thakur Nawab Ali Khan, Lala Jagmohan Lal, Babu Bhola Nath Mehrotra, Mr. E. A. Labanti, Babu Manohar Lal Gupta, Babu Jang Bahadur Sinha and Pandit Ramnath Dave.

No material facts are in dispute in these proceedings. The controversy relates to the inferences and the legal consequences which may flow from the admitted or proved facts. It is proved by the books of the Bank in the possession of the liquidator and shown to the respondents at the trial that the over-drafts as stated in the liquidator's application were, as a matter of fact, made and no argument was addressed to me by or on behalf of any one of the respondents, challenging the accuracy of the proof just now mentioned. The exact nature and specific details of these transactions will, however, be stated by me in the course of this judgment.

It will be convenient to take up first the over-draft transaction with Mr. E. A. Labanti. In this connection the earliest document on the record is the copy of a letter dated the 14th July 1921 addressed by Mr. Labanti to the Manager of the Bank. This copy has been accepted by both sides as admissible evidence in the case. I think it necessary to incorporate the whole of that letter in this judgment.

"Dear Sir,

"In continuation of our verbal conversation, we beg to submit this our application for a loan of rupees one and-a-half lakhs on the security of our buildings and lands, valued at rupees three lakhs, for which a true copy of the valuation certificate is herewith enclosed. We may here also mention that, though our property has been valued at three lakhs by Messrs. Lane Brown and Hewlett, Government Valuers, the property is worth very much more.

"The mortgage to be in the first case for one year, or three years. We give below a list of our creditors, with the approximate sums due them, from which it will be seen that you will only have to pay the decreed amount No. 1 on the list, as the remainder 1cm. No. 2 to No. 6 will not be paid in cash as they have agreed to deposit their respective amounts with your Bank on a fixed deposit account.

"List of creditors is as follows:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
1. Decree 'Mortgage' . . .	43,000	0	0
2. Babu Triloki Nath Bhargava . . .	45,000	0	0
3. Babu Peari Lal Bhargava . . .	22,000	0	0
4. Mr. C. S. Pandya . . .	13,000	0	0
5. Pandit Kandhya Lal . . .	6,000	0	0
6. Mr. J. B. Sinha . . .	8,000	0	0

Total Rs. . . 1,37,000 0 0

"There is another mortgage of rupees fifty thousand on our property, which mortgage will fall due on the 13th of November 1921 and which when due will have to be taken over by your Bank, bringing the total amount due to rupees two lakhs.

"As the matter is most urgent, we shall thank you for an immediate reply if possible.

"Thanking you in anticipation."

(Exhibit L.).

From the dates given in the liquidator's application and stated by me in an earlier portion of the judgment it will be seen that advances to Mr. Labanti had commenced on the 4th March 1921, that is to say, 4 months 10 days earlier than the letter of the 14th July 1921. The reasonable inference is that the transaction with Mr. Labanti was in course of negotiation before the formal application for the loan above referred to was made by Mr. Labanti. As to when, by whom and in what circumstances the advances prior to the 14th July 1921 were sanctioned the record of the case is absolutely silent. In this state of evidence the only proper conclusion seems to me to be that the advances were permitted in anticipation of the settlement with Mr. Labanti.

It appears from the minute of the proceedings of a meeting of the Board of Directors that a notice was issued on the 29th July 1921 for a Board's meeting to be held on the 30th July 1921. Item No. 3 of that notice was as follows:—

"To dispose of the application of Messrs. Labanti and Co., for an advance of Rs. 1,50,000 by mortgage over his kothi." This notice is contained in Ex. 3. On it are endorsed the following remarks relevant to the question under consideration made by the Director, Babu Jang Bahadur Sinha:—

"If the transaction be considered sound by the co-directors and if the Bank can afford the loan may be sanctioned. This will better the situation of the Bank as 5 per cent. commission will be a substantial earning and will cover the preliminary and other expenses" The proposed meeting did not come off until the 12th August 1921. At this meeting the following gentlemen were present:—

Mr. C. S. Oehme.

Mahant Sant Rain Das.

Raja Pratap Ner.

The resolutions passed at that meeting and which have a bearing on the present case, were as follows:—

"Resolved that the Manager be directed to correspond with Messrs. Ram Chandra Ram Saran to inquire if they are agreeable to take payment of the first mortgage just now and the second one subsequently.

"Resolved that the Manager may take the agent of the mortgagee to the undersigned to discuss the matter." The "undersigned" was Mr. C. Sandford Oehme (Ex. 3). It is agreed that the mortgages mentioned in these resolutions related to Mr. Labanti's property.

The proceedings of the meeting of the Board of Directors dated the 19th December 1921 supply the next relevant matter. At this meeting the following Directors were present:—

Raja Hukum Tej Pratap Singh.

Mahant Sant Rain Das.

Thakur Nawab Ali Khan.

Lala Jagmohan Lal was appointed a Director and also a Managing Director of the Bank and the sixth resolution passed at that meeting was—

"Resolved that the undersigned Directors disapprove of the manner in which Messrs. Labanti and Co.'s transaction has been done in utter disregard of the directions laid down in the Board's meeting dated 12th August 1921 but as the money has already been advanced to them a mortgage-deed with sufficient and proper security should be executed by Messrs. Labanti and Co., and the Managing Director be requested to see to its completion." It is agreed that "Messrs. Labanti and Co." is a mistake for Mr. E. A. Labanti (Ex. 3). Having regard to the dates of the over-draft transactions with Mr. Labanti it will be seen that the first series of over-drafts aggregating to Rs. 91,516 had already been completed and a portion of the second had also been perfected before the meeting of the 19th December 1921 was held.

From a perusal of the minutes of an extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the Bank (Ex. 4) held on the 3rd October 1922 it appears that a resolution was passed that "a commission be appointed to investigate the affairs of the Bank and report at the next meeting" . . . The commission consisted of the following gentlemen:—

"J. B. Sinha (Jang Bahadur Sinha).

N. K. Shavaksha.

Mr. Murari Lal Bhargava, and

B. Manohar Lal."

At this meeting the following gentlemen amongst others were present:—

Thakur Nawab Ali Khan.

Mr. E. A. Labanti.

Kunwar Shri Krishna.

B. Bhola Nath Mehrotra.

B. Manohar Lal Gupta.

B. Jang Bahadur Sinha, and Babu Jagmohan Lal.

On the following day, that is the 4th October 1922, a meeting of the Board of Directors was held. At this meeting a resolution was passed requesting the Managing Director, that is Lala Jagmohan Lal, to afford every facility to the commission in the matter of the investigation of affairs of the Bank. An other resolution passed was "that a suit be at once filed against Mr. E. A. Labanti and P. A. Labanti and Co. for the recovery of the money due to the Bank from them. In this connection the Directors thankfully accept the offer of a temporary advance of the following items from the under-noted Directors with a view to enable the Bank to proceed with the case."

	Rs.
1. Thakur Nawab Ali Khan ...	500
2. Raja Sahab Partapner (i. e. Raja Hukum Tej Pratap Bahadur Singh). ...	750
3. L. Manohar Lal Gupta ...	250
	<hr/> Rs. 1,500"

Finally the following resolution appears in the proceedings:—"On proposal being put up by L. Manohar Lal Gupta it was resolved that the Managing Director be requested to resign his position in view of the affairs of the Bank and he may also be requested to refund the salary he has so far received in view of the circumstances of the Company and that he may be retained as a Director to render his assistance to the future administration by his past experience and knowledge of the affairs of the Bank. Lala Jagmohan Lal kindly having consented to the terms of this resolution, it was further resolved to send him a letter of thanks on behalf of the Board for his ready acceptance of the proposal." To my mind the idea underlying this resolution is that as the Bank was fast approaching the state of bankruptcy it was considered advisable to dispense with the services of a Salaried Managing Director.

It was assumed at the hearing, and I think rightly that one of the matters with which the commission was charged was an inquiry into the over-draft advances to Mr. Labanti. It is unfortunate that the record of these proceedings is wholly silent as to the result of the inquiry, if any. The first and the only report of the Directors was published on the 21st June 1922. The report is signed by Kunwar Shri Krishna, Jagmohan Lal and E. A. Labanti as Directors. To this report is also attached "balance-sheet of the Bank of Oudh, Limited, Lucknow as at 31st March 1922." This sheet is again separately signed by the three Directors mentioned above and also by Ramnath Dave, the manager. It also bears the certificate of the auditors, Basant Ram and sons (Ex. A2). The report together with the balance-sheet was intended to be presented at an ordinary general meeting of the share-holders to be held on the 8th July 1922. This proposed meeting was not held, however, until the 19th November 1922. At this meeting amongst others, the following gentlemen were present:—

Mr. E. A. Labanti.
Lala Jagmohan Lal, and Kanwar Shri Kirshna (Ex. 4).

In relation to the Directors' report the following resolution was passed:—
"That the balance-sheet be and is hereby passed and adopted subject to the auditors' report read by the chairman before the meeting." Now in this balance-sheet on the side of the assets are mentioned several debts including the following:

- |                                       |                    |
|---------------------------------------|--------------------|
| 1. Debts considered good              | Rs. a. p.          |
| in respect of which the               |                    |
| Bank has no security                  |                    |
| other than debtors' personal security | ... 1,18,974 10 7  |
| 2. Of the above debts due             |                    |
| from a Director                       | ... 1,35,133 14 10 |
| 3. Bad or doubtful debts...           | Nil.               |

In respect of the second entry the following statement appears in the report:—

"It would be further observed from the balance-sheet before you that a sum of Rs. 1,35,133-14-10 is shown as due from one of the Directors of the Bank. As a matter of fact this sum was advanced to the gentleman long before he was elected as Director which was on the 1st March 1922 (the last day of the period under report) and the sum had to be shown in the balance-sheet to fulfil the requirements of the Indian Companies Act." It is agreed in these proceedings that the second entry in the balance-sheet and the statement in the report relate to the over-draft transactions of Mr. E. A. Labanti.

Now some more facts must be stated in relation to the transactions discussed in the preceding paragraphs. A portion (that is Rs. 48,300) of the first series of the over-drafts was subsequently secured by an assignment to the Bank of a fourth mortgage in respect on the Labanti buildings by the mortgagee Babu Trilokinath Bhargava. This Babu Trilokinath Bhargava is the same gentleman who is mentioned at No. 2 of the list of creditors given in Mr. Labanti's letter of the 14th July 1921 already quoted and it is agreed that the debt shown opposite to his name in the said list was the sum due to him under the mortgage just now mentioned. The mortgage was transferred by the Bank to a firm of the name of Baldeo Das Balgobind in satisfaction of a claim arising out of a deposit standing in the books of the Bank in favour of the firm. The entry dated the 9th July 1922 shows that there was a credit balance for a sum of Rs. 32,890 in favour of the firm. It also appears from the evidence of Lala Jagmohan Lal that one Pandit Achuta Ram, the treasurer of the Bank, had deposited a sum of Rs. 15,000 with the Bank as security for the discharge of the duties of the office which he held. When Achuta Ram resigned his appointment he asked the Bank for the return of his security deposit. The Bank was unable to do so. To settle this transaction the firm gave a hand-note to Achuta Ram for Rs. 15,000 and the Bank set off that amount against the price of the mortgage. In other words the Bank sold the mortgage to the firm for the credit balance of the 19th July 1922 and this amount of Rs. 15,000. The result was that the balance due to the Bank from Mr. E. A. Labanti in respect of the first series of the over-draft was Rs. 91,516 minus Rs. 48,300, that is Rs. 48,216. A suit for the recovery of this balance was instituted by the Bank in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow against Mr. E. A. Labanti and a decree was obtained for Rs. 48,000 odd. Several attempts in execution of the decree were made to realize the amount due thereunder but all have failed and no action has been taken in respect of the second series of the over-drafts. Finally on the 14th July 1925 during the pendency of these proceedings Mr. E. A. Labanti applied to the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow for a declaration of his insolvency.

One word as to the nature of the advances made by the Bank to Mr. Labanti. Out of the total sum of the two series of the over-drafts, Rs. 41,393-15-4 was paid by the Bank to Mr. E. A. Labanti personally and to persons holding cheques drawn by him. The figure just now mentioned also includes interest on those advances. This is proved by the entries in the books of the Bank now in the possession of the liquidator. An abstract of those books has been prepared and filed in these proceedings. The rest of the money covered by the over-drafts was dealt with in the following manner:—Mr. E. A. Labanti's creditors absolved him from liability for their claims and in lieu thereof accepted from the Bank fixed deposit receipts for the sums of money due to them from Mr. Labanti. Amongst these creditors were Babu Jang Bahadur Sinha and Babu Peare Lal Bhargava (now deceased). Both of them were Directors of the Company. They are both mentioned in the list of creditors as given in Mr. Labanti's letter dated the 14th July 1921. It is agreed that these two gentlemen received fixed deposit receipts from the Bank for Rs. 7,630 and Rs. 21,227-10-9 respectively. The receipts for the debts of Babu Peare Lal Bhargava were issued in the names of his son, brother and nephew. Babu Jang Bahadur Sinha realised in cash from the Bank Rs. 2,370-7-6 on the 2nd May 1922, Rs. 2,439-13-3 on the 17th November 1922 and Rs. 3,034-0-6 on the 7th January 1922 on his fixed deposit receipts as they fell due.

As to the mortgage security offered by Mr. Labanti in his letter of the 14th July 1921 it is enough to say that no mortgage was ever executed. It appears from the evidence that at an early stage of the transaction a draft of the proposed deed of mortgage was prepared and even a stamp of the requisite value was purchased. Mr. Labanti says that the mortgage-deed was not executed for the reason that the Bank had no funds large enough to fulfil the agreement for the loan of Rs. 1,50,000. On the other hand, Ramnath Dave says that Mr. Labanti refused to execute the promised mortgage. In this conflict of evidence I am prepared to accept the statement of Ramnath Dave as more reliable because it is consistent with admitted facts and probabilities of the case. It appears from the proceedings of the meetings of the Board of Directors, to which reference has already been made, that the Board was always anxious to complete the mortgage transaction and I see no reason whatsoever why the Directors should have refused to get it through for the sums that they had already advanced to Mr. Labanti even if they had no money to make up the total of Rs. 1,50,000. Mr. Labanti has filed certain documents showing that he called upon the Bank to complete the loan of Rs. 1,50,000 and to have the mortgage executed. I prefer to take the view that after having received nearly all which the Bank had promised to advance, Mr. Labanti invented excuses to extricate himself from the performance of his part of the transaction.

At the conclusion of the proceedings before me Mr. Labanti personally and also through his Counsel, Mr. K. P. Misra, agreed that an order of payment of the sum of Rs. 76,593-15-4 due from him to the Bank may be made against Mr. Labanti in these proceedings. This concludes the narrative of the events so far as the charge founded on the over-draft transactions of Mr. Labanti is concerned.

Now I come to the charge of the over-draft of Rs. 23,927-5 allowed to the Upper India Investment Limited (now under liquidation) between the 9th April 1922 and the 6th February 1923. The Managing Director of the Investment Company was Kunwar Shri Krishna. The money covered by the over-draft was paid in cash under cheques issued by Kunwar Shri Krishna and as we have seen before he was also one of the Directors of the Bank from the 19th December 1921 to the 15th September 1923. The overdraft was, therefore, made while Kunwar Shri Krishna was the Director of the Bank and the Managing Director of the Investment Company. It also appears from the evidence that Jagmohan Lal's brother, Balgobind, was one of the Directors of the Upper India Investment Limited. This Balgobind was one of the partners of the firm Baldeo Das and Balgobind, whose dealing with the Bank has already been mentioned in this judgment. Baldeo Das is the father of Lala Jagmohan Lal. In his evidence in these proceedings Lala Jagmohan Lal says that the firm is owned by Balgobind alone and that he has no interest in that firm. It would be a severe strain on my credulity if I were to accept the truth of Lala Jagmohan Lal's version of his relationship with the firm. He admits that his father, brother and he constitute a joint Hindu family: they all live in one and the same house and mess together. He also admits that there has been no partition. My finding, therefore, is that he is a partner in the firm of Baldeo Das and Balgobind.

The third charge relates to the overdraft of Rs. 4,303-5-6 allowed to Messrs. Labanti & Co., Limited. On the statement of Mr. E. A. Labanti in the witness-box it is quite clear to me that the loan advanced by the Bank to Messrs. Labanti & Co., was settled by a cheque issued by Mr. Labanti on his separate account with the Bank and the subsequent entry in the books of the Bank as against Messrs. Labanti & Co., was due to the mistake that some cheques issued by Mr. Labanti on his personal account were thrown into the account of the Company. At the hearing no argument was addressed to me as regards this overdraft. This charge, therefore, fails altogether.

I now proceed to record my conclusions of facts as regards the two charges of overdrafts allowed to Mr. E. A. Labanti discussed in the preceding portions of this judgment. Mr. Labanti's letter dated the 14th July 1921 clearly contained an offer of a mortgage of the Labanti buildings in consideration of a loan of Rs. 1,50,000 to be advanced by the Bank. Though there is no clear record of a formal acceptance of the said offer by the Bank but from the conduct of the parties concerned it is amply manifest to me that the offer was accepted by the Board of Directors as a whole. Thus there was a complete contract between Mr. Labanti and the Directors of the Bank in respect of the transaction of the loan of Rs. 1,50,000 by the Bank to Mr. Labanti in consideration of Mr. Labanti giving a mortgage of the Labanti buildings as a security for the loan. All the Directors of the Bank at the time when Mr. Labanti opened the negotiations were a party to this contract. Indeed the advances were made to Mr. Labanti even previous to the offer and I hold that they were made with the consent of all the Directors then on the Board in anticipation of the contract. I further hold that all the subsequent advances which constitute the two series of overdrafts under consideration were made within the knowledge of the Board of Directors as it stood from time to time and the contract mentioned above was accepted by the Board as sufficient security for the advances. The Directors were all along confident, and they had no reason to be otherwise, that Mr. Labanti would perform his part of the contract by executing the promised mortgage. The confidence thus reposed was abused and the mortgage was never executed. The substance of the charge against the Directors is, therefore, this that they allowed the advances to be made to Mr. Labanti on the strength of his promise to execute the mortgage instead of the mortgage itself.

The Bank Company was formed and formally incorporated without any Articles of Association. Thus there were no limitations to and restrictions on the powers of the Directors beyond what may arise out of their duties imposed generally by the law applicable to the case. It follows that lending money on the security of the contract mentioned above was not ultra vires of the Directors. It is quite clear that if Mr. Labanti had executed the mortgage which he had offered to do the present application could never have been filed.

The foregoing conclusions and observations naturally lead to the consideration of the law applicable to the subject in hand. It appears to me to be settled law that facts which show imprudence in the exercise of powers conferred upon Directors will not subject them to personal responsibility, the imprudence must be so great and manifest as to amount to crassa negligentia, as for example, if they were cognizant of circumstances of such a character, so plain, so manifest, and so simple in operation, that no men with any ordinary degree of prudence acting on their own behalf, would have entered into such a transaction as they entered into. But if they are authorised to do an act in itself imprudent, they are not to be held responsible for the consequences of doing it. Nor are they liable for mere errors of judgment." This is a quotation from the Law of Banking by Heber Hart. Reference is made therein to Overend Gurney & Co. v. Gibb (1), Hunt's case (2) and London Financial Association v. Kelk (3). I have read the reports of these cases and have found that they fully support the view expressed in the quotation given above. The principle was again stated by Lindley, M. R. in the case of Lagunas Nitrate Company v. Lagunas Syndicate (4) in these words:

"The third principle is that the Directors of a Company acting within their powers, and with reasonable care, and honestly in the interest of the Company, are not personally liable for losses which the Company may suffer by reason of their mistakes or errors of judgment". In the recent case of In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Company Limited (5), Romer, J., in an exhaustive judgment if I may respectfully say so, expounded the law bearing on the subject under consideration. It will be sufficient to quote from the head-note of the report:

"In discharging those duties a Director (a) must act honestly, and (b) must exercise such degree of skill and diligence as would amount to the reasonable care which an ordinary man might be expected to take, in the circumstances, on his own behalf. But, (c) he need not exhibit in the performance of his duties a greater degree of skill than may reasonably be expected from a person of his knowledge and experience, in other words, he is not liable for mere errors of judgment; (d) he is not bound to give continuous attention to the affairs of his Company; his duties are of an intermittent nature to be performed at periodical Board meetings, and at meetings of any committee to which he is appointed, and though not bound to attend all such meetings he ought to attend them when reasonably able to do so; and (e) in respect of all duties which having regard to the exigencies of business and the Articles of Association, may properly be left to some other official, he is, in the absence of grounds for suspicion, justified in trusting that official to perform such duties honestly."

By applying the law enunciated in the preceding paragraph to the conclusions of fact already stated I must hold that the liquidator's application in respect of the charges in the matter of over-drafts to Mr. Labanti fails as against the Directors as a body.

There is, however, one aspect of the case arising out of the charge in relation to the over-drafts mentioned above which requires special consideration, we have seen that amongst the creditors of Mr. Labanti who accepted fixed deposit receipts from the Bank in lieu of their claims against him was Mr. Jang Bahadur Sinha. It is admitted that on the dates on which he accepted those receipts he was one of the Directors of the Company. It is also admitted that he cashed three of those receipts out of the funds of the Bank. The aggregate amount of the money which he thus received was the sum of Rs. 7,844-5-3. Obviously he cannot be allowed to retain this money to the detriment of the share-holders and the creditors of the Company. In Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Company (6), Lindley, M. R. said:—

"The Court of Chancery has always exacted from Directors the observance of good faith towards their share-holders and towards those who take shares from the Company and become co-adventurers with themselves and others who may join them. The maxim "caveat emptor" has no application to such cases and Directors who so use their powers as to obtain benefits for themselves at the expense of the share-holders, without informing them of the fact, cannot retain those benefits and must account for them to the Company, so that all the share-holders may participate in them. Gilbert's case (7) is only one of many instances illustrating this principle."

Mr. Jang Bahadur Sinha has argued that he was not a Director of the Company when he cashed two of the three fixed deposit receipts on the 7th January 1922 and the 2nd May 1922 and consequently he is not liable for the sums received by him on those two dates. But he was a Director from the beginning up to the 12th August 1921 when he was also a Managing Director. He was again a Director from the 4th October 1922 to the 14th March 1923. He thus stood in a fiduciary relationship to the Bank when he took the fixed deposit receipts from the Bank. The fact that he was not a Director on the 7th January 1922 and the 2nd May 1922 did not relieve him of the obligations which arose out of his fiduciary relationship with the Company. The trust continued—see the observations of Lord Chancellor Eldon in the case of James Ex parte (8). Mr. Jang Bahadur Sinha must, therefore, pay back the sum of Rs. 7,844-5-3 to the liquidator.

It now remains to dispose of the charge relating to the over-draft allowed to the Upper India Investment Limited. The question of this over-draft does not seem to have been ever placed before the meeting of the Director. There is no trace of it in any record of the Company. The books of the Bank merely show that such an over-draft was made. Knowledge of it is not brought home to the Directors as a body. On the principles already stated, I cannot hold them personally liable for this over-draft transaction.

The case as against Lala Jagmohan Lal, however, in relation to this charge stands on a different footing. We have seen that Lala Jagmohan Lal was the Managing Director of the Bank during the whole of the period when the over-draft was allowed. His duties were, therefore, of a higher standard than of an ordinary Director. There is a circumstance in this case which induces me to hold that Lala Jagmohan Lal was guilty of breach of trust in the matter of this over-draft. In allowing it he was clearly impelled by motives of personal gain. That circumstance, as already adverted to, is that his brother, Balgobind, with whom, according to my finding Lala Jagmohan Lal is joint in business, was one of the Directors of the Upper India Investment. Lala Jagmohan Lal allowed, in my opinion, this over-draft to be made to the Upper India Investment for the reason that his brother was a Director of that Company and dishonestly concealed the transaction from the Directors of the Bank. I entirely reject his evidence that he had no knowledge of the transaction. I, therefore, hold that Lala Jagmohan Lal is liable to compensate the Bank for the loss which the Bank has suffered in consequence of this over-draft.

The plea of limitation was raised by Thakur Nawab Ali Khan. The liquidator's application as against Thakur Nawab Ali Khan has been rejected by me on merits. It is, therefore not, necessary to decide the plea of limitation.

The result is that on the agreement of the parties I order that Mr. L. A. Labanti shall pay the sum of Rs. 76,593-15-4 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from this date till the date of payment to the liquidator. I also order Mr. Jang Bahadur Sinha to pay to the liquidator the sum of Rs. 7,844-5-3 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from this date till the date of payment and also proportionate costs. I further order that Lala Jagmohan Lal shall pay to the liquidator the sum of Rs. 28,927-5-0 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from this date till the date of payment and also proportionate costs.

(October 13, 1925).—In the interests of justice and with the consent of Mr. Roy, Pleader for the liquidator, I direct that the payments under this decree shall first be made in Court and the liquidator shall be entitled to recover them on furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Court. This direction shall be incorporated in the decree.

Construction of Statute—Principles applicable—C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 47—"Held land continuously," meaning of—Forcible dispossession of tenant by landlord—No acquiescence by tenant—Tenancy whether determined

It is an elementary principle of interpretation that the plain intention of the Legislature as expressed by the language employed is to be accepted and given effect to [p. 59, col. 2.]

If the language admits of more than one construction, the meaning is to be sought not in the wide sea of speculation and surmise but from such conjectures as are drawn from the words alone or something contained in them [ibid.]

The words "held land continuously" as used in s. 47 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898 imply "held as a tenant," but not necessarily "occupied or cultivated." The requirement of s. 47 is not actual continuous possession as a matter of fact but continuously holding as a tenant. [p. 60, col. 1.]

If a tenant is ejected under a decree of a Court, there is a lawful ejectment and clear break in the tenancy, but the mere fact of a forcible or unlawful ejectment does not necessarily break the tenancy although the tenant may have been temporarily out of possession. [ibid.]

The mere ejectment of a tenant does not necessarily determine his tenancy which can only be ended in certain express ways, such as those enunciated in s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 60, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amroati, dated the 17th March 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 145 of 1923.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant Vithoba came to Court alleging that he was a tenant of five fields in Mouza Inzasan (Yeotmal), from which he had been illegally ejected by his landlord (defendant No. 1), the Izardar of the village. He claimed that under s. 47 of the Berar Alienated Villages Tenancy Law, 1921, he was a permanent tenant and consequently came to Court praying for a declaration to this effect and for a decree putting him in possession.

The first Court held that the suit was not maintainable, the plaintiff having been put out of possession on the 1st of January 1922 when the said law came into force. The lower Appellate Court also dismissed the present appellant's appeal on the view—a perfectly correct one that s. 74 could not apply to the case as the ejectment had taken place before the law in question came into force. Similarly, from the other points of view the Additional District Judge held that as the plaintiff was not a tenant at the commencement of the law within the meaning of s. 47 (1), his suit was bound to fail.

The question involved in this second appeal is not free from difficulty. There can be no doubt but that if the view taken by the two lower Courts be correct, a most anomalous state of matters would arise.

The appeal, I may say, has been argued practically on the basis that the surrender has not been proved and that there was, in fact, an improper ejectment by the landlord about the 25th of May 1921. Even so, the contention offered on behalf of the respondents (defendants) has been that for the plaintiff to be declared a permanent tenant under s. 47 two conditions have to be fulfilled, viz.,

(1) that he was holding the land when the law came into force on the 1st of January 1922, and

(2) that his possession went back to before the 1st of June 1895.

Admittedly, the second condition has been fulfilled, but the case for the respondents has been that as the plaintiff was ejected on the 25th of May 1921, he cannot be said to have been holding the land on the date the Berar Alienated Tenancy Law of 1921 came into force.

As pointed out above, a curious and anomalous state of matters would arise if the respondents' contention in this case were correct. There can be little doubt, in my opinion, but that the intention of the framers of this piece of legislation was to protect precisely such cases as the present one. The law, no doubt, went further than that, because s. 75 provided even for the re-instatement of a tenant who had been ejected on or after the 1st of January 1916 under a decree or order of a Civil Court. It would be curious indeed if the intention of the Legislature had been to interfere even in the latter case but to refrain from interfering in the case of an illegal ejectment by the landlord himself on the date prior to the law coming into force but after the first day of January 1916. Whatever the intention of the Legislature may have been, however, in this connection the question I have to decide is whether on a reasonable construction of s. 47 the plaintiff can fall thereunder. It is an elementary principle of interpretation that the plain intention of the Legislature as expressed by the language employed is to be accepted and given effect to. If it admits of more than one construction the meaning is to be sought not in the wide sea of speculation and surmise but from such conjectures as are drawn from the words alone or something contained in them: Rerigate Rural District Council v. Sutton District Water Co. (1).

Turning to s. 47, the phraseology at once strikes one as significant, the essential words used being: "A tenant, . . . who, at the commencement of this law, has either by himself held land continuously from a date previous to the first day of June 1895." The decision of this appeal really depends on the construction to be put on the words "has held land". It is significant that the terminology employed is not occupied or cultivated: cf. in this connection ss. 8, 9 and 11 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and cf. Agarwala's Agra Tenancy Act at page 63. The phrase, to my mind, used in the Act seems to imply "has held as a tenant but is not necessarily occupying or cultivating." As I read s. 47, the requirement thereof is not actual continuous possession as a matter of fact, but continuously holding as a tenant. If a tenant is ejected under a decree of a Civil Court, there is a lawful ejectment and a clear break in the tenancy. But on the other hand, the mere fact of a forcible or unlawful ejectment does not necessarily break the tenancy although the tenant may have been temporarily out of possession.

Of course, if there were evidence that the tenant had acquiesced in his ejectment or had failed to take steps to recover possession, then there would have been on his part an acquiescence in the ejectment. In the present case this cannot be predicated of the present plaintiff-appellant because it is clear from the evidence: cf. Ex. P-7, P-8 and P-9, that he had presumably in good faith, initially pursued a wrong remedy by application to the Revenue Officer under s. 74 (1), which clearly did not apply in the circumstances of the case. The application to the Revenue Officer was only finally disposed of on the 23rd of July 1923 and meanwhile the plaintiff had filed the present suit on the 4th of April 1923. There is not the slightest ground, therefore, for holding that there was any acquiescence on the part of the tenant in his ejectment. I may say that there had been, in fact, two applications to the Revenue Officers; the first on 22nd November 1921 (cf. Ex. P-8) which was rejected on the 1st of June 1922 while the final application to the Special Revenue Officer was dismissed, as already said, on the 23rd of July 1923 (cf. P-9).

Looking at the question more generally, I am unable to see that, in the circumstances of the present case, the tenancy can be said to have terminated. The mere ejectment of a tenant does not necessarily determine his tenancy which can only be ended in certain express ways: cf., in this connection s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, and cf., also Rudrappa v. Narsingrao (2) and Sofaoll Khan v. Wopean Khan (3). The surrender in this case has not been proved and the fact that there was a forcible ejectment has practically been admitted. In such circumstances the landlord was guilty of trespass and such an act could not, in my opinion, determine the tenancy, unless there was any evidence of subsequent acquiescence therein on the part of the plaintiff. In the present case, as I have shown, all the evidence is that the plaintiff has been having vigorous recourse to any and every relief which was, in his opinion, open to him. The present suit was filed within two years of the ejectment (cf. s. 76 of the Law) and it was, therefore, within time. My reading of s. 47, sub-s. (1), therefore, is that the words "held land continuously" have been deliberately used as opposed to "cultivated or possessed" with the express intention that the section would still cover a case like the present, where there has been an illegal disturbance of possession, in which the tenant has not acquiesced. I am unable to see that the forcible dispossession, which occurred, necessarily determined the tenancy being in existence, I find that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to be declared a permanent tenant of the fields in suit.

The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court is, therefore, reversed and in its place a decree will issue declaring the plaintiff-appellant to be a permanent tenant of the fields in suit and ordering him to be put in possession thereof. The defendants-respondents will bear the plaintiff-appellant's costs as well as their own in all three Courts.

There is nothing in r 97 of O XXI of the C P C which prevents its being applicable to a decree for possession passed under s 9 of the Specific Relief Act. Such a decree does not purport to decide any question of title but it declares the plaintiff's possessory right and is a conclusive determination of that right. Where, therefore, obstruction is offered to the delivery of possession in execution of such a decree, an order removing the obstruction falls within the purview of r 98 of O. XXI, and is conclusive unless set aside in a suit brought in accordance with the provisions of r 103 of O XXI [p 61, col 2; p 62, col 1]

Obiter dictum—For the application of r. 97 of O XXI of the C P C. it is not necessary that the person making the obstruction should be physically present at the spot [p 62, col 1]

Ordinarily in partition suits it is the practice to declare the shares of all the parties to the suit and to give a decree accordingly. This is to avoid multiplicity of litigation, and that is the reason why all the sharers have to be made parties in such suits. It is not, however, incumbent upon the Court in all circumstances to give a decree in favour of all the co-sharers in a partition suit [ibid]

Where in a partition suit the plaintiff's claim to a specific share in the property in dispute is negatived, and there is no issue for determination of the shares of the defendants inter se, the shares of the defendants inter se should not be determined in the suit [p. 62, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 1067 OF 1922.

The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are sisters, and plaintiff brings this suit to recover her one-third share in the suit house which has been found to belong originally to plaintiff's father. In 1918 the 1st defendant who appears to have been in possession of the suit house brought a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act against her sister the 2nd defendant. In executing the decree she obtained, obstruction was caused and she came into Court with an application under O. XXI, r. 97, C. P. C. in which the plaintiff and her alleged tenant were counter-petitioners. An enquiry was held and finally an order was passed in E. A. No. 599 of 1918 which runs as follows:—

"The obstructor did not intervene in that suit. Now she has been evidently set up by her defeated sister. Remove obstruction and deliver." The obstructor can only refer to the plaintiff, the second counter-petitioner, and by the use of the word "obstructor" the District Munsif must be deemed to have found that she was the person who caused obstruction, otherwise the word would be meaningless. It would appear, therefore, from his order that he held that the plaintiff caused obstruction and he passed an order which would appear to be under O. XXI, r. 98. As the plaintiff has failed to bring her suit within one year from the date of that order, the lower Appellate Court has dismissed it as barred by limitation.

In appeal it is urged that the order directing removal of obstruction was not passed, under O. XXI, r. 98 because the plaintiff did not actually obstruct but obstructed through her tenant who was the first counter-petitioner in the application. There is no evidence to support the contention. I think in the face of the order defining the plaintiff as the obstructor, it is unnecessary to consider that question here.

It was then contended that the order could not have been passed under O. XXI, r. 98 because the decree passed under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is not a decree for possession within the meaning of r. 97. Reliance is placed upon an old case Gobind Chunder Bagdee v. Gobind Ghose Mundul (1) but that case was not one under the Specific Relief Act nor under the present C. P. C. I can see nothing in the rule (r. 97) which prevents its being applicable to a decree for possession under the Specific Relief Act. That decree for possession undoubtedly declared the plaintiff's possessory right. It did not purport to decide the title, but it confirmed the lesser right in the plaintiff and it was a conclusive determination of that right. I see no reason why O. XXI, should not be applied in this case. Consequently it must be held that the order of the District Munsif was passed under r. 98 and, therefore, the plaintiff's present suit is barred by limitation.

There are observations in Mancharam v. Fakirchand (2) and in T. C. Bose v. R. O. Chowdury (3) which go to show that the person obstructing under O. XXI, r. 97 must be physically present on the spot. In neither of the cases was this observation necessary for the determination of the suit, and in one case there was a conflict of opinion. Reading O. XXI, rr. 97 and 98, etc., we find no reference to the present obstructor, but only reference to the person obstructing or resisting execution. With all respect, therefore, if those two cases intended to lay down that O. XXI, r. 97 is inapplicable to a case in which the obstructor was not actually present, I think it goes too far but, in view of the finding in this case that the plaintiff did obstruct, it is not really necessary to determine the question.

The plaintiff's appeal (S. A. No. 1067 of 1922), therefore fails and is dismissed with costs of the first defendant.

T. C. Bose v. R. O. Chowdury (3).

IN S. A. No. 543 OF 1922.

The first defendant also filed an appeal against the portion of the decree which declares that the second defendant is entitled to one-third share in the suit property. Ordinarily in partition suits, it is the practice to declare the shares of all the parties to the suit and to give a decree accordingly. This is to avoid multiplicity of litigation and that is the reason why all the sharers have to be made parties in such suits, but I do not think that it is laid anywhere that in all circumstances must a decree be given in favour of all the co-sharers. Ashidbhai v. Abdulla (4) is a clear authority to the contrary; but reliance is placed on a decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 1493 of 1920. The point was not really considered in that case but the suit was remanded for fresh disposal on the ground that the parties to the suit were entitled to obtain their shares although they were not members of a joint Hindu family. The question whether the circumstances must justify a refusal of such relief to the defendant was not considered at all. In the present case the plaintiff's claim to one-third share has been dismissed and apparently there are now only two other sharers entitled to the property and it is not clear what the respective shares are. The second defendant in filing a written statement only claimed one-third share on the assumption that one-third of the property would be allotted to the plaintiff. That not having been done, the right of the other two sharers may be altered. I think therefore that there should be no decision of this question in this suit because the question has not been put in issue and there has been no determination of the share of the two remaining sisters. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside that portion of the decree leaving the second defendant to establish her right by a fresh suit if so desired.

In the circumstances I make no order as to costs in this appeal (Second Appeal No. 543 of 1922).

A reference to arbitration for partition of property amounts to letting in of all parties to joint possession of the property to be partitioned.

A pleading in a reference to arbitration for partition that a certain part of the property must, because of a previous decision or for any other reason, be allotted to one share or the other, or must be left out of consideration in the division, can scarcely be called a withdrawal of that part of the property from the scope of the arbitration. At the most it is an attempt to withdraw that property from the scope of the arbitration, that is to say, an admission that it is included in it.

Obiter.—Section 2 (11) and s. 4 of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 make it clear that the word "tenant" in Art. 1 of Sch. II does include an absolute occupancy tenant and the limitation for a suit by such a tenant for possession of his holding is two years and not twelve years from the date of such dispossession or exclusion from possession.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It has been held proved in the lower Appellate Court that Shioshankar joined in referring the dispute in regard to the division of the family property to the Mahasabha in 1921. That was a letting in of the plaintiff Shiosahai to joint possession of all the property to be divided, which joint possession continued at least till the delegates of the Mahasabha made their award on the 3rd of February 1922.

The award has been held to be invalid for various reasons, but that does not matter. While the arbitrators were deliberating with the consent of Shioshankar about what portion of certain property was to be allotted to Shiosahai and what was not, Shiosahai cannot be said to have been excluded from possession of any part of that property, because Shioshankar was admitting all along that that part of it might be allotted to him. As the award was given on the 3rd of February 1922 and Shiosahai filed his suit on the 1st of September 1923 well within two years, it cannot be held barred by time under Art. 1 of Sch. II of the Tenancy Act, 1920, unless the particular piece of property in dispute, the absolute occupancy holding, can be shown to have been excluded from the property with which the delegates of the Mahasabha had to deal.

The only evidence of its exclusion, which it was for the plaintiffs to prove, is to be found in a written pleading put in by Shioshankar before the arbitrators on the 30th of May 1921 in which he urged that the matter of these fields and of some mango trees and a certain house had already been decided (tasfiya ho chuka hai), though the matter of certain other fields had not. A pleading in a partition suit that, a certain part of the property must, because of a previous decision or for any other reason, be allotted to one share or the other, or must be left out of consideration in the division, can scarcely be called a withdrawal of that part of the property from the scope of the suit. At the most it is an attempt to withdraw that property from the scope of the suit, that is to say, an admission that it is included in it.

It is further pleaded that the suit is within time for the reason that the word tenant in Art 1 of Sch. II of the Tenancy Act, 1920 does not include an absolute occupancy tenant, and that the limitation for a suit by such a tenant for possession of his holding is twelve years. In view of the ruling in Ragho v. Sadoo (1) which on all points except that of limitation is confirmed by the Tenancy Act of 1920, I am strongly inclined to the opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature to make the limitation for a suit by an absolute occupancy tenant twelve years. But it is beyond doubt that if that intention existed it has not been expressed in the Act. Section 2 (11) and s. 4 of that Act make it clear that the word tenant in Art. 1 of Sch. II does include an absolute occupancy tenant. The question does not, however, arise, as the suit was brought within two years of the exclusion from possession.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the first Court restored. That, however, would entail the making of a fresh division of these fields, which was done in 1922. The parties have agreed, therefore, that that partition of 1922 shall hold good and each party shall take the half then allotted to it. The decree will accordingly order that the defendants are to hand over to the plaintiff the half of the fields in dispute that was allotted to his share in 1922, in the arbitration that began in 1921. All the plaintiff's costs in all three Courts will be paid by the defendants. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be fifty rupees.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 134, 140, 148—Adverse possession during tenure of life-tenant

—Remainderman, whether affected—Mortgage—Transfer by mortgagee—Redemption suit by remainderman—Limitation.

Article 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act deals with transfers of property which has been mortgaged. The Article does not specifically require that the property should have been mortgaged with possession. The suits referred to in the Article being, however, suits for possession, it must be assumed that when such a suit is brought the defendant transferee is in possession. Therefore, the transfer which he has taken must have been one which placed him in possession and consequently where the transferor is a mortgagee he must have been in possession of the mortgaged property at the time he made the transfer. It is not, however, necessary that the possession which the transferor had at the time of the transfer must have been acquired under the mortgage originally made in his favour. Even if the mortgage was a simple mortgage and the mortgagee subsequently gets possession of the mortgaged property otherwise, as for example, by purchase in execution of a simple money-decree obtained against the mortgagor by another creditor, the Article will still apply if it is established that at the time the transfer is made the mortgagee was in possession, no matter under what title. The Article is designed for the protection of a transferee who has been led by a mortgagee to believe that he is acquiring not merely mortgage rights but a full proprietary title [p 68, col 2; p 69, col. 1].

No act of a life-tenant can be binding upon the remainderman who does not claim under the life-tenant but under an independent title [p 71, col. 2].

Per Kanharya Lal, J—Under Art. 140 of Sch. I, to the Limitation Act, a remainderman or devisee can sue for possession of immoveable property devised to him within twelve years from the date when his estate falls into possession [p 73, col 1].

Once a person enters into possession of property as a tenant for life he cannot hold adversely to the remainderman. Similarly adverse possession for any length of time against a tenant for life is ineffectual against the reversioner or remainderman whose right to possession only accrues on the death of the tenant for life. [ibid].

Article 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act allows only a period of 12 years for a suit to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged and subsequently transferred by the mortgagee for a valuable consideration to be computed from the date of such transfer. It applies to cases where the mortgagee purports to transfer what he is not competent to alienate, that is an interest greater than that of a mortgagee, and it presupposes a mortgage with possession or followed by possession as a necessary incident or ingredient of it because a mortgagee who is not in possession cannot transfer possession to another or give what he does not possess. If the mortgagee acquires possession in some other capacity, the transfer of possession will be deemed to have been made in the capacity in which it was (rightly or wrongly) acquired and such acquisition cannot be attributed to the mortgage, where the mortgage itself is a simple mortgage or a mortgage not entitling the mortgagee to possession by virtue of its incidents or terms [p 73, cols. 1 & 2].

The object of Art. 134 is to protect transferees for value who have purchased an interest larger than that possessed by the transferor and have been allowed to remain in possession and enjoyment of such larger interest for a period of more than 12 years. In the matter of mortgaged properties so transferred, it controls Art. 148 in the same way as it controls Art. 140. If the mortgaged property is in the possession, not of the mortgagee, but in that of a transferee from him who claims to have purchased a larger interest therein for consideration, then neither Art. 148 nor Art. 140 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act will enable the mortgagor or a reversioner or a remainderman to redeem the property after the possession of the transferee has lasted for more than 12 years. A remainderman who sues for the redemption of a mortgage cannot escape the consequences which Art. 134 prescribes. [p 74, col. 1].

JUDGMENT.

Lindsay, J.—Both these appeals arise out of a suit for redemption brought by Alice Georgina Skinner in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. This lady died after the decision in the Court below and is now represented by her executor, Mr. J. R. R. Skinner.

The suit was filed on the 11th May 1920 and the mortgage of which redemption was sought was executed by the plaintiff's father Thomas Skinner, on the 1st September 1863, to secure a loan of Rs. 50,000 which he took from a firm of money-lenders, Lakhmi Chand and Gobind Das, who were popularly known as the Seths of Muttra. Since the date of the mortgage the mortgaged property has passed into the hands of many persons, the result being that the plaintiff found it necessary to implead over 80 defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge has passed a preliminary decree for redemption, dated the 31st January 1923, by which he directs the plaintiff to pay a sum of Rs. 1,09,641-11-8.

The suit was not decreed in full, for the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession of : . . . one of the items of property mortgaged. And as regards another item named Daula Rajpura which at the time the suit was brought was in the possession of the Nawab of Pahasu, the Subordinate Judge declared that the suit had abated. The Nawab died during the pendency of the suit and the plaintiff failed to make his legal representative a party to the suit within the time limited by law.

In the Appeal No. 86 of 1924 the memo-random of appeal contains the names of 34 appellants but at the hearing only two of these have been represented before us, namely, Kunwar Naunihal Singh and Nawab Mukarram Ali Khan who is the successor-in-interest of the Nawab of Pahasu above mentioned. Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala has filed vakalatnamas which authorize him to appear on behalf of these two appellants, he has no authority to act for the other appellants and so in disposing of F. A. No. 86 of 1924 it is necessary to consider only the cases of these two persons.

Mr. Girdhari Lal also represents the appellants in F. A. No. 494 of 1922 which has been heard along with F. A. No. 86 of 1924.

It may be mentioned here that the peculiar and irregular procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge in disposing of the suit has created considerable embarrassment.

On the 23rd of February 1922 after having disposed of the main issues in the case, he passed an order directing accounts to be taken in order to enable him to ascertain the sum payable by the plaintiff for redemption of the mortgage. There could, of course, be no objection to his passing an interlocutory order for the taking of accounts but he embodied this order in the form of a decree which is printed at pages 35 et seq of the record. Subsequently, after taking an account, he passed a preliminary decree for redemption on the 20th January 1923, (See pages 46 et seq of the record). The law does not contemplate procedure of this sort in a suit for redemption. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have thought he was dealing with a suit for account in which it was his duty to pass a preliminary decree in accordance with the provisions of O. XX, r. 13, of the C. P. C. but that was not so.

This irregularity was brought to the notice of another Bench of this Court which decided that the two decrees drawn up in the Court below should be dealt with as if they constituted one decree only, namely, a preliminary decree for redemption, and so we have treated these two appeals accordingly.

I proceed now to mention the questions which arise here for decision in Appeal No. 86 of 1924 as between the plaintiff-respondent and the two appellants on whose behalf the appeal has been argued and I take up first the case of Kunwar Naunihal

Singh. This defendant, when the suit was brought, was in possession of five items of the mortgaged property which the plaintiff was seeking to recover. They are items Nos. 1 to 5 in the Sch. A attached to the plaint and are called Gangola, Salehpur, Neknampur, Ghorri Bachhera and Sunphera.

The defences raised by Naunihal Singh were:

(1) that the plaintiff had no title to maintain the suit for redemption;

(2) that these five villages had since the year 1872 been in the adverse possession of him and his predecessor-in-title;

(3) that he had purchased these villages in good faith and for a consideration of Rs. 1,77,000 from the Nawab of Rampur and was protected by s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, and, further that in no case could the plaintiff recover possession without payment of this purchase-money;

(4) that, in any event, the plaintiff was liable to pay the full sum due on the mortgage in suit amounting to about 17 lakhs of rupees, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to demand any account of the profits for the period during which he (Naunihal Singh) was in possession.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had a good title to maintain the redemption suit. He held further that the suit was not barred by limitation as adverse possession could not run against the plaintiff before the 1st December 1919 when the plaintiff's estate in the mortgaged property fell into possession on the death of the previous life-tenant. And, lastly, he found that Naunihal Singh was liable to submit to a decree for redemption after an account had been taken of the profits for the period during which the mortgagees or those who derived title from them had been in possession of the property.

Now in this Appeal No. 86 of 1924 three substantial points have been argued on behalf of the appellant Naunihal Singh. One of these relates to the title of Alice Georgina Skinner and her right to maintain the suit. Another relates to the question of limitation which has been raised here in a new form. The third concerns the mortgage account, the argument being that it has not been properly calculated by the Court below. Before I proceed to discuss these matters it is necessary to say something of the history of the Skinner family and of the Skinner estate which has been the subject of much litigation. A good deal of that history will be found in the report of a case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the year 1913. See Richard Ross Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (1). Naunihal Singh, who was a party to that litigation, is the same gentleman who is one of the appellants in the present case. Thomas Skinner, who was the owner of the mortgaged property now in suit and who made the mortgage of the 1st September 1863 now sought to be redeemed, was the father of Alice Georgina Skinner, the present plaintiff. He died in November 1864 leaving three sons and three daughters. By his Will, dated the 22nd October 1861, he made certain dispositions of his estate which afterwards gave rise to a good deal of controversy. This Will was construed in the Privy Council case cited above, and to put the matter briefly, it was held that the effect of the Will was to create a succession of life-estates in favour of the testator's three sons, and that in default of lawful male issue born to any of these sons, the estate was to go over to the daughters. The three sons of Thomas Skinner are all dead. The eldest of them, Thomas Brown Skinner, died on the 3rd July 1900, the second, Richard Ross Skinner, who was the plaintiff in the suit which came before the Privy Council in the case mentioned above, died on the 15th August 1913. The third son was George Corbyn Skinner who died on the 1st December 1919. On this latter date the only surviving daughter of Thomas Skinner was Alice Georgina who was the plaintiff in the present suit. Both the other sisters died in the lifetime of their brothers. It follows then that on the death of the third son, George Corbyn Skinner, the sole surviving sister, i. e., Alice Georgina, acquired an absolute estate in the property of her father, Thomas Skinner, provided that on that date there were no legitimate male issue of any of the three brothers in existence.

It has not been suggested that either of the two elder brothers left any such issue but it was pleaded by Naunihal Singh and some of the other defendants that George Corbyn Skinner left two legitimate sons still in existence in whose presence Alice Georgina could have no right to the estate. It was further pleaded by these same defendants that Alice Georgina was not the daughter of Thomas Skinner. This latter plea, however, was easily disposed of and the Subordinate Judge had no difficulty in finding that the plaintiff was Thomas Skinner's daughter. This matter has not been argued before us. As regards the other plea it is admittedly the fact that there are in existence two sons of George Corbyn Skinner. The plaintiff's case is that they are illegitimate, and the Subordinate Judge found that they were. We have heard arguments here relating to this point, and we agree with the Subordinate Judge. Some of the evidence led by the plaintiff upon this issue was of little value but there is the statement of a witness Christopher, a missionary, who deposed that the two sons left by George Corbyn Skinner were born out of wedlock. He knew George Corbyn Skinner well and with him at the time these sons were born. His evidence appears to us to be conclusive of the matter and it has not been rebutted. This part of the case is accordingly at an end and agreeing with the Court below I find that Alice Georgina Skinner was the lawful owner of her father's estate at the time she brought the suit and was entitled to maintain the suit for redemption.

The next question to be discussed is that of limitation. In the 17th ground taken in the memorandum of appeal the plea is raised that the suit is barred under Art. 134 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) which provides a period of 12 years for a suit brought to recover possession of immoveable property which has been mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the mortgagee for valuable consideration. In cases to which the Article applies time begins to run from the date of the transfer, that is to say, the transfer, by the mortgagee. According to the case for Naunihal Singh he is such a transferee having in the year 1904 purchased the five villages which he claims, from the Nawab of Rampur for a sum of Rs. 1,77,000. It is stated that in the year previous (1903) the Nawab bought these properties from the Seths of Muttra, the representatives of the mortgagees who advanced the money under the deed of the 1st September 1863, now in suit. It is to be observed here that this Article was not pleaded in the Court below. There the defence of limitation was raised upon the ground of adverse possession pure and simple, and was rightly overruled by the Subordinate Judge on the ground (inter alia) that no adverse possession could begin to run against the plaintiff who was not entitled to possession before the 1st December, 1919, the date on which her last surviving brother, George Corbyn Skinner, died.

The plaintiff being a remainderman under her father's Will, was entitled to plead Art. 140 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act and to say that she had the right to sue for recovery of the estate at any time within 12 years from the date it fell into possession. The suit was filed less than six months after that date. The Subordinate Judge was never called upon to consider the terms of the Art. 134 and although it is true that a plea of limitation can be raised at any time, it was with some hesitation that I consented to its being raised here, on the ground that the appellant Naunihal Singh had not for the purposes of this appeal printed the necessary documents upon which he relies for proof of the facts which he must establish in order to support the plea under Art. 134. However, as there could be no doubt as to those facts and as the necessary documents had been printed before in the case of Richard Ross Skinner v Naunihal Singh (1) which, as has been said, was decided by the Privy Council in the year 1913, we allowed the point to be argued. Those documents or some of them at any rate are referred to in their Lordships' judgment, and I shall have occasion later on to draw attention to what was there said concerning them.

I shall now set out the facts and quote from the documents which are translated and printed in the paper-book of F. A. No. 127 of 1907 Naunihal Singh v. Richard Ross Skinner. At page 1A of this book we have the mortgage-deed of the 1st September 1863, executed by Thomas Skinner. This is the mortgage of which redemption is now being sought. The deed is a hypothecation bond which recites that eighteen villages belonging to the mortgagor are being offered as security for a loan of Rs. 50,000. As a matter of fact only seventeen villages are named. The eighteenth which was probably meant to be included in the security was Mauza Audhel, which was subsequently included in a later mortgage-deed presently to be mentioned. By this deed of the 1st September 1863 the mortgagor undertook to pay the mortgage debt in full, principal and interest, at the end of December 1863, and he covenanted that if he failed to discharge the debt as stipulated, he would put the Seths (the mortgagees) in possession who would then be able to realize and apply the income of the mortgaged estate under their own superintendence and management. Thomas Skinner died towards the end of 1864, and, following the narrative of events in the Privy Council judgment above referred to, it appears that the Court of Wards took possession of the estate and held it till the year 1867 when possession was handed over to the eldest son, Thomas Brown Skinner, who then proceeded to deal with the estate as if he were the absolute owner which he was not for reasons already stated. On the 10th November 1867. Thomas Brown Skinner executed a mortgage for Rs. 50,000 in favour of the Seths. Out of this sum Rs. 43,291-14-3 were due on the mortgage of the 1st September 1863 executed by his father. The balance he took in cash for the purpose of discharging certain debts which he owed. The same property was mortgaged as was described in the earlier deed—the eighteen villages which were all mentioned by name and included Audhel, the village which had been omitted in the document of 1863.

It is important to notice the conditions of this mortgage for it was provided that the names of the mortgagees were to be entered in the revenue papers and it was further provided that the entire income of the mortgaged property was to be paid direct into the treasury of the mortgagees. It was declared that the mortgagees were to appoint a treasurer and two peons at the cost of the mortgagor and that the money which was collected from the villages was to be deposited with the treasurer without any diminution. Directions were then given regarding the application of the income after it had been so received in deposit. After payment of Government revenue, patwari's fees and the usual village expenses, the balance was to be applied in payment of the interest on the mortgage-money, the salaries of the two peons and the treasurer appointed by the mortgagee and the salaries of the mortgagor's own servants and karindas. If any surplus remained after providing for these charges, it was to be applied in reduction of the principal sum. Another provision was that if any of the karindas of the mortgagor acted against the wishes of the mortgagees, he was to be dismissed on a complaint being made by the treasurer. It is not necessary to refer to any of the other terms of this document, but it will be observed that the result of the arrangements just mentioned was to put the mortgagees in complete control of the revenues of the mortgaged estate as effectively as if they had been put in actual physical possession and it was no doubt for this reason that it was stated in the Privy Council judgment that this mortgage of 1867 executed by Thomas Brown Skinner was a mortgage with possession. What their Lordships say with reference to this transaction is :

"At that time there was due on the mortgage for Rs. 50,000 granted by his father, Thomas Skinner, a sum of Rs. 43,000. The mortgagees were placed in possession by him (Thomas Brown Skinner), and he also himself borrowed further sums in that year, in 1869 and in 1872, and granted mortgages over the properties therefor.

The next thing to be noticed is that on the 20th December 1872, Seth Lachman Das, who was then the representative of the mortgagees purchased in execution of simple money decrees obtained by other creditors five of the villages which he held in mortgage. The sale certificates are all printed in the paper-book of F. A. No. 127 of 1907, pages 13 A et seq. Those five villages were Nankapur, Ghori Bachhera, Sunpehra, Gangola and Salehpur. In the certificates the property acquired by purchase is the "equity of redemption" in all five villages. The judgment-debtor was Thomas Brown Skinner. We hear nothing more of these properties until we come to the 26th December 1898, on which date Seth Lachman Das made a mortgage in favour of the Nawab of Rampur to secure a debt of 15 lakhs of rupees. This was a mortgage with possession and among the items of property mortgaged were the five villages mentioned above. There can be no doubt that in the mortgage-deed these villages were described by the Seth as being his own property. He distinctly calls them his own and says he is mortgaging them with all the proprietary and zamin-dari rights, and in the schedule attached to the mortgage he sets out the value of each village and says that all five are worth Rs. 1,78,100. That is obviously a valuation of the proprietary rights. This document of mortgage is to be found at

Then we come to a document, dated the 24th September 1903, at page 29-R of the same record. This is a conveyance by the Seth of certain of the properties already mortgaged to the Nawab. It seems that the Seth, being unable to keep down the interest on the mortgage-debt, determined to sell the property or most of it in satisfaction of the debt. The property conveyed included the five villages of which we have been speaking and so they passed to the Nawab of Rampur. On the 11th April 1904 the Nawab conveyed these villages to Naunihal Singh for a sum of Rs. 1,77,000. The deed is printed at page 35-R of the printed record of F. A. No. 127 of 1907 and in it the Nawab, after reciting the conveyance made to him by the Seth, describes himself as the absolute owner. These then are the facts upon which Naunihal Singh relies in support of his plea of limitation raised under Art. 134 and the question is whether he is entitled to the benefit of that Article. In my opinion he is.

It has been argued before us that Art. 134 cannot apply because the mortgage of 1863 was not a mortgage with possession and because the mortgagees did not obtain possession under that mortgage but under the later and independent mortgage of 1867 executed by Thomas Brown Skinner. According to this argument Art. 134 must be so read as to mean that the property which has been mortgaged must have been, in the first instance, mortgaged with possession and that the transfer referred to must be a transfer made by a mortgagee who has acquired possession under the mortgage. I cannot construe the Article in this way. It deals with transfers of property which has been mortgaged. The Article does not say "mortgaged with possession." I agree, of course, that the suits referred to in the Article being suits for possession, it must be assumed that when such a suit is brought the defendant-transferee is in possession. I also think it reasonable to hold that the transfer which he has taken must have been one which placed the transferee in possession and that consequently where the transferor is a mortgagee he must have been in possession of the mortgaged property at the time he made the transfer. But I am not prepared to accept the argument that the possession which the transferor has at the time of the transfer must necessarily have been acquired under the mortgage originally made in his favour. It seems to me that even if the mortgage was a simple mortgage and if the mortgagee subsequently gets possession of the mortgaged property, otherwise, as for example, by purchase in execution of a simple money-decree obtained by another creditor, the Article will still apply if it is established that at the time the transfer is made the mortgagee was in possession, no matter under what title. The Article is designed for the protection of a transferee who has been led by a mortgagee to believe that he is acquiring not merely mortgagee rights but a full proprietary title. To quote the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Radanath Das v. Gisborne & Co. (2), in construing the cognate section under the old Act XIV of 1859 "purchase" must mean some person who purchases that which is de facto a mortgage upon a representation made to him and in the full belief that it is not a mortgage but an absolute title."

If that is so, I fail to see why it should make any difference to the purchaser (now the transferee) whether the possession which his transferor has at the time of the transfer arose directly out of the mortgage or was, prior to the date of transfer, acquired in some other way. The possession is there and is the principal factor in determining the belief of the transferee that his transferor is giving him a full proprietary title. The transferor could not very well purport to confer such a title if he were not in actual possession. I do not see why the transferee should be bound to inquire how that possession was obtained, for under the law as it now stands the transferee is not required to show bona fides, which was necessary under the law as it was when the case of Radanath Doss v. Gisbornes Co. & Co. (2) was decided. The alteration in the law appears to have been made advisedly in order to exclude the notion that absence of notice of the real owner's claim was necessary to enable a purchaser to claim the protection of this Article. But I am told that this Court has decided in favour of the interpretation of Art. 131 relied upon by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent, and I am referred to the Bench decision in the case of Ram Piari v. Budhsain (3). I cannot accept the argument. At page 167* of the report after referring to the purpose of Art. 131, the learned Judges say that the transfer referred to in Art. 131 is a transfer with possession or followed by possession as a necessary incident or ingredient of it, and they cite another judgment of this Court in support of this observation: Husaini Khanam v. Husain Khan (4). This observation is in my judgment no authority for the proposition now put forward. The "transfer" to which reference is made is obviously the transfer made by the mortgagee, and, as I have already indicated, I agree that the mortgagee when he comes to make the transfer, must be in a position to hand over possession, which he cannot do unless he has got it himself. But the observation cannot be deemed to embrace the transfer made to the mortgagee in the first instance and to mean that the mortgage must have been a mortgage with possession under which the mortgagee entered either at the time the mortgage was granted or subsequently.

But, apart from this, let us see how the matter stands in this case. How did the mortgagees, whose representative afterwards sold to the Nawab of Rampur, obtain possession of these five villages.

It is said that they acquired it under the mortgage executed by Thomas Brown Skinner in 1867 and also under the purchases in execution made in the year 1872 and not under the mortgage of 1863 made by Thomas Skinner.

I do not think this statement is borne out by the facts. I have already pointed out that in the deed of 1863 the mortgagor covenanted to hand over possession in case he failed to discharge the entire mortgage-debt by the end of December of that year. There can be no doubt that the debt was not so discharged, for it is proved that in 1867, when Thomas Brown Skinner executed his mortgage, there was still outstanding a sum of Rs. 43,000 odd on the earlier mortgage in respect of which the mortgagees were entitled to take possession. Thomas Brown Skinner, to secure this debt and a further loan of Rs. 6,000 odd, makes the mortgage of the 10th November 1867 and places the mortgagees in complete control of the income of the mortgaged property, and I recall here what their Lordships of the Privy Council said regarding this arrangement. They said that the mortgagees were placed in possession by him (i. e., Thomas Brown Skinner). If this is so, did the mortgagees take possession under the mortgage of 1863 or the mortgage of 1867? That they were entitled to have possession under the earlier mortgage is clear. Is it to be said then that notwithstanding this the mortgagees' possession was acquired not under the earlier, but under the later mortgage, a transaction quite independent of the first? That was evidently not the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council. At page 225 of the report in Richard Ross Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (1) they say

"But the case, in their Lordships' view, stands in a very different position with regard to the rights of mortgagees and their successors under mortgages granted, not by the appellants' brother, but by the appellant's father, Thomas Skinner. With regard to the appellant's brother, it is decided by this judgment that the estate which he possessed was that of a tenant for life, and that mortgages proceeding in respect of debts incurred by him could not affect the estate beyond his life. Even if it be supposed that after he, Thomas Brown Skinner, came into possession he granted mortgages in renewal of those granted by his father and the outstanding rights of the mortgagees could not in justice or equity be prejudiced thereby. To do so would be to operate a substantial defeat of the rights of those mortgagees and to imply, what certainly never was the intention of any of the parties to the transaction, that by the renewal of a mortgage by a person with a limited interest in the estate the intention was to operate a discharge of debts effectually secured upon the estate's right."

It seems to me, therefore, that the mortgage of 1863 being still alive in 1867 and the mortgagees being under that mortgage entitled to get possession, the possession delivered by Thomas Brown Skinner in 1867 must be referred to that right and the mortgagees were, therefore, in possession of the mortgaged property from that time under Thomas Skinner's mortgage of 1863 and quite apart from such possession as was subsequently gained by the auction-purchases in 1872 under the decrees obtained against Thomas Brown Skinner.

In this view, therefore, even if the construction of Art. 134 propounded by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent be accepted, the conditions necessary to give the purchaser the protection of Art. 134 are fulfilled. I have referred to the sale of the mortgaged property to the Nawab of Rampur in 1903 and to the sale by him to Naunihal Singh in 1904. When Seth Lachman Das sold to the Nawab in 1903 he was in possession of these five villages and had been so for over thirty years. He purported to convey an absolute title to the Nawab, and no doubt believed that he had a right to do so on the understanding, mistaken though it was, that he had acquired the proprietary right by the purchase of Thomas Brown Skinner's equity of redemption in the year 1872. That the Nawab gave valuable consideration for the sale is clearly established, as is also the fact that in the following year, 1904, Naunihal Singh paid the Nawab Rs. 1,77,000 for the full proprietary interest in these villages. For these reasons I hold that the plea of limitation raised under Art. 134 must prevail and that Naunihal Singh is not liable to be ejected now in a suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1863.

It may be noted here that this plea of limitation was not available to Naunihal Singh in the suit which Richard Ross Skinner brought against him in 1906 and which was decided by their Lordships in the year 1913. By that time the period of twelve years, reckoned from the date of the sale by the Seth to the Nawab of Rampur (the 24th September 1903) had not expired.

The appeal of Naunihal Singh must, therefore, be allowed and the decree of the lower Court reversed in so far as it awards the possession of the five villages Gangola, Salehpur, Neknampur, Ghorī Bachhera and Sunpehra to the plaintiff. The decision relieves me from the duty of examining the other question which was argued on behalf of the appellant Naunihal Singh, namely, the question of how the account on the mortgage should be taken. As Naunihal Singh is found to be entitled to retain possession of these five villages, he has no interest in the amount which the plaintiff is liable to pay.

As regards the other appellant Nawab Mukarram Ali Khan, who is represented by Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, all that need be said is that he is entitled to no relief under this appeal. He claims to be entitled to retain possession of one item of the mortgaged property only, viz., Mauza Daula Rajpura, and as things stand at present, he has got what he wanted, for the suit, in so far as it concerns this village, has been declared by the Subordinate Judge to have abated. I have already mentioned that no other appellants except these two have been represented before us in this appeal (i. e., F. A. No. 86 of 1924).

IN F. A. No. 494 of 1922.

This appeal is without substance and must fail. The appellants are three of the defendants. Gobind Sarup, nand Sarup and Chand Sarup. They are in possession of a 10-biswa share of Mauza Mathurapur, one of the mortgaged items which they claim to have acquired as auction-purchasers in execution proceedings. To explain the nature of the defence set up by these persons it is necessary to state the following facts: Richard Ross Skinner, who had sued for redemption in 1906, died on the 15th August 1913, a few months after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. Their Lordships had directed the suit of Richard Ross Skinner to be remitted to the High Court to be dealt with upon the footing that the rights under the mortgages granted by Thomas Skinner should be satisfied by payment being made to the mortgagees or their successors. On such payment being made within a time to be fixed, Richard Ross Skinner was to be given a decree for possession; on failure to pay, his suit was to be dismissed. Before the investigation necessary to give effect to these orders could be held, Richard Ross Skinner died and having left no legal representatives who could continue the claim, the suit abated. An attempt was made by his brother, George Corbyn Skinner, to get leave to continue the suit but this failed for the reason that his title as a life-tenant was quite independent of that which his brother had held. Having failed in this attempt, George Corbyn Skinner brought in his own right a suit for redemption which never reached the stage of decision owing to his death on the 1st December 1919.

Now in the suit which was brought by George Corbyn Skinner these three appellants in F. A. No. 494 of 1922 were impleaded as defendants. In the course of that suit a compromise was effected between George Corbyn Skinner and these defendants in accordance with which apparently they were allowed to retain possession of a 10-biswa share in Mouza Mathurapur, one of the items of property mortgaged. In the present suit they set up this compromise as a bar to the claim of the plaintiff in respect of this property. The Subordinate Judge overruled this defence being of opinion that no agreement entered into between George Corbyn Skinner and these defendants could bind the plaintiff in the present action. This was without doubt a correct decision, for Georga Corbyn Skinner being only a life-tenant no act of his could be binding upon the plaintiff in the present suit. She was not claiming under George Corbyn Skinner but under an independent title.

The appellants seek to raise this plea again in appeal, but for the reason just given, it cannot succeed. First Appeal No. 494 of 1922, therefore, fails. The result, therefore, is as follows.

First Appeal No. 86 of 1924 succeeds so far as the claim of Kunwar Naunihal Singh is concerned and the decree of the lower Court is reversed to this extent that it is declared that the suit of the plaintiff fails and is dismissed with respect to the five villages Gangola, Salehpur, Neknampur, Ghorī Bachhera and Sunphera. The decree of the Court below will be amended accordingly. As regards costs I decline to make any order in favour of Kunwar Naunihal Singh either here or in the Court below. He has succeeded on a plea of limitation which was not raised in the Trial Court and in this Court he failed to have translated and printed the evidence by which he sought to support the plea of limitation raised here. In other respects F. A. No. 86 of 1924 fails and is dismissed with costs in this Court against the answering respondent (the plaintiff) including fees on the higher scale. First Appeal No. 494 of 1922 fails and is dismissed with costs.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—I agree generally with the conclusions at which my learned brother has arrived and only wish to add a few observations in regard to the precise bearing of Arts. 134 and 140 of the Indian Limitation Act on the subject-matter in issue in these appeals. The mortgage sought to be redeemed was effected by Thomas Skinner on the 1st September 1863 in favour of the firm of Seth Lakshmi Chand and Seth Govind Das of Muttra for Rs. 50,000. The mortgage money was re-payable with interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem by the 31st December 1863 and in case of default it was to bear interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem from the date of its execution. There was a further covenant that the interest shall be regularly paid every half year and that similar payments will be made towards the principal year after year till the entire mortgage money was paid up; and that if the mortgagor failed to pay the principal and interest from the profits of his property, as provided in the mortgage-deed, he shall put the mortgagees in possession and occupation of the hypothecated villages so that they might recover the principal and interest by taking the property under their own management and supervision. In other words, the mortgage was a simple mortgage convertible into a usufructuary mortgage on the happening of a certain contingency.

Thomas Skinner died in November 1864 leaving a Will, cls. 4 and 5 of which provided that his private zemindari which had been granted to him by the Government as a reward for the services rendered during the rebellion of 1857, and all villages, houses and other property added by him from time to time to the original grants, shall on his demise descend to his eldest son, Thomas Brown Skinner, and to his lawful male children according to the law of inheritance and in the event of the eldest son, Thomas Brown Skinner, dying without lawful male children, the same shall descend to the next male heir of the testator; and should all his sons die without lawful male children, it shall descend to his female children or in the event of their death, to the female children born in wedlock of his sons in succession.

By virtue of this Will Thomas Brown Skinner took possession of the estate from the Court of Wards which had meanwhile taken charge of it. On the 10th November 1867 he executed a mortgage in favour of the Muttra firm, the proprietor whereof was now Seth Govind Dass, for Rs. 50,000 out of which Rs. 43,294-14-3 were credited on account of principal and interest due to the said firm on account of a previous mortgage and the balance was taken by him in cash for his own purposes. The same property which had been previously mortgaged was hypothecated again and it was provided that the mortgagors shall get the name of the mortgagee entered in the revenue papers in respect of the mortgaged villages and that the karindas and servants of the mortgagor shall make collections and assessment in respect of the same of their own authority, but a treasurer and two peons shall be appointed on behalf of the mortgagee to supervise the collections and take charge of the money so realized, to be applied after payment of the Government revenue, the patwari's fee and the village expenses besides the cost of collection including the salary of the treasurer and peons of the mortgagee, in the reduction of the principal and interest due on the mortgage. There was a further provision that the accounts of the debt and the receipts and disbursements of the mortgaged villages shall be made up six monthly and that if any of the karindas and servants of the mortgagor acted against the wishes of the mortgagee, he shall be liable to dismissal and the mortgagee shall have power to make collections and assessment on his own account.

In 1872 and 1873 Seth Lachman Das, the successor of the mortgagee, purchased some mortgaged villages in execution of certain decrees for money held by other persons against Thomas Brown Skinner and believing himself to have become thereby the absolute owner of those villages and to be competent to deal with them as if they were his own property, he, on the 26th December 1898, as the surviving member of the family of the mortgagee, mortgaged the said villages along with other properties with the Nawab of Rampur. On the 24th September 1903 he sold the same to the Nawab of Rampur who in turn sold five of the villages now in dispute on the 11th April 1904 to Naunihal Singh defendant for a sum of Rs. 1,77,000, describing himself as the absolute owner of the properties conveyed.

It is urged on behalf of Naunihal Singh that he was a transferee in good faith and for consideration from the Nawab of Rampur, who had purchased from Seth Lachmi Das the absolute rights he claimed to have acquired at the auction-sales aforesaid and that he is protected by Art. 134 of the Indian Limitation Act from being made liable to a claim for redemption in respect of the villages sold to him on the 1st September 1863. Meanwhile Thomas Brown Skinner died without leaving any male issue. In 1906 a suit was brought by Richard Ross Skinner for the possession of the estate which was in the hands of transferees, and it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council eventually, on a construction of the Will of Thomas Skinner, that Thomas Brown Skinner had only a life-estate and that the mortgage granted by Thomas Skinner was ineffectual to convey or give any right over any estate except the tenancy for life of which Thomas Brown Skinner was possessed. Their Lordships remanded the suit for determining the amount of the mortgage money due under the mortgage granted by Thomas Skinner. But before the suit could be re-heard Richard Ross Skinner died without leaving any male issue and as he too had only a life-interest in the estate his suit abated. A fresh suit for redemption was then brought by George Corbyn Skinner, the next son and heir of Thomas Skinner, but he too died before the decision of the suit. The present suit was then filed by Alice Georgina Skinner, the daughter and next heir of Thomas Skinner, for the redemption of the mortgage of the 1st September 1863 and it is evident that, but for Art. 134 of the Indian Limitation Act, the suit would be within time under Art. 148 read with Art. 140 of that Act. As between the transferees and the present plaintiff no question of adverse possession can arise, because under Art. 140 of the Indian Limitation Act a remainderman or devisee can sue for possession of immoveable property devised to him within 12 years from the date when his estate falls into possession. Once a person enters as a tenant for life he cannot hold adversely to the remainderman. An adverse possession for any length of time against a tenant for life is similarly ineffectual against the reversioner or remainderman whose right to possession only accrues on the death of the tenant for life.

Article 134, however, allows only a period of 12 years for a suit to recover possession of immoveable property mortgaged and subsequently transferred by the mortgagee for a valuable consideration to be computed from the date of such transfer. It applies to cases where the mortgagee purports to transfer what he is not competent to alienate, that is, an interest greater than that of a mortgagee, and it presupposes a mortgage with possession or followed by possession as a necessary incident or ingredient of it, because a mortgagee who is not in possession cannot transfer possession to another or give what he does not possess. If the mortgagee acquires possession in some other capacity, the transfer of possession will be deemed to have been made in the capacity in which it was (rightly or wrongly) acquired and such acquisition cannot be attributed to the mortgage where the mortgage itself is a simple mortgage or a mortgage not entitling the mortgagee to possession by virtue of its incidents or terms.

In this case the villages in question were purchased by Seth Lachmi Das at auction sales in execution of certain decrees for money against Thomas Brown Skinner who was afterwards found to have had only a life-interest therein. It is stated on behalf of mortgagee that he got possession after the auction-purchases in 1872, but the plaintiff states (para. 8 of the plaint) that the mortgagee used to manage the property and make collections under the usufructuary mortgage effected by Thomas Brown Skinner on the 10th November 1867 in lieu of the moneys due on the mortgage of the 1st September 1863, and certain other mortgages, and inasmuch as the mortgage of the 10th November 1867, cannot be deemed to operate beyond the lifetime of Thomas Brown Skinner, the possession of the mortgage must be deemed to have continued after his death under the mortgage of the 1st September 1863 now sought to be redeemed. There was a provision in the mortgage-deed of the 1st September 1863 entitling the mortgagee to obtain possession if the principal and interest due thereon were not regularly paid. During the previous litigation which went up to the Privy Council it does not appear to have been disputed that the mortgagee was placed in possession of the mortgaged property by Thomas Brown Skinner under the mortgage of the 10th November 1867 and as that mortgage failed to be operative beyond the life time of Thomas Brown Skinner who died in 1900, it follows that the possession of the disputed villages qua the mortgagee's interest must be deemed to have been held after that date under the mortgage of the 1st September 1863, which it sought to re-pay. The mortgagee, however, believed himself to have acquired the interest of the mortgagor by his purchases at auction sales of 1872 and 1873 in execution of the decrees for money held by certain other persons against Thomas Brown Skinner; and the real position of the rights of the parties was not discovered till the correct construction to be placed on the Will of Thomas Skinner was determined by their Lordships of the Privy Council on the 4th March 1913. Till then the period of limitation allowed by Art. 134 of the Indian Limitation Act for a suit for possession of immoveable property mortgaged and then transferred by the mortgagee to another person for valuable consideration had not expired in respect of the transfer made by Seth Lachhman Das of what was described as an absolute right in favour of the Nawab of Rampur or that made by the latter in favour of Naunihal Singh. The object of Art. 134 is to protect transferees for value who have purchased an interest larger than that possessed by the transferor and have been allowed to remain in possession and enjoyment of such larger interest for a period of more than 12 years. In the matter of the mortgaged properties so transferred, it controls Art. 148 of the Indian Limitation Act in the same way as it controls Art. 140. If the mortgaged property is in possession not of the mortgagee but in that of a transferee from him who claims to have purchased larger interest therein for consideration, what a man is not allowed to do under Art. 148 of the Indian Limitation Act, he cannot be allowed to do under Art. 140 after such possession has been held for more than 12 years. The question is not free from difficulty but in view of the equities of the case and the long and continuous litigation which the transferee had to face both before his possession of 12 years was completed and after it there is no ground for allowing the remainderman to oust him after such period has expired. It may be that Richard Ross Skinner was suing for possession of the disputed property as much in his own interest as that of his successors, but the order refusing to allow substitution after his death was not challenged and allowed to become final and a remainderman who sues for the redemption of the mortgage cannot escape the consequences which Art. 134 prescribes.

In regard to the other matters raised in either of these appeals I have nothing to add to the decision of my learned colleague with which I am in agreement. I agree, therefore, in the order proposed.

Set-off—Contribution, suit for—Rent-decree paid off by co-tenant—Suit to recover share of other co-tenant—Demands arising out of different transactions, whether can be set off—Plaintiff managing tenancy lands as agent subsequent to period included in rent-decree, effect of.

Plaintiff and defendant were co-tenants of certain occupancy fields. The landlord sued them for arrears of rent in respect of certain years and obtained a decree which the plaintiff paid up. Plaintiff then sued the defendant to recover the latter's share of the decretal amount. The defendant admitted liability in respect of the amount claimed but resisted the claim on the ground that the plaintiff was the manager of the tenancy lands and was liable to account for the profits thereof up to the date of the institution of the suit and could not, therefore, sue to recover what could only be an item of debt against the defendant in the account to be rendered by the plaintiff. It was found that if the plaintiff was managing the tenancy lands as the defendant's agent such management commenced after the expiry of the years in respect of which the rent-decree satisfied by the plaintiff had been obtained by the landlord.

Held, that the defendant could not insist on having a demand not arising out of the agency treated as a debit item in any account that the plaintiff might have to render in respect of his agency, nor could the defendant claim an equitable set-off in respect of such demand, since the demands of the plaintiff and the defendant had not arisen out of the same transaction. Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 8th of March 1924, arising out of the decision of the Munsif, Seoni Malwa, dated the 6th of October 1923.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(September 2nd, 1925).

—The plaintiff and the defendant are co-tenants of certain occupancy fields. The landlord sued them for arrears of rent for the last kist of Sambat 1971, both kists of 1972 and 1973 and the first kist of 1974 and obtained a decree which the plaintiff paid up by instalments between the 10th February and 1st May 1920. The plaintiff sues the defendant for half the amount with interest. The defendant admitted her liability for half the rent but resisted the claim on several grounds of which the one now material is that the plaintiff was the manager of the fields, that he was as such liable to account for their profits up to the date of the institution of the suit and that he could not sue to recover what could only be an item of debt against the defendant in the account to be rendered by him. The plaintiff denied that he was in possession or that there were any profits up to the year 1977. He admitted that he was liable to account for the profits of 1977 and subsequent years but denied that he was bound to treat the payment as an item of debit in an account of the profits. It has been found that up to Sambat 1976 the fields were with a stranger who had been put in possession by the defendant's husband and the plaintiff and that there were no profits therefrom prior to that year.

The Trial Court found that the plaintiff was not the manager and that he could sue for half the decretal amount paid by him without accounting for the profits subsequent to 1976 and decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court has not given any specific finding that the plaintiff was not the manager but has upheld the Trial Court's decision. The defendant appeals.

The sole question in appeal is whether the plaintiff could only recoup himself by debiting the amount to the defendant in an account of the profits or recover it by a separate suit. If the plaintiff was the manager on behalf of the defendant it is not disputed that he could not sue separately for the amount paid by him on defendant's behalf. It is, however, contended that this item has nothing to do with the question of accountability as a manager.

It is clear from the facts of the case that up to the year 1976 the plaintiff was not and could not have been the manager, for the land having been put in possession of a third party for the satisfaction of a debt by the consent of the plaintiff and the defendant's husband there was nothing to collect as income and nothing to manage. No importance can be attached to the casual statement in the plaintiff's evidence that he "managed the lands" since the date of the award. We do not know what the exact vernacular word used by the plaintiff which has been translated as "managed" was. In any case it cannot be construed to mean that he was managing the lands as the agent of the defendant. Assuming that after 1976, the plaintiff was acting as the agent of the defendant in the management of the land the defendant cannot insist on having a demand not arising out of the agency treated as a debit item in any account that the plaintiff has to render. Nor can she claim an equitable set-off in respect of it since the demands of the plaintiff and the defendant cannot be said to have arisen out of the same transaction. She could only make a counter-claim which she has not done here.

The decision of the lower Courts is correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

(September 5, 1925).—The respondent files a cross-objection with regard to the interest which is disallowed by the lower Appellate Court. He contends that as he alleged in the plaint that a demand of the amount claimed was made from the defendant and that it was not taken notice of by her and as the defendant did not deny the allegation she must be taken to have admitted it. The plaint states that demand was made several times but gives no dates. The plaintiff, however, files a postal acknowledgement of an alleged notice which is not denied. This is dated the 25th August 1922. The suit was filed on the 8th February 1923. The plaintiff may, therefore, be allowed interest for the period between these two dates. No interest after the institution of the suit was asked for and none was allowed in the Trial Court. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified by adding interest from the 25th August 1922 to the 8th February 1923 at 1 per cent. per mensem on Rs. 542-12-9. Costs of the objection will be paid and received according to failure and success.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 4 OF 1925.
July 28, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.

APPELLANTS

versus

AMBASHANKAR—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Cause of action—"Completed" and "continuous" causes of action—Prospective damages—Damages as mesne profits, when recoverable.

There is a distinction between a completed cause of action which may yet produce damage in future and a continuous cause of action from which continuous damage steadily flows. [p. 76, col. 2.]

The term "prospective damages" is applied to the damages which are awarded to a plaintiff not as a compensation for the ascertained loss which he has sustained at the time of commencing his action but in respect of loss which, it may reasonably be anticipated, he will suffer thereafter in consequence of the defendant's act or omission [p. 77, col. 1.]

A plaintiff is entitled to have prospective damages assessed only when the cause of action is complete. In the case of a continuous cause of action a suit for damages will lie every time damages accrue from the act, but prospective damages are not recoverable, for the cause of action is not the act but the damage arising therefrom. [p. 77, cols. 1 & 2.]

A suit, therefore, for mesne profits as damages against a trespasser in respect of agricultural land is premature if it is brought before the end of the agricultural year when the crops are gathered. [p. 76, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 16th December 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 192 of 1924.

Mr. D. W. Kathale, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. V. Wazalwar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent Ambashankar sued the defendant-appellants Yado, Chimna and Govinda in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, for Rs. 3,000 damages in respect of his having been forcibly dispossessed of certain sir fields on the 18th of June 1924. He claimed Rs. 3,000 damages on the ground that this would have been the net profit he might have obtained from the fields by self-cultivation in the Fasli year 1334.

The only ground we are now concerned with relates to a plea raised on behalf of the defendant-appellants that the agricultural year for which the plaintiff had taken the lease had not ended when the present suit was filed, and the crops in question had not even been gathered. The Judge of the first Court only took up the question of the prematurity of the suit and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's claim was nothing more than one for the recovery of mesne profits, brought in consequence of ejectment from immoveable property, that the suit was an ordinary one under Art. 109 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, that time thereunder ran until the cause of action was complete, and that the profits had, therefore, not accrued due. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, and this Judge reversed the finding of the first Court on the question of the prematurity of the suit and remanded for the case for re trial to the first Court. The defendants have now come up on appeal against the judgment of the District Judge remanding the case.

The view taken by the lower Appellate Court was that it was open to the plaintiff to sue for compensation for having been deprived of profits which he would have derived from the fields, even although the Fasli year 1334 had not expired. The District Judge regarded the suit, not as one for mesne profits but as one for damages for trespass upon land and he further held that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiff was entitled to claim prospective damages.

The question involved in this appeal is not free from difficulty, but in connection with the matter of damages it is necessary to distinguish between a complete cause of action which may yet produce fresh damage in the future, and continuous cause of action from which . . . steadily flows. Best, J., . . . v. Mellish (1) remarks as follows :—

"When the cause of action is complete, when the whole thing has but one neck, and that neck has been cut off by the act of the defendant, it would be most mischievous to say—it would be increasing litigation to say—you shall not have all you are entitled to in your first action, but you shall be driven to bring a second, a third, or a fourth action for the recovery of your damages."

In such a case obviously, prospective damages can be allowed. The cause of action is thereon, so to say, complete and concluded, and the obvious undesirability in such a case of driving the plaintiff to a fresh suit for each and every result which arises from the completed cause of action needs no emphasis. Here, however, in the present instance a trespass commenced in June 1924 and continues from day to day, we thus find a cause of action which is not complete; the cause of action, so to speak, continues and goes de die in diem. Assuming the defendants to have been trespassers, for all one knows they might have repented of their wrongful action long before the crop was due to be reaped. The inconvenience which would result from allowing in a case like the present damages, which are undoubtedly based on the calculation that the fields will yield a normal crop at a date after the suit was filed, is too obvious to require emphasising. How can we be sure that some natural calamity might not occur in the meantime, which would totally destroy the crop, whether it was in the possession of the rightful owner or of the trespasser? In Byjnath Pershad v. Badhoo Singh (2) Bayley and Macpherson, JJ. held that where the amount of mesne profits cannot be ascertained till after the end of the year, the cause of action does not arise till then. At page 202 of the same volume [Koomaree Dossee v Bama Soon-dursee Dossee (3)] Phear and Hobhouse, JJ., came to a somewhat opposite conclusion but the circumstances of that case were highly peculiar. There the defendant had cut down all the fruit-bearing and timber trees on the piece of land in dispute and had carried away or destroyed by brick-making all the fertile soil. The defendant, in short, had not only caused damage to the plaintiff in respect of past time but had also rendered it probable in the highest degree that she would be a loser in her possession of the land in future time. The circumstances of that case were thus undoubtedly unique and not at all parallel to those of a case like the present which is a normal one of a trespasser entering upon the land, sowing it and hoping to reap the crop.

The learned District Judge has relied on certain remarks made in Mayne on Damages, 9th Edition, page 453, and on Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. X, page 306. There Halsbury defines "prospective damages" as follows:—

"The term 'prospective damages' is applied to the damages which are awarded to a plaintiff, not as compensation for the ascertained loss which he has sustained at the time of commencing his action, but in respect of loss which it may reasonably be anticipated he will suffer thereafter in consequence of the defendant's act or omission."

At page 310* of the same volume, however, the following remarks occur:—

"A cause of action in respect of which a plaintiff is entitled to have the prospective damages assessed must be distinguished from a continuing cause of action, that is to say, a cause of action which arises from the repetition or continuance of acts or omissions of the same kind as that for which the action has been brought. Similarly, where the damage consequent on an act or omission rather than the act or omission itself is actionable, then, as the action is only maintainable in respect of the damage, or is not maintainable until the damage is sustained, an action will lie every time damage accrues from the act. In this case, prospective damages are not recoverable; for the cause of action is not the act, but the damage arising therefrom."

These remarks are, in my opinion fully applicable to the circumstances of the present case.

I have been referred by the Pleader for the respondent to Ramasami Reddi v. Authi Lakshami Ammal (4). Abdur Rahim and Ayyar, JJ., therein held that a suit for mesne profits by a plaintiff who had been kept out of possession by the defendant, does not, for purposes of limitation, fall within Art. 109 of the Limitation Act, when no profits have been actually received by defendant, and that such a suit is one for damages under Art. 39. I do not see that this case has any direct bearing on the question which is before me, viz, whether or not the plaintiff in the present case is entitled to sue for prospective damages, which is, in effect, what he has chosen to claim in the present case. If any damages or loss had been caused to the plaintiff by the time of his bringing the suit, he would have been entitled to claim these in the plaint and he would further have been entitled eventually under O. XX, r. 12 (c), C. P. C., to mesne profits even in the future. He has, however, deliberately chosen not to pursue this course but has claimed a lump sum of damages which are admittedly based, and can only be based, on the assumption that if he had been in possession of the land in this particular year, he would have reaped an average crop therefrom. For the reasons given above I am of opinion that this has, in reality, amounted to a suit for prospective damages and these, as I have already shown, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim in the circumstances of the case. The cause of action was not over and done with, it was still continuing from day to day even after the suit was filed, and it is difficult to understand why the plaintiff deliberately took this mistaken course of action.

For the result the plaintiff has only himself to blame. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are

A natural stream passing through a jungle area fell into a tank and then flowed out in a defined channel into a second tank, the water of which had been used by the plaintiff for more than 60 years for the irrigation of his lands. The outlet from the first tank had fallen into disrepair several years ago and the Government then proposed to repair the breach in such a manner as to stop the flow of the water from the first tank into the channel which conducted the water into the second tank from which the plaintiff had been irrigating his lands ;

Held, (1) that the channel system of the two tanks having formed a permanent feature of the irrigation system of the country and not being intended to be temporary and the plaintiff having utilized water for the use of his fields for more than 60 years he was entitled to the continuance of that flow into the second tank, [p. 79, col. 2.]

(2) that the Government were entitled to repair the breach in the outlet from the first tank inasmuch as there was nothing to show that in spite of the lapse of many years since the date of the breach the Government had at any time abandoned the idea of restoring the breach or that they intended the state of disrepair to be permanent ; [ibid.]

(3) that the repairs must, however, be carried out in such a manner as not to interfere with the usual supply of water necessary to irrigate the plaintiff's lands from the second tank. [ibid.]

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant before me. The 1st respondent is the Secretary of State for India. The plaintiff is the owner of certain inam survey fields in the village of Vemulapalli, namely, Nos. 89, 97, 98, 100, 103 and 104. These lands are irrigated by the water of a tank called Mukkuvanigunta which is situated in Survey No. 101. The plaintiff is the owner of the tank and also of Survey No. 102. The tank was filled by the water of a channel, which takes its rise from the hills near Gopavaram. Gopavaram is the village immediately north of the village of Ganapavorigudem and the latter village is immediately north of Vemulapalli. All the three villages originally belonged to a zemindar, but some time before the middle of the last century the zemindari ceased to exist and all the villages passed to the Government. The channel takes a definite shape according to the old survey plan of 1864 (Ex. XI) in the field marked No. 34 and described as a jungle. It then passes through the village of Ganapavarigudem until it reaches a tank called Jangamgunta which was in the field No. 45 of that plan. It escapes through a southern outlet of the said tank and ultimately falls into Mukkuvanigunta belonging to the plaintiff.

The District Munsif found that the whole course of the channel as described by me above was a natural stream and had existed for more than 70 years. The outlet of Jangamgunta through which the water of the channel continues to flow southwards was breached. The District Munsif found that the breach had existed for over 60 years from sometime prior to the vesting of the properties in the Government.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal also found that the portion of the channel south of Jangamgunta and north of Mukkuvanigunta had been existing during the last 60 or 70 years. An examination of the whole record shows that it is impossible to say when the channel and two tanks began to exist in the form in which they now exist. All that can be said is that they must have existed in this shape for more than 70 years and have become a permanent topographical feature. After the breach of the southern outlet of Jangamgunta, that tank lost its original shape : so far as the western side is concerned no water could be stored in it, but on the western side a pond was formed which formed the irrigation source to the lands of Ganapavarigudem. This state of things, namely, the tank being in a state of disrepair, (the breach of the southern outlet not being repaired) must have led to the flow of more water into Mukkuvanigunta than was originally intended; but that it did flow and was utilized by the plaintiff for the irrigation of Survey Nos. 89, 97, 98, 100, 103 and 104 for more than 60 years is found by the Courts below and cannot be now questioned in second appeal. I am not satisfied with the evidence that it was utilised for the irrigation of Survey No. 102 for a similar period as the appellant claimed before me and this is the finding of the Courts below. The plaintiff has, therefore, acquired an easement by which he is entitled to supply of enough water for the irrigation of his said lands (excluding Survey No. 102).

It has been suggested by the learned Government Pleader that the plaintiff could not acquire an easement as the portion of the channel beyond Jangamgunta carried only the surplus waters of that tank and he relied on Wood v. Waud (1), Arkwright v. Gell (2), Chamber Colliery Co. v. Hopwood (3), Mason v. Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Company (4) and Burrows v. Lang (5). But I do not think these cases apply. I have already observed that the channel was really a small natural stream and though Jangamgunta tank is probably an artificial formation, it does not mean that the channel south of it is artificial and consisted only of the surplus waters of the tank, for, before the formation of the tank, the natural stream must have continued to flow southwards. The effect of the tank could be only to dam up the waters until they reached a certain height and then to permit their escape. But even if it were not so, I think the principle of the decision in Ramessur Persad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behary Pattuk (6) applies. The channel system and the two tanks having formed a permanent feature of the country and not being intended to be temporary and the plaintiff having utilised the water for the use of his fields for more than 60 years he is entitled to the continuance of that flow. In making this observation, I do not mean to say that the Government is not entitled to repair the breach at A. Though this breach is continued for more than 60 years, I do not think it can be said that the Government at any time abandoned the idea of restoring the breach or that they intended the state of disrepair to be permanent. The tank was not shown in Ex. A, the survey plan of 1896, but the corresponding Diglott Register Ex. B shows that Survey No. 44/3 and Survey No. 45 corresponded to the old Survey No. 45 and were described in the last column as Jangamgunta. I think the Government are entitled to repair their tank and their channel and there is no duty on them to leave them as they existed in recent times. It is also unnecessary for me to discuss the effect of Fischer v. Secretary of State for India (7), for, though the Government have got the right of repairing their own channels and tanks, they cannot do this so as to prejudice existing rights, but so long as the plaintiffs' right of irrigating his inam lands already mentioned is amply protected, it seems to me that a Court has no right of dictating to Government in what manner they shall carry out the repairs. Nor is the plaintiff entitled to insist that the outlet of the repaired tank should be at the exact identical spot where it existed before.

I am not satisfied that this is a case in which it is enough to simply declare the plaintiff's right to obtain enough of water for irrigating 20 acres of land under Mukkuvanigunta; I think it is necessary to add an injunction to the declaration granted by the Subordinate Judge, though I cannot agree with the District Munsif that it need be in the very wide terms granted by him. I direct the modification of the decree of the Subordinate Judge by granting, in addition to the declaration given by him, an injunction directing the 1st defendant to carry out his works in such a manner as not to interfere with the usual supply of water necessary to irrigate 20 acres of land belonging to the plaintiff under Mukkuvanigunta.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 294 OF 1924.

July 11, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.

Musammatt KANKAI—PLAINTIFF—

TIKARAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, benami, whether legal—Holding cultivated by real tenant—Benamidar, disappearance of—Abandonment—Landlord, whether can forfeit tenancy.

Though a contract of tenancy is a personal one, a recorded tenant may hold land benami for some other person, and if there are circumstances to show the landlord knew that the recorded tenant was merely a benamidar, he cannot treat the holding as abandoned if the benamidar disappears and the land is cultivated by the person for whom he was a benami. [p. 81, col. 2]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 7th April 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 86 of 1923.

Mr. J. C. Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. D. Kolte, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent Tikaram, the zemindar of Mouza Kirnapur (Balaghat), sued the defendant-appellant Musammatt Kankai for her ejection from an occupancy holding situated in Mouza Jamrhi, his case being that the tenant of the holding in question was one Mahipal Lala who had abandoned it in the year 1922-23. The Subordinate Judge found that Musammatt Kankai had been in possession of the land but that the Court of Wards had made Mahipal Lala tenant thereof. Mahipal Lala, however, had never cultivated the land and in Suit No. 96 (copy of judgment being Ex. D. 5) Musammatt Kankai had obtained a decree against Mahipal Lala to the effect that she was the tenant of the land in question. The finding in that suit was that Mahipal Lala, when the land was brought to sale for arrears of rent, had bought it on behalf of the plaintiff and that the transaction was, in fact a benami one. The first Court accordingly dismissed the suit of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara, who reversed the judgment and decree of the first Court. The learned District Judge gave a definite finding to the effect that he had agreed with the Judge of the first Court that the facts and the circumstances proved in the case clearly showed that the defendant was in possession of the land in suit all along and that Mahipal Lala, who was her former servant, was "nominally the recorded tenant of the land." The learned District Judge seems to have been influenced by the result of the Suit No. 8 of 1919 between Mahipal Lala and Bajirao, the son of Musammatt Kankai. In that suit Bajirao had admitted that Mahipal Lala was the tenant of the land, but pleaded that he had obtained a lease thereof for an indefinite period. The Additional Subordinate Judge, who had dealt with this case, held that there had been a lease for one year only and accordingly passed a decree in favour of Mahipal Lala.

In the peculiar circumstances of this case I do not think much significance can be attached to the admission then made by Bajirao that Mahipal Lala was the tenant of the holding. That admission certainly cannot bind the present appellant Musammatt Kankai. The judgment in Suit No. 96 of 1921 (Ex. D. 5), it is needless to say, is not res judicata in the present case, but it is nevertheless of great importance. That suit was allowed to proceed ex parte by the then defendant Mahipal Lala and prima facie satisfactory evidence was given to the effect that Musammatt Kankai and not Mahipal Lala was the real tenant of the land in question. It is true that in the present case the defendant-appellant was foolish or ill-advised enough to offer a stupid plea to the effect that Mahipal Lala had obtained a lease of the land fraudulently. But it seems to me perfectly clear on the finding, not only of the first Court but also of the lower Appellate Court, that Mahipal Lala was, in fact, holding the land benami on account of the present defendant-appellant. The learned District Judge himself remarked as follows:—

"Although there is nothing to show who actually paid rent for the holding, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that the facts and the circumstances proved in the case clearly show that the defendant-respondent was in possession of the land in suit all along and that Mahipal

Lala who was her former servant was nominally the recorded tenant of the land."

In spite of this finding the learned District Judge went on to hold that there was no evidence to show that Musammatt Kankai was ever the real tenant of the land. It is not easy to understand on the findings of the learned District Judge who was the real tenant, because he has already held in his judgment that Mahipal Lala was only the nominal tenant, by which, it must be presumed, he meant that Mahipal Lala was holding the tenancy benami on account of Musammatt Kankai. On the view taken by the District Judge, however, he came to the conclusion that tenancy being a personal contract and no such contract having existed between Musammatt Kankai and the landlord, the latter was entitled entirely to disregard her and to accept Mahipal Lala's implied surrender of the land.

For my own part, in the present case it seems to me that one cannot overlook the significance of the judgment and decree in Suit No. 96 of 1921 (Fvs. D-5 and D-6), which definitely settle that Musammatt Kankai as against Mahipal Lala was the tenant of the land in question. In Kuthaperumal Rajali v. Secretary of State for India (1). Ayyar and Wallis, JJ., remarked as follows:—

"The leading authority opposed to this view is Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata (2). The decision in that case that a benamidar is entitled to sue for land in his own name is based on the view that the legal estate is vested in him. Where the legal estate is vested in the benamidar, he is in fact a trustee and as such entitled to sue, but we do not think that the effect of a purchase of land benami according to the practice in this country is in all cases to vest the legal estate in the benamidar and constitute him a trustee. For instance where, as often happens, land is purchased benami in the name of an infant son it seems impossible to hold that the land is vested in him as trustee. In the present case it is found that the benamidar was a person in the service of the real purchaser, and we do not think that the mere fact that he bid at the auction, and that the grant was made by Government in his name made him a trustee so as to entitle him to sue."; cf. also Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Serai (3).

In the present case it seems to me that it is, in reality, the plaintiff-respondent who has attempted to obtain an unfair advantage out of the benami transaction. Mahipal Lala has disappeared and knowing all these circumstances the plaintiff disturbed the long continued possession of Musammatt Kankai or of her son on her behalf. A somewhat similar case is that in Radha Bullub Gossain v. Kishen Gobind Gossain (4) and in the present case it seems to me that the real tenant of the land is undoubtedly Musammatt Kankai and that she was not liable to ejectment. It is true that the contract of tenancy is a personal one: cf. Sarjerao v. Tukaram (5) and Saiyad Noor v. Ramji Patil (6), but in the present case Mahipal Lala seems to have been nothing more than an alias for Musammatt Kankai.

Nor can it be argued with any degree of plausibility that the landlord was unaware of the real position. The defendant and plaintiff are related. The plaintiff lives close by the village in question and must have seen Bajirao cultivating the greater part of the land for many years, in other words he must have been perfectly aware of the benami nature of the transaction so far as the formal entry of Mahipal Lala as tenant is concerned. It seems to me, in the circumstances, therefore, quite unreasonable to urge that Mahipal Lala having disappeared the plaintiff-respondent was entitled to eject Musammatt Kankai from the land. It is absurd to suppose that the plaintiff was not aware of the result of Suit No. 96 of 1921 already referred to.

For these reasons I am of opinion that Musammatt Kankai was the real tenant of the land and that the landlord must have been well aware of the benami transaction under which Mahipal Lala's name was inserted as nominal tenant instead of the name of Musammatt Kankai, and further it seems to me that it would be contrary to both law and equity to allow the landlord now to take advantage of this benami transaction in the way he desires to do.

The judgment and decree of the first Court will accordingly be restored and those dated the 24th of November 1923.

First appeal from the judgment and

Messrs. M. Wasim and Mahomed Ayub, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Naimullah and Nizamatullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This first appeal is a plaintiff's appeal. It arises out of a suit brought by Musammât Kaniza alleged daughter and Musammât Chinka alleged widow of one Abdul Sattar Khan against Abdul Razzak Khan nephew of the deceased.
The parties are Sunnis (Hanafis). The plaint only set up any title on behalf of plaintiff No. 2 in default of the claim of plaintiff No. 1 succeeding in part or in whole. We shall decree the claim of the plaintiff No. 1 in part. So far, therefore, as the lower Court has dismissed the claim of plaintiff No. 2 that decision must be upheld and her appeal dismissed. The case set up for plaintiff No. 1, that is the daughter, is that by a custom in the family of the deceased the daughter succeeds to her father's estate to the exclusion of any collateral, and alternatively that in the absence of any such custom under ordinary Muhammadan Law the daughter is entitled to succeed to a moiety as against the nephew. The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that her mother was not the legally wedded wife of the deceased, and that the plaintiff although a daughter of the deceased was illegitimate. It also held that there was not evidence to support the allegation of the custom set up.

It is common ground that the deceased was married to Musammât Mehrbibi the sister of Musammât Chinka, the mother of the plaintiff No. 1, and that he contracted a second marriage with Musammât Chinka.
In the lower Court it was maintained that the deceased had divorced Musammât
Mehrbibi before he married Musammât
Chinka, but this plea was rejected by the lower Court and the finding to this effect is not impugned in this appeal. It was urged, however, and is urged in this appeal, that notwithstanding that the deceased married Musammât Chinka without first divorcing her sister the plaintiff under s. 112 of the Evidence Act and under Muhammadan Law is to be regarded as a legitimate daughter. Section 112 of the Evidence Act provides that

"Any person born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his (or her) mother and any man...shall be conclusive proof that he or she is the legitimate son or daughter of that man, unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he or she could have been begotten."

For the respondent it is urged that under Muhammadan Law the marriage of a man to a sister of his existing wife is invalid. For the appellants it is urged that such a marriage, though invalid for certain purposes is valid under Muhammadan Law for the purpose of legitimizing the issue. In the case of Aizun- nissa Khatoon v. Karimunnissa Khatoon
(1) it was held by a Bench of the Calcutta

(1) 23 O. 130; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 87.

High Court that under the Muhammadan Law marriage with the sister of a wife who is legally married is void, and that the children of such marriage are illegitimate and cannot inherit. This decision was considered and dissented from by a Bench of the Bombay High Court, Tajbi Abalal v. Mowla Khan Alikhan (2). It was there held that, Muhammadan Law does not place unions as English Law does in two categories, valid, and invalid, but in three categories of void ab initio (batil) forbidden but not entirely void if consummated (fasid) and lastly valid. The Calcutta ruling was considered in Ch. VII of Vol. II of Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, and reasons were set forth at length for holding that the decision of the Calcutta High Court was wrong. The Bombay ruling agrees with Mr. Ameer Ali. The Calcutta ruling is also held to be incorrect by Mr. Tyabji on page 162 of the 2nd Edition of his Principles of Muhammadan Law. The effect of the Bombay ruling is succinctly expressed by Mr. Ameer Ali in the following words :

"There is a great difference between a marriage which is void ab initio (batil) and one which is invalid (fasid). If a man were to contract a marriage with a woman related to him within the prohibited degrees, the marriage would be void ab initio. Under the Hanafi Law, the children of such an union would not have the status of legitimacy unless the man was wholly unaware of the relationship or he was the subject of ghurur or deception. For example, if a man were to marry a woman related to him within the prohibited degrees, on the representation that she was not so related, and the marriage was consummated, the issue of such an union would be legitimate.

"But it is different in the case of an invalid marriage. An invalid marriage is one where the parties do not labour under an inherent incapacity or absolute bar or where the disability is such as can be removed at any time. The issue of such unions are legitimate.

"An invalid marriage' says the fatawai alamgiri is like a valid marriage in some of its effects, one of which is the establishment of parentage."

"In these cases the six months will run from a copula and not from marriage."

The last line of this passage refers to the rule of Muhammadan Law that a child born after the lapse of six months from marriage, or in the case of a fasid marriage, from copula, will be deemed legitimate even though conception may have taken place before marriage. We are not disposed to re-hearse again the arguments respectively in favour of the divergent views of the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts. We consider that the argument set up by the Bombay High Court and by the authorities quoted against the Calcutta view, hold the field and that the Bombay ruling should be followed supported as it is by the views of the eminent authorities mentioned.

We may now consider the application of s. 112 of the Evidence Act. In the case of Hajira Khatun v. Amina Khatun (3), Mr. Justice Daniels expressed the opinion that s. 112 was applicable to Muhammadans. The contrary view was taken by Mr. Stan-yon in a case of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court, Zakirali v. Sograbi (4). Here it is contended that s. 112 is applicable, and that "valid" in that case means any marriage which is not batil or void ab initio. We are of the opinion that s. 112 of the Evidence Act cannot be applicable in any way to a marriage which according to the Bombay ruling mentioned above is neither void ab initio (batil) nor absolutely void but is fasid, i. e., irregular, inasmuch as s. 112 is based on a division of marriages merely into two categories, and cannot be applicable to Muhammadan Law which according to the Bombay ruling divides marriages into three categories. In any case we hold that if s. 112 can be held applicable, then we should have to construe the word "valid" in the section as "flawless" so that the presumption would not apply to fasid marriages.

The lower Court followed the Bombay ruling as we propose to do and not the Calcutta ruling, but it held that the plaintiff No. 1 was born before the expiration of six months from the marriage of the deceased to her mother, and that, therefore, she could not be held to be the daughter of Musammât Chinka. Neither in that Court nor in this Court does it appear to have been urged that even if she could be held to be the daughter of Musammât Mehrbibi it would not be sufficient for her claim to the property, and so it is unnecessary for us to consider this point of view. Five witnesses for the plaintiff deposed that the plaintiff No. 1 was born in Baisak, that is April-May of the year 1908.

(3) 73 Ind. Cas. 983; (1923) A. I. R. (A.) 570.

This evidence was not impugned by cross-examination, but the lower Court disbelieved it in the face of an admission by Musammât Chinka made in former criminal proceedings. These proceedings were brought by Abdul Sattar against his nephew under s. 498 of the Indian Penal Code by way of prosecution of that nephew for his having eloped with Musammât Mehrbibi. Musammât Chinka was examined in that case and deposed as follows:—

"I cannot count. Four months ago I gave birth to a daughter. Ten months ago I was married to Abdul Sattar. I do not know the month that the daughter was born."

Now this evidence would make the plaintiff No. 1's birth to have occurred in September or October, that is to say within six months of Abdul Sattar's marriage with her mother. An additional reason for the Subordinate Judge rejecting the evidence of the five witnesses for the plaintiff was that their evidence was clearly false evidence so far as they asserted the fact of a divorce between Abdul Sattar Khan and Musammât Mehrbibi. We are not disposed to agree with the lower Court on this finding. It may be mentioned that the Subordinate Judge who wrote the judgment appealed against was not the Judge who heard the evidence. We are, therefore, in as good a position as he was to express an opinion on the veracity of the witnesses. The statement of Musammât Chinka in the criminal proceedings cannot be regarded as an admission. She has not the status of a plaintiff in the case, and her statement cannot bind her daughter as an admission. The only way in which that statement was admissible in evidence was as rebutting Musammât Chinka's evidence in this case. We are prepared to exclude her evidence, but there still remains the evidence of the five witnesses for the plaintiff. No attempt was made as already remarked, to impugn this evidence by cross-examination. It may be that these witnesses gave false evidence in support of the divorce of Musammât Mehrbibi, but as the case stands we think that their evidence must be accepted as to the month of birth of the plaintiff No. 1. Accordingly our finding is that the plaintiff No. 1's legitimacy must be held to be proved under the presumption of Muhammadan Law that in the case of a false marriage a child born on the expiry of six months of copula is to be regarded as legitimate.

We now come to the question of the custom. The wajib-ul-arz provides that a son and daughter will share equally. There is no specific provision that a daughter in the absence of a son will exclude a collateral, but it is urged that this must be inferred from the fact that a daughter shares with a son to the exclusion of collaterals. We agree with the lower Court that the inference would be a dangerous one. It may well be that there is a custom to give a daughter a half share with her brother, but it does not follow that the daughter should have the whole inheritance in the absence of a brother. Under ordinary Muhammadan Law she will be entitled to one half as against a collateral. She will not, therefore, be in a worse position than that if she had a brother. We do not think it safe to infer that she should be in a better position.

We agree with the lower Court that the plaintiff No. 1 has failed to prove the custom set up by her. We also find nothing in the wajib-ul-arz that would support the plea of plaintiff No. 2 that a widow without children, i. e., legitimate children, will have preference to a collateral, a point which was remarked above, would only arise if the plaintiff No. 1's claim were to be ejected in toto. In consequence of the above findings we dismiss the appeal of plaintiff No. 2 with costs. We allow the appeal of plaintiff No. 1 in part and direct a decree to be drawn up securing the plaintiff No. 1 a half share in the property in suit. The plaintiff No. 1 is awarded half costs in both Courts, inasmuch as her claim has been allowed for half the property.

It may be remarked that before arguments in this appeal the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 had arrived at a compromise with defendant No. 1, one of the nine persons substituted for the original defendant Abdul Razzak, who died before the hearing of this appeal, whereby the defendant No. 1 agreed that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 should get a decree for one-third of the 8-annas share of Abdul Razzak. On our finding the plaintiff No. 2 is entitled to nothing, and the plaintiff No. 1 is entitled to one-half of the 8-annas share as against all the defendants. We are unable in our decree to give any effect to this compromise. The compromise states that the defendant No. 1 was entitled under a deed of gift to one-third of the property Abdul Razzak, but we do not know whether the other defendants would admit this. In any case under our finding the plaintiff No. 1 gets one half of the property of Abdul Razzak which is more than one-third. She cannot, therefore, suffer from our disregarding the compromise. On the other hand the defendant No. 1 has given up all that he says that he is entitled to. He, therefore, cannot complain of the decree.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree on a mortgage executed by the first defendant, father of defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The mortgage was executed in order to discharge a prior mortgage-deed executed by the first defendant in 1906, Ex. B, the suit mortgage, being Ex. A, dated 10th October 1915. The Subordinate Judge has given a decree, holding that the mortgage, having been executed to discharge an antecedent debt of the father, is binding upon the sons' shares, and he relies on the Full Bench decision of this Court in Arumugam Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (1).

(1) 52 Ind. Cas. 525; 12 M. 711; 9 L. W. 565; (1919) M. W. N. 409; 37 M. L. J. 166; 26 M. L. T. 96.

For the appellants it is contended that the decision is not applicable, because in the present case a portion of the previous debt could only be enforced as a mortgage debt and not as a personal debt of the father. This question has not been considered in the lower Court and it is not at all clear whether the personal liability is barred or not in respect of the first three instalments. Whether it is barred or not, however, the case can be disposed of on another ground: It has definitely been held in Singh v. Sheo Nandan Misra (2), that a father's debt whether the personal liability is barred or not, is an antecedent debt binding on the sons' shares. This same principle has been adopted in Arumugam Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (1), and although it may be said that in that case the personal liability had not been barred and that, therefore, the decision is not strictly in point, yet in view of the form of the questions propounded by the Referring Bench it is clear from the judgment that the first of the questions was dealt with as a general question, and in effect the decision of the Full Bench is that any prior mortgage-debt due by the father is valid as an antecedent debt, and this decision is not qualified by any expression of opinion that the mortgage-debt must also be enforceable as a personal liability.

We, therefore, follow these two cases and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Time for redemption is extended to three months from this date.

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—These are nine consolidated appeals from a decree, dated the 15th November, 1916, of the High Court at Madras, which varied a decree, dated the 4th September, 1908, of the Subordinate Judge of Nagapatam.

The suit in which these appeals have arisen was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 2nd July, 1905, by three plaintiffs, who were reversioners of Arunachala Mudaliar, against thirty-eight defendants for the possession of lands which were alleged by the plaintiffs to be lands of the Kulikara estate in the District of Tanjore and for mesne profits. The title of the plaintiffs to sue was denied by the defendants on various grounds, of which those which are now important and have to be considered are whether the suit was not barred by the result of a litigation which began in 1887 and ended with a final decree in 1892, and whether the suit was not otherwise barred by the law of limitation.

The Kulikara estate admittedly belonged to Arunachala when he died in 1849. He was then about 22 years of age. The family to which he belonged were Hindus of the Sudra caste. He had been adopted by Vithialinga Mudaliar, a relation, who was descended from an ancestor from whom Arunachala also was descended. The plaintiffs are the three sons of Chokkappa Mudaliar, who was the youngest of three brothers by birth, that is, natural brothers, of Arunachala. Arunachala died childless, leaving a widow, Chokkammal, who died on the 25th December, 1902, within 12 years before this suit was instituted. She was a defendant to the suit with which the litigation of 1887 commenced. It will be necessary to refer at some length to that litigation. The following pedigree will show Arunachala and his natural brothers and some other persons:—

Arunachala, as whose reversioners the plaintiffs claim to be, had before his death directed his wife Chokkammal to adopt as a son to him his natural brother Alagusundara. In 1862 Chokkammal did as a fact adopt Alagusundara as a son to her late husband Alagusundara was a younger natural brother of Arunachala, and at the time of the adoption there was no one living who could give him in adoption. As a matter of Hindu Law the adoption was invalid.

In 1862 Chokkammal, having adopted Alagusundara, put him in possession of the immoveable property now in question, reserving to herself for her maintenance some of the immoveable property to which she was entitled as the widow of Arunachala. With the property which she reserved for her maintenance this suit is not concerned. There can be no doubt that in 1862 Chokkammal did put Alagusundara in possession of the property now in question. In March, 1862, she presented an undated petition to the Tahsildar of Nannilam, the Revenue Officer, in which she stated that, with the consent of her husband, she had adopted Alagusundara, his natural younger brother, and, with the exception of certain villages which she named, she had made him proprietor of all the land and other properties, etc., standing in her name, and prayed that, with the exception of the three villages, "the miras" (ownership) might be transferred to him and all the sircar proceedings might be passed in his name.

Alagusundara continued to be in possession of the property of which Chokkammal had put him in possession in 1862 until he died in 1864, and had dealt with the property which had been transferred to him as an absolute owner would have done. Upon his death in 1864 his elder brother Kalianasundara, on the 18th July, 1864, presented a deed of consent to the Tahsildar of Nannilam praying for the transfer to the name of Thiagaraja of the property which stood in the name of Alagusundara, and the miras was transferred to him. Thiagaraja was by birth a son of Kalianasundara and had been adopted by Alagusundara. He was in 1864 about two years of age.

From the 18th July, 1864, Kalianasundara, until he died in September, 1876, was referred to in all documents relating to the property as the guardian of Thiagaraja, who was in possession of the property in question from 1864 until he died in 1881, and during that time the management of the affairs of the family was carried on solely in his name. Upon the death of Thiagaraja in 1881 the miras which had stood in his name was altered to the name of his widow Kamalath, a girl of about 12 years of age, who died in 1882. Upon the death of Kamalath in 1882, Murugathal, the mother by adoption of Thiagaraja, took possession of the property in question for a Hindu widow's interest and held it until 1884, when Chokkammal forcibly ejected her.

On the 9th February, 1887, Chokkammal brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam against Chokkammal and others, in which she claimed a decree for the possession of the properties now in question, alleging in her plaint that her husband Alagusundara had been the adopted son of Arunachala, and that the properties which she claimed belonged to him as such adopted son, and had been enjoyed by him from 1862 until he died in 1864; that after his death her adopted son Thiagaraja had enjoyed them until he died in 1881, and after him his widow, Kamalath, got them according to Hindu Law and she died childless in 1882, and since her death she, Murugathal, got them under Hindu Law and enjoyed them until 1884, when Chokkammal forcibly took possession of them and enjoyed them adversely to her. Chokkammal in her written statement in that suit denied Murugathal's title, alleged that she, Chokkammal, had been in possession of the property in question for 38 years from the death of her husband Arunachala in 1849, and denied that Alagusundara had been adopted. Several issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge in that suit who found that Alagusundara was adopted as a son to Arunachala in 1862 by Chokkammal, who had the authority of her husband to make the adoption, that the adoption was invalid according to Hindu Law, that Thiagaraja was adopted by Murugathal under the authority of her husband, but that the course of conduct of Chokkammal and the change of position of Alagusundara as the result of his adoption made it inequitable to hold that he had not title to the property, and that the putting him in possession of the property in question and allowing him to manage it for his own purposes substantially operated as a gift of the property to him. The Subordinate Judge in that suit also held that Murugathal's claim of adverse possession of the miras for 12 years was established, and on the 18th December, 1889, he gave her a decree for possession of the property which she claimed. From that decree of the Subordinate Judge the suit of 1887 went on appeal by Chokkammal to the High Court at Madras. The learned Judges of the High Court held that Alagasandara's adoption was invalid, but holding that Murugathal's claim of adverse possession for 12 years was established by their decree of the 17th August, 1892, dismissed Chokkammal's appeal. Chokkammal did not appeal from that decree of the High Court, and it became final.

It is necessary to consider what was Chokkammal's position as a Hindu widow and how far her acts could, according to Hindu Law, bind the reversioners to her husband. On Arunachala's death in 1849 she became entitled to the full beneficial enjoyment of the estate which had been his at the time of his death. As Mr. Mayne, in para. 605 of his "Hindu Law and Usage," correctly, in their Lordships' opinion, said:—

"It was at one time common to speak of a widow's estate as being one for life. But this is wholly incorrect. It would be just as untrue to speak of the estate of a father under the Mitakshara Law as being one for life. Hindu Law knows nothing of estates for life, or in-tail, or in fee. It measures estates, not by duration, but by use. The restrictions upon the use of an estate inherited by a woman are similar in kind to those which limit the powers of a male holder, but different in degree."

The Hindu widow has not power to make a gift of the estate. Handing over the possession of the estate to a son whom she has validly adopted to her deceased husband is not making a gift of the estate to him. The estate became his on his adoption if he was validly adopted. She has no power to sell or assign the estate except for necessity, so as to bind her husband's reversioners after her death. But she represents the estate in suits brought by her or against her for possession of the estate or any part of it, and she and the reversioners are equally bound by any final decree which a Court makes in such a suit provided that the suit was fought out according to law and was not collusive or fraudulent.

In the suit of 1837, Chokkammal was no doubt personally interested to defeat Murugathal's claim for the possession of lands which had been in her own possession as the widow of Arunachala from 1849 until 1862, but although her object in resisting Murugathal's claim was probably a purely personal and selfish object, she did, in fact and in law in that suit, represent the estate as well as her own interests as a Hindu widow. The suit of 1887 was not a collusive suit; it was regularly and according to due procedure at law fought out in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and in the High Court.

A protracted argument was submitted to the Board on the question whether under Hindu Law adverse possession against a widow in possession of an estate for a Hindu widow's interest bars the reversioner. While it is not necessary in the view which will later be announced by the Board on the question of limitation in this case to make any formal pronouncement upon this point, it may be convenient to say that the authorities referred to were as follows:—In Goluckmonee Dabee v. Degumber Dey which was decided in 1852, Sir Lawrence Peel, who was the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, said:—"It has been invariably considered for many years that the widow" (speaking of the widow as heir) "fully represents the estate, and it is also settled law that adverse possession which bars her bars the heir also after her, which would not be the case if she were a mere tenant for life, as known to the English Law." [See the reference to that case in the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (1).]

In Katama Natchier v. Raja of Shiva-gunga (2), which was decided by the Board in 1863, the Board, consisting of Knight Bruce, L. J., Sir Edward Ryan, and Turner, L. J., the assessors being Sir Lawrence Peel and Sir James W. Colville, all being eminent lawyers, and three of them having had judicial experience in India, Lord Justice Turner delivered the considered judgment of the Board, and in it said, at page 603*, as follows:—

"It seems, however, to be necessary, in order to determine the mode in which this appeal ought to be disposed of, to consider the question whether the decree of 1847, if it had become final in Anga Mootoo Nat- chier's lifetime, would have bound those claiming the zemindari in succession to her. And their Lordships are of opinion that, unless it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or, in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground, it would have been an effectual bar to any new suit in the Zillah Court by any person claiming in succession to Anga Mootoo Natchier. For assuming her to be entitled to the zemindari at all, the whole estate would for the time be vested in her, absolutely for some purposes, though, in some respects, for a qualified interest; and until her death it could not be ascertained who would be entitled to succeed. The same principle which has prevailed in the Courts of this country as to tenants in tail representing the inheritance, would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow, and it is obvious that there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow."

The declaration as to Hindu Law which their Lordships have quoted from the considered judgment of the Board, which was delivered by Lord Justice Turner in 1863, has in the present appeal been objected to on the ground that it was obiter. The following cases, however, were referred to as showing that the doctrine there set forth was in accord with the course of judicial decisions.

Their Lordships will first refer to the case Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (1) which came before a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, 1867, in which the declaration of the Board in the Shivagunga's case (2) to which their Lordships have referred was accepted as a correct statement of the Hindu Law to which it related and was applied to the case before the Full Bench. The facts of the case before the Full Bench are not fully stated in the order of reference to the Full Bench, but they were as follows: One Ramdoollub Chuckerbutty died possessed of an estate consisting of lands leaving two sons, two daughters and his widow, Dhone Mala. The two sons died without issue in the lifetime of the widow, and upon their death the widow, Dhone Mala, became entitled to the possession of the respective estates of the sons, but the defendant in that suit, a stranger, and as a trespasser, took possession of the estate more than 12 years before the suit, and the widow never obtained possession. Upon the death of the widow, sons of the daughters, who were the reversioners to their uncle's estate, brought the suit for possession, which was before the Full Bench in second appeal. The first Appellate Court had dismissed the suit as not brought within time, that is, within 12 years from the time when the defendant had wrongfully taken possession, and the question before the Full Bench was whether the suit was barred by limitation or whether the reversioners could sue upon the death of the widow, Dhone Mala. The Full Bench held that the cause of action arose when the defendant had taken possession and that the suit was time-barred. The Full Bench was an exceptionally strong Bench of Judges, who had much experience in cases involving considerations of Hindu Law. Their Lordships will give extracts from the judgments which were delivered in the Full Bench, as those judgments appear to their Lordships to confirm the declaration as to Hindu Law which they have quoted from the judgment of the Board in the Shivagunga's case (2) and to have a direct bearing on the appeal before the Board, and are very instructive.

In delivering his judgment in that Full Bench case, with which Seton-Karr, J., concurred, Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., after referring to Sir Lawrence Peel's judgment already mentioned, said:

"It was also held by the Privy Council in the Shivagunga's case (2) that in the absence of fraud or collusion, a decision against a widow, with regard to her deceased husband's estate, would be binding upon the reversionary heirs. . . . If the female heir in the present case had sued the wrong doer, and, without fraud or collusion, had failed to make out her case to turn him out of possession, the reversionary heirs would have been bound by the decision. I am assuming that they are not claiming through the female heir."

Farther on Sir Barnes Peacock, said:

"It is said that the reversionary heirs could not sue (for possession) during the lifetime of the widow, and that, therefore, they ought not to be barred by any adverse holding against the widow at a time when they could not sue. But when we look at the widow as a representative, and see that the reversionary heirs are bound by decrees relating to her husband's estate which are obtained against her without fraud or collusion, we are of opinion, that they are also bound by limitation, by which she, without fraud or collusion, is barred."

Jackson, J., in his judgment, said :

"I entirely concur in the opinion of the Chief Justice that the plaintiff (the reversionary heir) was barred in the present case. . . . It has been distinctly held by the Privy Council in the Shivagunga's case (2) that a decision fairly arrived at without fraud or collusion in the presence of a Hindu widow in possession of the estate will bind reversionary heirs. That being so decided, it appears to me impossible to escape the conclusion that an adverse possession which barred the widow will also bar the heirs, and in that opinion we are fully and strongly supported by the decisions of the late Supreme Court in the case to which his Lordship the Chief Justice has referred."

Phear, J., in his judgment, said :

"I too desire to avoid pledging myself to all the illustrations which have fallen from the Chief Justice; but with this exception, I concur entirely in the reasoning which he has given in support of his conclusions, and I concur also in the remarks which have been made by Mr. Justice Jackson. I will add that it seems to me that, when a reversionary (Hindu) heir succeeds to the property of his ancestor on the death of an intervening female heir, he takes substantially the same proprietary right as she enjoyed, and no more, though, doubtless, she was fettered in a way that he is not, with regard to the dealings with the property, viz., her alienations are often liable to be avoided by him when he succeeds to the right of succession."

Macpherson, J., in his judgment, said :

"I also concur in the proposed answer. But a very great difference exists between the case immediately before us, and the case in which a mother (or other Hindu female having an estate similar to that of a childless widow) has herself alienated property belonging to the estate which she has taken as heiress, without sufficient reason for making such alienation. In the latter case, the alienation is good as against her, and so far as her own life-interest is concerned. Therefore, in fact, no cause of action necessarily arises at all with respect to her alienation so long as she lives. The cause of action does not arise until her death, when the reversioner's cause of action for the first time accrues. In the case before us, the property having never reached the hands of the mother (the Hindu widow) at all, having been throughout held adversely to her, the cause of action (of the reversioner) accrued in the mother's lifetime, and, therefore, a suit to recover possession, by whomsoever it may be brought, is barred, unless instituted within 12 years from the commencement of the adverse possession."

In Aumirtolall Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter (3), the decision of the Full Bench at Calcutta in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (1) was cited in argument, and Sir Barnes Peacock, in delivering the judgment of the Board, affirmed that decision.

In Jugul Kishore v. Jotindro Mohun Tagore (4), which was before the Board in 1884, where a Hindu widow's right, title and interest in property had been sold in execution of a money decree, the Board, without a suggestion of dissent from the ruling, said, at page 73*. "It was held in the Shivagunga's case (2) that although a widow has for some purposes only a partial interest, she has for other purposes the whole estate vested in her; and that in a suit against a widow in respect of the estate the decision is binding upon the reversionary heir." "The Board also said :

"If the suit is simply for a personal claim against the widow, then merely the widow's qualified interest is sold (in execution of the decree) and the reversionary interest is not bound by it (the sale). If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the estate, or for a cause which is not a mere personal cause of action against the widow, then the whole estate passes."

In Pertabnarain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (5) which was before the Board in 1884, the Board, said, at page 207* :

"It is sufficient for the present purpose to hold that, until, she had appointed another to be owner and representative, the Maharanee's estate in the taluk was sufficient to constitute her the full representative of it in the former suit. Her estate was at least as large as that of a Hindu widow in her husband's property. What was said by this Board of the widow's estate in the Shivagunga's case (2) is applicable to hers."

In Hari Nath Chatterji v. Mothurmohun Goswami (6) which came before the Board in 1893, it was held that the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2) to the effect that an adverse decree against a Hindu widow binds those claiming in succession applies equally to the case of the daughter. It had been argued in that case that the adverse title alleged was founded on something which was independent of limitation, and that the Limitation Act XV of 1877 let the reversionary heir sue within 12 years from the time when his right to possession accrued. With reference to that argument, Lord Watson, at page 188*, said:—

"But you must show that the new law gives a right of action to the reversioner notwithstanding that the widow's right of possession has been extinguished by decree."

Owing to the fact that it did not appear from the judgment of the Board when Pearimoni, who was the second wife of Ramanundun Goswami, had died, beyond the fact that she was living when he died in 1847, there was some hesitation in referring to that case in the argument of this appeal. Mr. De Gruyther has, however, shown from the appeal record of that case, which is preserved in the Privy Council Office, that Pearimoni died in 1855.

In Risal Singh v. Bulwant Singh (7) which was before the Board in 1915, Chaudhari Risal Singh, alleging that he was the reversionary heir of Jagat Prakash Singh, brought a suit against Bulwant Singh for possession of immovable property known as the Landhaura estate. The property there claimed had belonged to Raja Raghubir Singh until he died childless in 1868. Raghubir Singh left a widow, Rani Dharam Kunwar, who bore to him a posthumous son, Jagat Prakash Singh, who died in 1870. Rani Dharam Kunwar had the authority of her husband to make successive adoptions. In 1877 she adopted to her husband a boy who died within three years after he had been adopted, and then she adopted another boy, who died in 1835, and in 1890 she adopted Bulwant Singh, the defendant to the suit. She continued in possession of the property, alleging that her husband Raghubir Singh had by his Will left it to her for her life. After a time Rani Dharam Kunwar and Bulwant Singh quarrelled. She was claiming a right to manage the property during her life; he was claiming his full rights as an adopted son. The result was that, on the 7th January 1905, Rani Dharam Kunwar brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur against Bulwant Singh, in which she claimed to have it declared that she had no power to adopt Bulwant Singh and had never validly adopted him, and to have her registered deed of adoption, in accordance with which she had adopted him, declared void and ineffectual against her. He alleged that Rani Dharam Kunwar had power to adopt him, and had validly adopted him. The Subordinate Judge, holding that Rani Dharam Kunwar was estopped from denying that she had validly adopted Bulwant Singh, dismissed her suit. She appealed to the High Court at Allahabad, and the High Court, also holding that Rani Dharam Kunwar was estopped, dismissed her appeal. Thereupon she appealed to His Majesty in Council. The Board in that appeal considered the evidence in that suit, and having come to the conclusion that Rani Dharam Kunwar had validly adopted Bulwant Singh and that her appeal should be dismissed, advised His Majesty accordingly. In the judgment the Board, at page 178*, said:

"There can be no doubt, in their Lordships' opinion, that Rani Dharam Kunwar in her suit against Bulwant Singh did, notwithstanding the personal estoppel under which she laboured, represent the estate on the question of fact as to whether Bulwant Singh had or had not been validly adopted, and that she represented the estate within the meaning of the rule in Katama Natchier v. Raja of Shivagunga (2). The principle of law to be applied in such cases was, their Lordships consider, correctly summarized by Banerji, J., in his judgment in this case, thus: 'Where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in a female heir, a decree fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate is, in the absence of fraud or collusion, binding on the reversionary heir.' It cannot be said that there had not been a fair trial by the Board in 1912 of the right in the suit of Rani Dharam Kunwar against Bulwant Singh. The right in that suit was his right to the estate as a son validly adopted to Raja Raghubir Singh."

Upon the other side it was asserted the principle of the Shivagunga's case (2) might have been applied and had not been applied in the case of Runchordas Vandravandas v. Paravatibai (8) which came before the Board in 1899. The suit in that case was brought on the 21st December, 1888, against Vandravandas and the Advocate-General of Bombay by Curson-das Govindjee as the heir-at-law of Kallianji Sewji, who had died on the 6th January, 1869, leaving two widows—Cooverbai, who died in 1871, and Nenavahoo, who died in 1888. Kallianji Sewji had made a Will, which was proved on the 2nd March, 1869, by three executors, who were trustees, of whom the first defendant to the suit was at the date of the suit the sole survivor. The three trustees were appointed by the testator as trustees for dharam—that is, to make gifts for charitable or religious purposes. The Will contained the following clause: "As to the estates which have been given by me to my wives, they are to enjoy the rent of the said estates during their natural lives, and on the death of my wives the said estates are to revert to my dharam, and whatsoever income may be derivable from the said estates is to be expended for my dharam." The main question in the suit was whether the gift for charitable or religious purposes was void for vagueness and uncertainty, and the High Court at Bombay and the Board in appeal held that it was void and that the trustees took no interest under the Will. The suit was brought after the death of Nenavahoo.

It appears to their Lordships that part of the property claimed by the reversioner had been property of the respective widows as their stridhan, as to which there was some question as to the "rights of the heir" and that other parts of the property claimed was property which had been in the possession of the widows, to which the reversionary heir, the plaintiff, in the ordinary course, was clearly entitled, and that the Board was considering how an account, which the Courts below had ordered to be prepared, should be worded so as to show those two classes of property.

The defence of limitation was raised, but the Board held that it did not apply, saying:

"It is not necessary to consider what might be the case if the widows or the survivor of them were suing, as the plaintiff does not derive his right from or through them, and the extinguishment of their right would not extinguish his."

It has been maintained that the Board was not intending to discredit the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2). What the Board was considering was the wording of an account which the Appellate Court and the first Court had ordered to be prepared. The judgment of the Board was delivered by Sir Richard Couch in 1899, who in 1893 had delivered the judgment:

in Hari Nath Chatterji v. Goswami (6) which expressly approved of and applied as sound Hindu Law the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2). What was said by the Board in 1899 at the conclusion of the judgment makes it plain what the Board was considering. It is there said:

"The decree of the first dated the 27th July, 1896, should have been varied as it has been. It is an account of the moveable property left by Cooverbai and Nenavahoo at the time of their deaths distinguishing between such of it as was their stridhan and 'as such' formed part of the estate of the testator. 'As such' appears to be an error for 'such as.' With this alteration their Lordships think the decree will be right."

As altered by the Board the account which was to be taken was an account of the moveable property left by Cooverbai and Nenavahoo, the widows of the testator, respectively at the time of their deaths distinguishing between such of the said property as was the stridhan of the said Cooverbai and Nenavahoo and such as formed part of the estate of the said testator.

It does not appear to their Lordships how the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2), could have been applied in the case then before the Board. What the Board, at the stage of the suit which was then before the Board, the Board having decided against the trust to the trustees, was considering was what was the account which was to be taken, and the Board directed that the account should separately show what had been the stridhan of the widows, and what was the property to which the heir might ordinarily be entitled. Their Lordships are unable to see what was the estate, within the meaning of the Shivagunga's case (2) which the widows had represented, or to what the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2) could have been applied. The title of the trustees to the property devised or bequeathed to them for charitable or religious purposes by Kallianji Sewji was not questioned until the survivor of the two widows died in 1888, and that property had never been represented by the widows or either of them. It had been in the exclusive possession of the trustees under the Will of Kallianji Sewji from 1869 until the Court in the suit which was brought on the 21st December, 1888, after the death of the last surviving widow, had decided that the gift for charitable or religious purposes was void.

The result of the cases to which their Lordships have referred shows, in their opinion, that the Board has invariably applied the rules of the Shivagunga's case (2) as sound Hindu Law where that rule was applicable.

It also appears to their Lordships that the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs could not be entitled to a decree for possession without displacing the adoption of 1862 of Alagusundara by Chokkammal. It was held by the Board in Jagannath v. Chaothrani v. Dakhina Mohun (9), that Art. 129 of the Second Schedule of Act IX of 1871 relates to all suits in which the plaintiff cannot succeed without displacing an apparent adoption by virtue of which the defendant is in possession. That Article prescribed 12 years as the period of time within which a suit "to establish or set aside an adoption" might be brought and that such period of 12 years should begin to run from "The date of the adoption, or (at the option of the plaintiff) from the date of the adoptive father's death."

Act IX of 1871 did not give to a reversioner, whose right to sue for possession accrued upon the death of Hindu widow any further time than the 12 years given by Art. 129 to any plaintiff. That Act was in force until the 19th July, 1877, when Act XV of 1877, the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, came into force, and by Art. 141 of the Second Schedule of Act XV of 1877 a Hindu entitled to the possession of immovable property on the death of a Hindu female might bring his suit for possession within 12 years from the time when the female dies. In the present case the period of limitation allowed by Art. 129 of Act IX of 1871 expired in 1874.

The person who at the date of the adoption in 1862 was entitled to sue to set aside the adoption must have been a reversioner to Arunachala, and looking at the pedigreees he must have been either Kaliasundara or Chokkappa, and it has not been pleaded or otherwise alleged that they were at the time of the adoption under the age of 18 years so as to entitle them to an extension of the period allowable to a minor under s. 7, Act IX of 1871, to bring a suit. It is obvious looking at the facts and dates in the present case, that Kaliasundara and Chokkappa must have arrived at full age long before Act IX of 1871 expired and that that Act applied.

In the present suit the Subordinate Judge found that the question as to the adoption of Arunachala was res judicata, but Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Mr. Justice Burn, in the appeal to the High Court, decided that the principle of res judicata did not apply. On that subject their Lordships do not consider it necessary to express an opinion.

It has been arranged by the parties through their respective Counsel and their respective Solicitors in the best interests of their clients that the plaintiff's appeal No. 124 of 1923, and the first defendants' appeal, No. 128 of 1923, which relates to the village of Enkan, should be dismissed, and that there should be no order as to costs in either of these appeals in which other respondents have not appeared. It has also been arranged by the parties though their respective Counsel and their respective Solicitors in the best interests of their clients that the plaintiffs' appeal No. 125 of 1923, should be dismissed without costs on either side, the plaintiffs having admitted that the late husband of the first defendant was not disqualified from inheriting along with the plaintiffs. Except as above arranged by the parties it appears to their Lordships that all the appeals should be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will so accordingly humbly advise His Majesty.

Since the hearing of these appeals some of the parties, their Lordships understand, have entered into compromises. On production of the proper evidence, effect to these compromises will be given in the Order in Council confirming this report.

If a negotiable instrument does not set out clearly that the maker is not personally liable the fact of the knowledge of the payee that the executant did not intend to incur personal liability is irrelevant. [p. 96, col. 1.]

Where, however, the promisee induces the executant of a pro-note to sign the pro-note upon the belief that a third party only, and not he, would be liable thereunder, the executant cannot be held to be personally liable. [p. 95, col. 2.]

Where the belief is induced by the third party and not the promisee, the executant cannot escape liability. [p. 96, col. 2, p. 97, col. 2.]

Where a promissory note is executed in pursuance of an agreement between the executant and a third party that the former would execute the promissory note, but that the latter would pay the interest on it and also the principal, this is sufficient evidence of an implied condition that that third party should pay the interest falling due on the promissory note as the duly appointed agent of the executant and the payment by him of interest saves limitation, but not so, where payment of interest is made not in consequence of any such agreement between the third party and the executant but in consequence of an understanding between the executant and the promisee. ### JUDGMENT.

Ashworth, J.—This is a plaintiff's first appeal. The suit is one brought by the National Bank of Upper India (in liquidation) against the defendant No. 1 Bansi Dhar and defendant No. 2 Gopal Das on a promissory note signed by the former only, and on a current account alleged to have existed between the defendants and the Bank. Reliance on the current account as a cause of action was abandoned in the lower Court, as the only debit items in this account were instalments of interest due on the promissory note, and for the purposes of this appeal the sole cause of action is liability under the promissory note. In the lower Court the second defendant pleaded that he could not be liable on a promissory note which was only signed by defendant No. 1 and not by himself, a contention which was upheld by the Court, and which is not impugned in this appeal. Bansi Dhar defendant No. 1 pleaded that even if consideration were held to have existed the suit was barred by limitation, as he himself had neither paid any interest on it nor authorised any one else to pay interest on it, and that three years had elapsed since the date of its execution. The lower Court held that the promissory note was executed by defendant No. 1 for consideration, namely, the promise by the Bank to the defendant No. 1 (a promise fulfilled) to credit the account of Bishambhar Nath Tandon with the sum secured by the promissory note, namely, Rs. 20,000. It found, however, that there was only one payment towards interest made within three years, namely, that of Rs. 908-6-3 made on the 23rd November 1918. This sum it held to have been paid by a third party Bishambhar Nath otherwise than as the agent of the defendant No. 1. It, therefore, held that limitation was not saved under s. 20 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908). The finding as to limitation is impugned in this appeal. The respondent's Counsel is prepared to maintain that the lower Court's finding as to limitation was correct, irrespective of any other finding, but his main contention is that the suit should have been dismissed because there was no consideration. I am of the opinion that it might be difficult to hold that the suit was barred by limitation if the promissory note was for consideration, and, therefore, I first proceed to decide the question whether the lower Court's finding that there was consideration should be upheld or not.

The plaintiff's case as set forth in the plaint was that the defendant No. 1 and his brother the defendant No. 2 needed the money for their cloth and banking business and accordingly borrowed it from the Bank on the security of the promissory note in question. The promissory note in question is Ex. 1, dated 22nd December 1917. It is for the sum of Rs. 20,000 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum to be compounded half yearly, and purports to have been executed "for value received in full." It is signed by defendant No. 1 Bansi Dhar alone. Exhibit 2 is a receipt executed by Bansi Dhar alone for Rs. 20,000. The plaint explains that the note was executed by Bansi Dhar alone because his brother, the second defendant, was a Director of the Bank and did not think it advisable to appear as a borrower from the Bank. The plea set up by Bansi Dhar in para. 10 of his written statement was that neither he nor his brother ever borrowed the twenty thousand rupees from the Bank, and that the note was executed by him at the request of Bishambhar Nath, a third party, with the knowledge of the Manager of the Bank, Pandit Ram Nath Sapru, merely, to conceal the indebtedness of Bishambhar Nath to the Bank, Bishambhar Nath being one of the Directors. The actual language of this para. 10 is as follows:—

"There was an intimate friendship between Pandit Ram Nath Sapru deceased Manager of the plaintiff Bank, and Rai Sahib Babu Bishambhar Nath, one of the Directors of it, and the answering defendant and the said Rai Sahib, were also on very intimate terms. Rai Sahib Babu Bishambhar Nath had taken the debt entered in the pro-note, the basis of claim, from the plaintiff; at his suggestion the answering defendant signed the pro-note the basis of claim and its receipt without getting any consideration, the answering defendant did not sign the said deeds as a debtor and no contract was entered into or consideration passed between the plaintiff Bank and the answering defendant with respect to the said documents."

This pleading in the written statement of the defendant No. 1 was subsequently amplified by a statement of Mr. Wazir Hasan, Counsel for the defendant which was as follows:—

"The loan sued for, if real, was negotiated by Rai Bishambhar Nath for his own benefit. He received that money from the Bank, and, therefore, there was no consideration which moved from the Bank in favour of Bansi Dhar. Bansi Dhar is, therefore, not liable to re-pay the loan. Bishambhar Nath, the real debtor, is liable to pay the loan. The defendant Bansi Dhar signed the pro-note at the request of Lala Bishambhar Nath who in view of the practice in the Bank, being one of the Directors of the plaintiff Bank, could not sign the pro-note. The plaintiff's case is based on the ground that the consideration of the pro-note in suit consists in the payment made by the Bank to Bansi Dhar. There is no other consideration set up by the plaintiff. The consideration so set up is denied by us. It is not our case that Bansi Dhar signed the pro-note in the capacity of an agent of a disclosed or undisclosed principal. Our case is that we are not liable because there is no consideration moving from the Bank towards us that would make the promise contained in the note sued for binding on us. As a positive case we further state that the loan advanced by the Bank to Bishambhar Nath was not really due to the fact that we ever made any request to the Bank for the loan to be made to Bishambhar Nath. The whole transaction was concluded between the Bank and Bishambhar Nath alone, and Bansi Dhar came in only as a benami signatory to the pro-note. The Bank was fully cognizant of this state of affairs."

Now it must be admitted that this pleading did not furnish an answer to the claim on the pro-note. This pleading set up the fact that by agreement between defendant No. 1 and Bishambhar Nath the former was to incur no personal liability, and these pleadings suggest, though they do not explicitly state so, that the Manager Ram Nath Sapru was aware that the defendant No. 1 did not intend to incur personal liability. This was not enough. It was necessary in the language of s. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act to prove that the Manager of the Bank Ram Nath Sapru induced defendant No. 1 to sign the pro-note upon the belief that Bishambhar Nath only would be held liable. Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act runs as follows:—

"An agent who signs his name to a promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque without indicating thereon that he signs as agent, or that he does not intend thereby to incur personal responsibility, is liable personally on the instrument, except to those who induced him to sign upon the belief that the principal only would be held liable."

The Subordinate Judge has relied on the case, Yenuganti China Venkatarayanim v. Katagiri Venkata Narasimharayanim (1), as authority for holding that "If a negotiable instrument does not set out clearly that the maker is not personally liable the fact of the knowledge of the payee that the executant did not intend to incur personal liability is irrelevant", and we see no reason for dissenting from this pronouncement. If the evidence had only proved as much as was contended in the pleadings of the Counsel of defendant No. 1, the decision of the Subordinate Judge would have been correct in my opinion, but the evidence proves much more than this. It proves that the Manager Ram Nath actually induced the defendant No. 1 to sign the pro-note upon the belief that Bishambhar Nath only would be held liable. It is on a finding of fact and not a finding of law that I dissent from the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge. The evidence on this matter consists of the oral evidence of Bansi Dhar defendant No. 1 and Bishambhar Nath and on certain documentary evidence furnished by the account books of the Bank. The Manager Ram Nath Sapru was dead before this suit was brought. The Bank could not, therefore, produce him. The plaintiff Bank cannot in reason object to reliance being placed on the evidence of Bansi Dhar who was called as a witness by the plaintiff. Moreover, as the case set up in the plaint that the money was borrowed by Bansi Dhar for his own uses has been clearly disproved, and this is now admitted, the Bank could only succeed by reliance on the facts proved from the evidence of these two witnesses. In his examination-in-chief Bansi Dhar stated as follows:—

"It was on account of Bishambhar Nath's request and Pandit Ram Nath's assurance that I signed the pro-note in suit. There was no other reason. I had no dealing jointly with Pandit Ram Nath. We did not incur any other liability either before or after the suit at the binding of Pandit Ram Nath.

"The assurance given by Pandit Ram Nath was that Bishambhar Nath was taking the loan and would re-pay it, and he could not take the loan in his own name as he was a Director. He also said that there was no concern with me and that Rai Sahib would pay back the money. Bishambhar Nath said he was a Director, and could not take the money in his name and it was necessary that somebody should sign for him. I believed that Bishambhar Nath could not borrow money from the Bank by signing himself.

"Rai Sahib had negotiated the loan with Pandit Ram Nath and said that he was the Director and could not take the money in his name and it was necessary that somebody should sign for him. I believed that Bishambhar Nath could not borrow money from the Bank by signing himself.

"Rai Sahib had negotiated the loan with Pandit Ram Nath and said that he was the Director and could not take the loan himself. Pandit Ram Nath said that Rai Sahib was liable for the money and that I was to have no concern with it. I do not know if Ram Nath had the authority to advance more than Rs. 500 or not."

"In this statement he clearly states that the Manager Ram Nath had said that Rai Sahib was liable for the money and that he was to have no concern with it. Bishambhar Nath was called as a witness by the defendant, and corroborates the statement, although to do so was clearly against his own interest in escaping liability. Bishambhar Nath in his evidence has stated:

"I had borrowed the amount, covered by this pro-note from the plaintiff Bank. As I could not borrow this amount in my own name from the bank on pro-note, I got the pro note signed by Bansi Dhar defendant No. 1 on the advice of Pandit Ram Nath Sapru, then Manager and Director of the Bank..... I was talking to Pandit Ram Nath Sapru in the capacity of the Manager of the Bank and Bansi Dhar was also talking to him in the same capacity..... The sum of Rs. 20,000 was borrowed to pay off some other account in the plaintiff Bank payable by me and Pandit Ram Nath Sapru, the late Manager of the Bank, I do not remember in whose name this account was payable."

This evidence, which we believe, clearly shows that not only Bishambhar Nath Tandon, the third party, but also the Manager Ram Nath induced Bansi Dhar, defendant No. 1, to sign the pro-note upon the belief that Bishambhar Nath only would be held liable. It is also to be noted that the Bank only brought the suit after the death of the Manager Ram Nath Sapru, from which it may be inferred that Ram Nath himself was aware that it would not be advisable to sue the defendant No. 1. There is also strong documentary and other evidence to support the view that Bansi Dhar was induced to sign the pro-note in this way. As the lower Court remarks in its judgment page 276, Ex. 15, cash book of the plaintiff Bank, shows that Rs. 20,000 were credited to the current account of Bishambhar Nath on the 28th December 1917, the next opening day after the 22nd December on which date the pro-note in suit was executed by Bansi Dhar. This important exhibit has not been printed by an oversight. I find, however, that just the same thing was done in the following December 1918. Exhibit 16, which is printed, is the cash book for Monday the 30th December 1918. There Bishambhar Nath Tandon is credited with Rs. 50,000 and one Radha Kishen is debited with Rs. 50,000 on a pro-note. The Subordinate Judge attempts to get over this evidence, that the Manager Ram Nath himself induced defendant No. 1 to sign the pro-note by holding out that he would not be liable under it, by two arguments.

"In the first place it is not said by Bansi Dhar that Ram Nath had told him that the plaintiff Bank would not hold him liable."

I have already quoted the statement,

"It was on account of Bishambhar Nath's request and Pandit Ram Nath's assurance that I signed the pro-note."

I have also quoted the evidence of Bishambhar Nath Tandon. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, wrong on this point. Next he has stated, that even if Ram Nath had held out the inducement it would not, in his opinion, have helped the case for the defendant. He then proceeds to draw a distinction between the Manager acting on behalf of the Bank and acting in a private capacity. He thinks that the Manager got the pro-note executed on behalf of the Bank but gave the assurance in his individual capacity. This distinction appears to me to be an impossible one in view of the language of s. 199 of the Contract Act. It is common ground that the advance to defendant No. 1 by the Manager of the Bank was beyond the powers of the Manager—See Ex. B11, page 5 of Part III, which is a copy of a resolution passed by the Directors, and which runs as follows:—

"Resolved that the General Manager be empowered to make advances on approved securities to the extent of Rs. 500 only."

Now in order to bring this suit the Bank had to ratify the Manager's unauthorised action and by bringing the suit it may be deemed to have done so. But under s. 199 of the Contract Act a person ratifying any unauthorised act done on his behalf ratifies the whole of the transaction of which such act formed a part. The Bank could not disown any inducement made by the Manager at the time of getting the pro note executed.

It is clearly, therefore, proved in my opinion that Bansi Dhar is not liable personally on the pro-note inasmuch as he was induced by the Bank's Manager to sign upon the belief that Bishambhar Nath only would be held liable. The form in which the case has been argued in appeal is that there was no consideration. Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act will only apply if Bansi Dhar be held to be the agent of Bishambhar Nath Tandon. This has not been pleaded by Bansi Dhar's Counsel in so many words, but it was obviously what was meant when Syed Wazir Hasan took up the plea on his behalf that the signature was benami. The matter has been argued in this Court on the ground that there was no consideration. For the plaintiff it was urged that the consideration passing from the Bank to the defendant No. 1 was that the Bank agreed to transfer the liability in respect of Rs. 20,000 due from Bishambhar Nath Tandon towards the Bank to the defendant No. 1. Enough has been said to show that there was no agreement by the Manager. The agreement by him was that the defendant No. 1 should not be held liable at all. It is urged, however, that actual forbearance at the request of the defendant would be a sufficient consideration although there was no contract to forbear. It is not shown that the defendant ever asked the Manager to forbear proceedings against Bishambhar Nath Tandon on the book debt. On the contrary the Manager told the defendant that he had no proceed against Bishambhar Nath Tandon but in order to prevent the Directors making him do so he wanted the pro-note executed by the defendant No. 1. I do not agree with the finding of the lower Court that it was always open to the plaintiff Bank to recognise the pro-note in suit.

Coming to the question of limitation I should have been disposed to hold that if the pro-note had been executed by defendant No. 1 in pursuance of an agreement between himself and Bishambhar Nath, that he would execute the pro-note but that Bishambhar Nath would pay the interest on it and also the principal, then this would have been sufficient evidence of an implied condition that Bishambhar Nath should pay the interest as the duly appointed agent of defendant No. 1. In this view the payment of the 23rd November 1918 by Bishambhar Nath would have saved limitation. The facts, however, are different. The interest was paid by Bishambhar Nath not in consequence of any such agreement between defendant No. 1 and Bishambhar Nath, but in consequence of an understanding between the defendant No. 1 and the Manager of the Bank. In the light of such an understanding Bishambhar Nath's payment cannot be said to have been on behalf of the defendant No. 1. It was a payment on behalf of himself, inasmuch as the Manager was still holding Bishambhar Nath to be the real debtor. If the finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the liability of defendant No. 1 under the pro-note had been correct, it may well have been that his finding as to limitation could not have been upheld. In my view of the case, however, the suit must fail not only because the suit is time barred but also because there was no consideration for the defendant No. 1 signing the pro-note in his personal capacity. If he signed the pro-note on behalf of Bishambhar Nath Tandon then he did this on the inducement of the Bank and the Bank must proceed against Bishambhar Nath Tandon. In my view this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Stuart, C. J.—I concur in the finding of my learned brother. I agree with him in accepting the evidence of Banshi Dhar and Bishambhar Nath as true upon the points to which he has referred. This evidence is strongly corroborated by other evidence. I agree that there was no consideration for the execution of the promissory note by Banshi Dhar and I further find that there was no payment of interest due upon the promissory note made by Banshi Dhar or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs.

On an application by a person from guardianship under s. 40 of the Guardians and Wards Act, the Court has not only to order under s. 41 (3) delivery of accounts and property in his possession, but has power to direct an investigation into accounts before ordering discharge.

Nabu Bepari v. Sheikh Mahomed, 5 C. W. N. 207, distinguished.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Nellore, dated the 23rd day of January 1922, in I. A. No. 16 of 1920, (O. P. No. 92 of 1913).

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Krishnaswami Iyengar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—In January 1920 respondent applied to be discharged from guardianship. Two years later the District Judge granted him a discharge under s. 40 of the Act, at the same time directing him under s. 41 (3) to deliver his accounts and all property in his possession belonging to the minor. In doing so, the District Judge expressed the opinion that he could not make an investigation into the accounts. The ruling he relied on Nabu Bepari v. Sheikh Mahomed (1), has no application here, for it dealt with the case of a minor, who had come of age.

When the Court has ordered a guardian under s. 41 (3) to deliver accounts and property in his possession, there is still a further question to be decided, that is to say, whether he is to be discharged from further liability under the next sub-section. I am unable to see how it is to be decided without an investigation into the accounts. I cannot for a moment concede that the Court is bound to accept without scrutiny any account he chooses to submit or to allow him to deliver only such property as he admits himself to possess.

In this case, the District Judge has not yet passed any order under s. 41 (4). The records will be returned. The parties may apply to him for further orders. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

If possession is acquired by a person under an invalid title and he continues to remain in possession for more than 12 years, although the document relating to his title may be invalid for want of registration or any other ground, yet the possession having lasted for more than 12 years the title becomes an un-assailable one. Second rent appeal against the decree and judgment of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 16th March 1925 reversing those of the Assistant Collector First Class, Lucknow, dated the 25th October 1924.

Messrs. Ganesh Prasad and Sheo Prasad, for the Appellants

Mr. Hakimuddin Siddique, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for profits under s. 108 cl. 15 of the Oudh Rent Act, in respect of land situate in Mohal Sarju Prasad, Pargana Nigohan, Tahsil Mohanlal Gunj, District Lucknow. The defendants denied the title of the plaintiff and urged in defence that they had been in adverse possession of the share of the plaintiff and that consequently he was not entitled to claim any profits.

The learned Assistant Collector decreed the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 27-8-6 against the defendant No. 1.

On appeal the learned District Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts.

In second appeal it is contended that the decision of the learned District Judge with regard to adverse possession of the defendants is incorrect and that the plaintiff's suit should have been decreed as was done by the learned Assistant Collector.

In order to decide the plea of adverse possession it is necessary that I should go into some of the facts of the case. It appears that on the 2nd of November 1883 three persons Gaya Singh, Ganesh Singh and Diwan Singh sold their shares in villages Lalpur and Chak Kaitha to one Jokhelal alias Zaoki Lal, father of Sarju Prasad defendant-respondent No. 1. In the said sale-deed certain plots of land which consisted of grove land and cultivated land were exempted from sale. The share of each of the vendors in the cultivated plots and in the grove land was one-third each. Ganesh Singh had two sons, one Gur Dayal and the other Mahipal Singh who was the plaintiff in the Court below and is now the appellant in this Court. The one-third share which Ganesh Singh had in the grove land devolved, after his death, on his two sons named above. Gur Dayal sold half of his father's one-third which he had inherited by means of a sale-deed, dated the 23rd of December 1903 to defendant Sheo Dayal. Mahipal Singh is still in possession of his one-sixth share in the grove land. So far as the cultivated plots of land went Ganesh Singh sold his one-third share in them to Sheo Dayal respondent under an unregistered deed, dated the 9th of June 1896 for Rs. 200. The respondents contended that they were in possession of the plaintiff's share in the cultivated plots of land by virtue of the above mentioned sale-deed and that they were in adverse possession with regard to the plaintiff's one-sixth share in the grove land.

It is clearly proved from the facts stated above that so far as the cultivated plots of land are concerned the defendant's possession amounts to an adverse possession. Although the deed was an unregistered deed yet it is clear from the Patwari's evidence on the record that the vendee obtained possession of those plots of land from the date of the sale. The defendants' have, therefore, been in possession of the plaintiff's share in those plots ever since the year 1896 when the sale-deed was executed and have remained in possession for a period of over 26 years. Although the defendants originally entered into possession under an unregistered sale-deed, yet the defect in their title has now been cured by their having been in such possession for over 12 years. This principle is clearly established by a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (1). Their Lordships have held that if the possession is acquired by a person under an invalid title and he continues to remain in possession for more than 12 years, although the document relating to his title may be invalid for want of registration or any other ground, yet the possession having lasted for more than 12 years the title becomes an unassailable one. In my opinion the plaintiff's claim to profits with respect to his share in the cultivated plots of land cannot be maintained.

Regarding the plaintiff's claim with respect to his share in the grove plot it is equally clear to me that the defendants have not been able to establish their claim by adverse possession. I have not been able to follow the judgment of the learned District Judge on this point. It is clear that the plaintiff's share in groveland amounts to one-sixth and that the defendants are co-sharers in those very plots of land. The mere fact that the defendants have been realizing rents of those plots would not establish that they have been in adverse possession of the land. It is well established rule of law that if a co-sharer has been in possession of a particular land, his possession cannot be considered adverse against the other co-sharers, and his possession must be deemed to be on behalf of them all. In order to establish adverse possession in such a case a co-sharer has to establish that he expressly denied the title of the other co-sharers and remained in possession after such denial for over 12 years, vide Corea v. Appuhamy (2) Jogendra Nath v. Baladeb Das (3) and Ahmad Raza Khan v. Ram Lal (4). It, therefore, appears to me to be quite clear that the title of the plaintiff to claim profits with regard to one-sixth of the grove land is not, in any way, extinguished by adverse possession.

I, therefore, allow this appeal to this extent that I decree the plaintiff's claim with respect of his share of profits in the grove land which was agreed upon in the Trial Court as amounting to Rs. 15 for 3 years in suit. The plaintiff is also entitled to a sum of Rs. 8-6 for the produce of chari in plots Nos. 466 and 518 for one year, namely 1330 F, these plots being also included in the grove land. In the result I decree the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 15-8-6 with proportionate costs in all the three Courts, the rest of the claim will stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Where a member of a District Board fails to attend at the meetings of the Board for three consecutive months and is restored to office under s. 56 (4) of the Local Boards Act by a resolution of the Board, he does not become a new member but is merely restored to the office of membership for the balance of the period for which he was originally elected and a fresh oath of allegiance is, therefore, unnecessary. [p. 101, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a member of a Taluk Board who has been elected to the District Board loses his membership of the former by absence for three consecutive months and thereby loses his membership of the District Board also and is then restored under s. 56 (4) of the Local Boards Act to the membership of the Taluk Board by a resolution of the said Board, such resolution cannot have the effect of restoring him to the membership of the District Board as well. Petition, under s. 115, C. P. C., and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, Salem, dated the 11th November 1924, in O. S. No. 52 of 1924.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and V. Ganpathi Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Varadachari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision petition against the order of the District Judge of Salem refusing to set aside the election of the President of the District Board of Salem held on 29th July 1924. The first ground alleged in the petition and repeated before me here is that five of the voters, namely, Arunachalla Goundan, 2. Bommanna Chetty, 3. Rahu, 4. Chinnappa Goundan and 5. Vasudeva Reddi have ceased to hold their office as members of the District Board by reason of their non-attendance at the meetings of the District Board for three consecutive months. Four of these were elected and one was nominated. Though all the five were restored to their office by a resolution of the Board under s. 56 (4) of the Act, it is said (1) that they cannot exercise the functions of the members of a Board at the meeting at which they were restored, (2) that they ought to take afresh oath of allegiance and until a fresh oath of allegiance was taken, they cannot exercise the functions of members of the District Board and in this case no such fresh oath or allegiance was taken.

The District Judge was of opinion that these members were not disqualified and their membership did not cease as they were not absent for three consecutive meetings. It appears that 4 of them were absent from one meeting and the 5th absent from two consecutive meetings, but in two of the three months preceding the meeting of the 29th July, the Board had not met at all, infringing r. 1 of the rules regulating the proceedings of Local Board (Sch. II of the Act). It is unnecessary to consider this question as the members were all restored to the office and as I have come to the conclusion that the other objections against their membership cannot stand. If, at the meeting of the 29th July, they were first restored to membership and afterwards the Board proceeded to the election of the President, I do not see anything irregular or illegal in this procedure. Therefore, there is no substance in the first ground.

The second ground is that a fresh oath of allegiance must be taken. The effect of the restoration of a member, though it may not be retrospective as to make him a member of the Board during the preceding 3 months or so as to restore to him any privileges besides the mere membership such as presidentship or vice-presidentship which he lost along with the membership, as was held by me in Devasigamony v. Sethurathna Iyer (1), is certainly to restore him to the office of membership for the balance of the period for which he was originally elected or nominated. It is not that he becomes a new member getting a fresh full period of office from the date of the restoration. Whenever there is a fresh election or fresh nomination no doubt a fresh oath of allegiance ought to be taken. But in the case of a restored member he is restored to his former membership, that is, the membership he previously had by election or by nomination completed by the oath of allegiance which he had previously taken. If it be said that he does not get the benefit of his prior election or nomination and the oath which he had taken, it would be creating a fourth class of members not contemplated by the Act. The Act contemplates only ex officio members, elected members and nominated members. It is clear, therefore, that the restoration makes him the elected or nominated member he previously was. If so, he gets also the benefit of the previous oath of allegiance. I do not think, therefore, there is any substance even in the second ground. The result is, that so far as these five voters are concerned, the petition fails.

The next ground taken is that one Mekha Pillai a member of the Taluk Board, Salem who had been elected to the District Board lost his membership of the Taluk Board by absence for three consecutive months and thereby lost his membership of the District Board also. He was then restored to the membership of the Taluk Board by a resolution of the Taluk Board dated the 29th of March, 1924. The contention is that the resolution of the Taluk Board cannot have the effect of restoring him to the membership of the District Board which he lost. On this matter I do not agree with the view taken by the District Judge that the restoration of Mekha Pillai to the membership of the Taluk Board also restores him into the membership of the District Board. I adhere to the view I have taken on this matter in my judgment in Devasigamony v. Sethuratna Iyer (1). But this does not help the petitioner for the respondent got 22 votes, and the petitioner got 19. In the first place, it is not clear that Mekha Pillai voted for the respondent (vide the judgment of the District Judge in para. 8). But assuming that he voted for the respondent and that his vote is invalid the respondent has still got a majority.

The next objection taken is that there are two cases like the case of Mekha Pillai of others who were elected to the District Board and who have lost their membership of the District Board by non-attendance at the Taluk Board and losing the membership of the Taluk Board and whose restoration to the membership of the Taluk Board does not, according to my view, restore them to the membership of the District Board. This objection was not taken in the original petition. It was sought to be introduced into the case by an application for amendment dated the 1st November, that is during the hearing of the petition. Though I do not hold that an application for an amendment of the petition filed after the expiry of the days allowed for an objection petition is never maintainable and I think that such an amendment petition may, in the discretion of the Judge, be allowed, even after the expiry of that period, I cannot say that the discretion has been improperly exercised by the District Judge in this case. If the petition cannot now be allowed to be amended, it is obvious that the petition must fail.

It has been contended by Mr. Varadachari who appeared for the respondent that s. 35 of the Act cures all the above defects in the election alleged by the petitioner. I adhere to the view I expressed in Devasigamony v. Sethuratna Iyer (1). Mr. Varadachari has called my attention to s. 57 (3) and to the fact that the English Act on which the decision in Nell v. Longbottom (2) was passed, there is a section (s. 84) which shows that an election petition did not come under the scope of s. 42 of the English Act similar to s. 35 of the Indian Act, and that in the Indian Act there is no section similar to

s. 84. He also urged that it is inconvenient to hold that the acts of a Board the members of which consist of persons like Mekha Pillai in this case are invalid. I agree with this view in all acts of the Board other than election, s. 35 cures such a defect. But I do not think that s. 35 applies to an election petition. I think the rules regarding election petition allowing the improper receipt or refusal of a vote to be questioned correspond to s. 84 of the English Act. Were it not so, the election petition becomes a farce. I do not think that s. 57 (3) can help us in this matter. It relates to the case of a dispute being raised as to the membership of a member himself and provides that he should be deemed a member pending such decision.

But as I have already held the petition must fail and is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Order will follow.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 475 OF 1924.

October 15, 1925.

KESHEORAO—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

MAROTIRAO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Partition—Temporary or permanent—Presumption—Burden of proof—Practice—Evidence produced at late stage, whether should be admitted.

A division of property, an arrangement whereby property is divided, a distribution of property are all exactly the same as a partition of property. But a partition may be either partial or complete and it may be either temporary or permanent. In the great majority of partitions of common property the partition is meant to be permanent. Therefore, if nothing more is known about a partition except that it has been made, it must be taken to be a permanent partition unless there is evidence to show that it was temporary. The length of time for which a partition has been allowed to stand undisturbed or without re-adjustment is a factor which may be taken into consideration in deciding whether a partition was temporary or permanent. [p. 103, col. 2; p. 104, col. 1.]

It is the duty of a Court to welcome any evidence that may be offered and indeed to search for it, and it is wrong to exclude any evidence that is relevant. If evidence which is relevant is tendered at a late stage such suspicion or disbelief of it as may be due to its production at a late stage will attach to it automatically and if the other party has had no opportunity because of the lateness of the stage at which the evidence is produced, of producing any rebutting evidence that they might have had, the disbelief is greatly increased. [p. 104, col 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 25th of August 1924, arising out of the decision of the First Sub-Judge, Second Class, Waradha, dated the 12th February 1924.

Messrs. N.G. Bose, R. B., and M.B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., and R. R. Jaywant, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is no appeal and there is none in the Court of the District Judge in respect of field No. 57-1, which was originally sir land but is now apparently recorded as khudkasht because it is held by the defendant-appellant Kesheorao on a lease for 99 years from a person who has no other interest in the village except the proprietary right in that field. The decision that this land must be excluded from the lands liable to partition is certainly correct, though the true state of affairs does not seem to have been realized.

The total area of sir and khudkasht in the village is said to be 364.39 acres. It is admitted that 107.87 acres of this were acquired by Kesheorao in certain years between 1886 and 1903, and it is in issue between the parties whether he acquired them for his own benefit or for that of the whole proprietary body. In regard to the rest he pleaded that it was divided among the co-sharers about 1860, so that each of them became separate owner of the fields allotted to him. The rights in the two parcels of land clearly require separate examination. Even after it has been found that the division of the lands in 1860 was only a temporary arrangement, to say that Kesheorao, an eight anna proprietor, is properly entitled to only one half of all the sir and khudkasht in the village is to beg the question as to his acquisition of the 107.87 acres for himself or for all the proprietors.

In regard to both parcels of land it has to be remembered that the plaintiffs can at the most claim that Kesheorao shall hand over to them so much land as will make the area of their land equal to the area they ought to hold, that is five sixteenth of the total. They cannot claim what belongs to the proprietors of the remaining three annas share in the village, the defendants, other than Kesheorao, who are content that Kesheorao should retain it.

In this connection it may be mentioned that one of those other defendants, holding an one anna share but no sir land at all, disclaimed all interest in the suit, but was not discharged and was made a respondent in this and in the lower Appellate Court. He did not appear in the lower Appellate Court, but has appeared here, and his costs must be paid by the appellant. But the other defendants, who own a two anna share and do hold 6.32 acres of sir, were discharged in the first Court before the issues were framed. They also have been impleaded as respondents in both Appellate Courts, and the appellant is saved from having to pay for his carelessness only by the failure of those respondents to appear in either Court.

In discussing the matter of the areas of the original home-farm, apart from Kesheorao's subsequent acquisitions, which are proportionate to the shares of the parties in the village, it has to be assumed that the whole of the 70.80 acres held by the plaintiffs is exactly the part of the original home-farm they have always held, neither more nor less. The truth of this assumption is of course, extremely doubtful, as they also may have made subsequent acquisitions.

The total home-farm in the village is 364.39 acres, and the area acquired by Kesheorao from tenants is 107.87 acres. That leaves 236.52 acres. The area in proportion to the share of the parties, which may be called their proper areas, and the areas they actually hold are as follows:—

	Proper area	Actual area
Kesheo Rao	Ans. 8 128.26	179.40
The plaintiffs	Ans. 5 80.16	70.80
The other defendants	Ans. 3 48.10	6.32

It appears then that of the old home-farm Kesheorao would have to hand over not more than 9.36 acres to the plaintiffs; even if it has been held in severalty but owned in common during all these years.

As to the partition, the issue has been much complicated by the common use of terms in narrow senses without any definition of them. A division of property, an arrangement whereby property is divided, a distribution of property are all exactly the same as a partition of property. But a partition may be either partial or complete and it may be either temporary or permanent. The partition of the home-farm that was certainly made in this case about 1860 or not long after, was partial, because it was not a partition of all the property of the co-owners, and the only question is whether it was temporary, that is to say, left the parties still co-owners of the land that was divided up among them, with an understanding that it could be restored to their joint possession or divided up again differently at some time in the future, or was permanent, that is to say, was not subject to re-adjustment and left each co-sharer a separate owner of the land allotted to him.

Now in the great majority of partitions of common property, the partition is meant to be permanent. Therefore, if we know nothing about a partition except that it has been made, we must believe that it was a permanent partition, unless somebody can give us good reason for believing his allegation that it was temporary. But in this case there is not only no reason for believing the partition was temporary but there are strong additional reasons for believing it was permanent. The strongest of them is the length of time, nearly seventy years, that it has been allowed to stand undisturbed and without re-adjustment. I hold, therefore, that all the home-farm land held by Kesheorao, apart from the 107·87 acres he acquired by purchase from tenants and by lease from a co-owner of the village, is his own separate property and the plaintiffs are not the owners of any share in it.

Of the 107·87 acres, the 12·21 acres of No. 57-1 mentioned at the beginning of this judgment has to be left out of consideration. That leaves 95·66 acres comprised in six fields all purchased by Kesheorao from absolute occupancy tenants, two together in 1886, two together in 1893 and two separately in 1903. The deed of sale of two of these fields was excluded from evidence because of its late production. It has always seemed to me to be the duty of the Court to welcome any evidence that may be offered and indeed to search for it and to be wrong to exclude any evidence that is relevant, if it is tendered late such suspicion or disbelief of it as may be due to that fact will attach to it automatically, and if the other party has had no opportunity, because of that lateness of producing of rebutting evidence they might have had, the disbelief is greatly increased.

But here there was no necessity to produce or examine any of these documents.

It is proved otherwise that Kesheo Rao purchased all these fields not later than 1903 from the absolute occupancy tenants of them. We are concerned only with that fact and not with any of the terms of the purchases. Kesheo Rao has undoubtedly held all these fields from 1903 or earlier as the separate owner of them. He was entitled to call himself the absolute occupancy tenant of them against the proprietary body of the village, and if he bought them without due notice to the proprietary body, as he probably did, he might have been turned out of them by a proper suit instituted within the time allowed. He seems not to have regarded himself or to have been regarded by the other sharers in the village as an absolute occupancy tenant, but as a separate holder of khudkasht land. I am not prepared to say which of these two is the more valuable right, but it is beyond doubt that Kesheorao was regarded by himself and by everybody else as the separate owner of that land, and having held it so for a great deal more than twelve years he became the separate owner of it, whether he was so at the beginning or not.

It may be remarked that the order of the Revenue Officer put the matter correctly and concisely, probably because he was not confused by half understood pleas of law. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and the plaintiffs' suit will be dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay all the costs in all three Courts.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13, scope of—Assertion of right made in previous suit, admissibility of—Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), s. 95—Road cess return, admissibility of, in favour of party filing return—Appeal, second—Value of documentary evidence, whether can be considered

The language of s. 13 of the Evidence Act is very wide and covers the assertion of a right in a previous suit in which that right was in dispute. It is not necessary that the right should have been successfully asserted; the mere assertion of the right is sufficient. [p. 105, col. 2.]

Section 95 of the Cess Act is absolute in its terms in that a road cess return shall not be admissible in evidence in favour of the person on whose behalf it was filed; it is immaterial whether it is sought to be put in evidence directly to prove an admission or indirectly for some other purpose. [p. 106, col. 1.]

A Court of second appeal will deal with the question of the admissibility in evidence of a document but not with its evidentiary value. [p. 105, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decree which the plaintiffs have obtained for khas possession of the land in dispute on establishment of their niskar right thereto. The only point urged in this appeal is that in coming to a finding in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents the lower Appellate Court has relied on certain documents which are inadmissible in evidence. These documents are Exs. 10, 101, 11, 13, 14, 4, 2, 8 and 9. Exhibits 10, 13 and 14 are the decree plaint and solenama in a particular suit. In this suit the lands in suit are described as the niskar property of Shama Charan Das which had been inherited by his heirs who were parties to that suit.

It is contended that these documents cannot be admissible as in that suit there was no contest as to the plaintiff's right and it cannot be said that this right was asserted or claimed within the meaning of s. 13 of the Evidence Act. The latest ruling on this point is the case of Gopi Sundari Dasi v. Kherod Gobinda Chowdhury (1). Reference is there made to the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Dinomon Chaudhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chaudhurani (2), where Lord Lindley in delivering their Lordship's judgment observed that the words of s. 13 of the Evidence Act were very wide. In our opinion they are wide enough to cover the assertion of niskar in the partition suit where that right was in dispute.

On behalf of the appellant great stress is laid on the fact that Mr. Justice Richardson who delivered that judgment referred to the right of the plaintiff being successfully asserted in the judgment which was sought to be put in evidence. Section 13 does not qualify the word "asserted" by the epithet "successfully." There is nothing in that section which requires that the right should be successfully asserted. But giving a wide interpretation to it the mere assertion is sufficient. We hold, therefore, that there is no reason to exclude this documentary evidence Exs. 10, 13 and 14. As regards the other documents to which objection has been taken with the exception of Ex. 2 the same remarks apply. They are, in our opinion, admissible as evidence of transactions in which the plaintiffs' niskar right was asserted. In second appeal we have to deal only with the question of the admissibility in evidence of the documents and not their evidentiary value. In the case of some of them, for instance, Exs. 10, 13 and 14 and also Exs. 8 and 9 the chitta and khatian their evidentiary value appears to be slight. Still they are some evidence that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land in dispute claiming it as their niskar. It is clear with regard to Exs. 10 (1) the decree passed in a damage suit in 1845 brought by the plaintiff's predecessor against Janaki Ram Panda that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in describing Janaki Ram Panda as the predecessor-in-interest of defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 1 the purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue cannot rightly be described as the predecessor-in-interest of the previous proprietor. But this does not affect the question of the admissibility of this document, since it is admitted not as a document inter partes but under the provisions of s. 13 of the Evidence Act.

As regards Ex. 2 we hold that the contention raised on behalf of the appellant must prevail. Exhibit 2 is a road cess return submitted by the plaintiffs. Section 95 of the Cess Act IX B. C. of 1880 provides that such a return shall not be admissible in favour of the person on whose behalf it has been filed. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have held that this document was admissible because it was put in evidence not directly as an admission by the plaintiffs but because considered with other evidence it proved an implied admission by defendant No 1 of the plaintiffs' niskar title. But even so, this document was put in evidence as a document in favour of the plaintiffs, and was, therefore, excluded by the provisions of s. 95. That section is absolute in its terms in declaring that a road cess return shall not be admissible in favour of the person on whose behalf it was filed, and it is immaterial whether it was put in evidence directly to prove an admission or indirectly for some other purpose. This being so we must decree the appeal on this ground.

We set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the appeal to him for re-hearing after excluding from consideration the document Ex. 2. The costs will abide the result.

patam in A. S. No. 252 of 1921 (A. S. No. 1096 of 1919 of the District Court, West Tanjore) preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in O. S. No. 434 of 1917 (O. S. No. 25 of 1917 of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvalur).

JUDGMENT.—I postponed judgment on the 15th September in order to give the appellant's Vakil an opportunity of satisfying me that the District Judge went into the question of the nature of the accounts in the case in spite of its not being taken in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The learned Vakil now states that he is unable to get information on the point.

The suit is brought by the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 795 odd which is said to be due to him from the defendant a money-lender. The course of business between the parties was apparently that the plaintiff should draw money whenever he wanted it and should also deposit money with the defendant. The plaintiff has not produced any accounts of his own. He relies on a copy of the defendant's account, Ex. A. The District Munsif found that the plaintiff had proved his case as he held that a settlement had taken place on either the 14th or 17th of December 1913. The District Judge, to whom an appeal was taken, discredited the evidence with regard to this settlement and that is a finding of fact by which I am bound in second appeal. But the learned Judge goes on to consider whether the transaction is in the nature of a mutual, open and current account and would, therefore, save limitation if such was the case and the argument before me has been that the account in Ex. A is such an account. Now in order to see what the requisites are for such an account, we should look at the case of highest authority as far as I know in this Court, i. e., the judgment of Holloway, J., in Hirada Basappa v. Gadigi Muddappa (1). In order that an account may be mutual "there must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other and not merely transactions which create obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations." That statement has been repeated in many judgments ever since the year 1871 and it has over and over again been taken as a correct statement of the law. It may be that in the account before me the balance shifted from one side to the other from time to time. See Shive Gowda v. Fernandez (2) and Kunhikuttiali v. Kunhammad (3). But the account, as far as I have been able to see, resembles exactly a Bank pass-book where deposits of monies are made and withdrawals of monies take place from time to time, the balance being in favour either of the customer or of the Bank as the case may be at any given moment. I, therefore, agree with the learned District Judge that there do not appear to be independent obligations on both sides and that a mere shifting of the account from one side to the other is not enough to constitute mutual obligations.

The second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

IN APPEAL No. 1940 OF 1922.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs and arises out of an application made by the landlord under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question with which we are concerned is whether the landlords are entitled to an enhancement of rent under s. 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The defence of the defendants was that the tenancy was held at a permanent fixed rent; and the tenants in order to establish their claim relied upon the presumption under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Assistant Settlement Officer in the Court of first instance found that as regards the khatians which are now before us that is Khatian Nos. 17 and 25, the presumption was rebutted because it was shown that additional land was added to the holding at a time subsequent to the Permanent Settlement. In that view the Trial Court held that the tenants were not entitled to the presumption under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

On appeal by the defendants the learned Special Judge has held, reversing the judgment of the First Court, that the tenants were entitled to the presumption under that section. The learned Judge found that the variation of the rents was based on the variations in the area of the holding and, therefore, he held that the presumption under s. 50 applied to the holding as it is now in possession of tenants with the added area.

In this second appeal by the plaintiffs it has been contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that, upon the findings of the learned Judge, the tenants were not entitled to the presumption under s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It appears to us that the contention of the appellants ought to succeed only partially. Upon the findings it appears that there was an old tenancy with a definite rent which was held for more than 20 years at a uniform rent; but it appears further from the findings that additional rent was added for additional area and in recent times the rent of the old tenancies was paid along with the additional rent for the added area. The question, therefore, arises is this: Do the tenants by holding additional lands for additional rent and paying the same along with the old rent and the old area lose the presumption as regards the old area and the old rent also? We think not. And also we think that the tenants are not entitled to the presumption for the added area although they are entitled to the presumption for the area which they held as was presumed before the Permanent Settlement. In a case like this the onus of proving what the old area was and what the area is subsequently added, is upon the tenants, and if they show what the old rents were then they are entitled to the presumption under s. 50 so far as the old tenancy is concerned, because, by showing that for 20 years immediately before the suit they were holding a particular area at a particular rent, the presumption under s. 50 arises. But the tenants, it seems to us, are not, by adding a new area to the old tenancy, entitled to get the benefit of the presumption so far as the added area is concerned—for the simple reason that the tenants or their predecessors were not holding those lands from before the Permanent Settlement. They were added subsequently. In that view we think that so far as Khatians Nos. 17 and 25 are concerned, the case must go back to the lower Appellate Court and that Court will, if there is evidence, find what was the area and the rent of the old tenancy and the area and the rent which were subsequently added. But so far as the old tenancy is concerned, the tenants will be entitled to a presumption as to the fixity of rent. But so far as the added area is concerned the learned Special Judge will fix the rent for that area.

In this view this appeal succeeds and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is varied to the extent.

As regards Khatian No. 29, it has been admitted before us by the learned Vakīl that he cannot press the point as regards this khatian, because, there has been no proper representation of the parties.

The appeal, therefore, so far as this khatian is concerned is dismissed. As the appeal succeeds only in part we do not make any order as to costs of this appeal.

IN APPEAL No. 1954 OF 1922.

The defendants are the appellants and this appeal arises out of an application made by the plaintiffs-landlords for settlement of fair and equitable rent. The Special Judge in Khatians Nos. 3, 10, 13, 20, 22, 24, 30, 33, 34, 42, 47, 49 and 55 allowed the claim of the plaintiffs-landlords. Against the decree the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants. It appears that some of the plaintiffs-respondents died and no application was made within three months for substitution of the heirs. The matter came up to this Court and it was ordered on the application of the appellants that the appeal so far as the deceased respondents were concerned abates and the appeal would proceed against the other respondents and the appellants gave it up so far as the deceased respondents were concerned. It being an appeal against a decree in favour of the plaintiffs it appears to us that the appeal is incompetent when some of the plaintiffs are not before the Court and the appeal has failed so far as the deceased respondents are concerned. In that view it is obvious that to hold otherwise would lead to an ex parte position. The deceased plaintiffs' heirs would be entitled to an enhanced rent as settled by the Special Judge and if we allowed this appeal the tenants would be entitled to hold the tenancy at a fixed rent so far as some of the plaintiffs landlords are concerned. In the absence of some of the plaintiffs not represented in the lower Appellate Court the whole appeal becomes incompetent.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Payoli, dated the 15th March 1923, in R. E. P. No. 182 of 1922 in S. C. S. No. 229 of 1910.

Mr. R. Govinda Menon, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Petitioner seeks to revise the order of the District Munsif of Payoli in R. E. P. No. 182 of 1922 in S. C. S. No. 229 of 1910.

Petitioner obtained a decree on 7th March, 1910. On 28th February, 1922, he applied for attachment promising to furnish a list of immoveables. The application was adjourned from time to time till July 1922, for the appointment of a guardian and then again from time to time till 15th March, 1923, when it was finally dismissed, because the list of immoveables was only produced on 5th April, 1922, after the expiry of 12 years from 7th March, 1910.

I cannot hold that the order is illegal. The Court has an option under O. XXI, r. 17, either to reject the application or to allow the defect to be remedied within a time to be fixed by it. Possibly the Munsif might, even on 15th March, 1923, have ordered the list of immoveable properties to be produced on 5th April, 1922, which would have dated the petition as from 28th February 1922, and would thus have saved the bar of limitation. But he cannot be said to have refused jurisdiction by declining to pass this remedial order. He is equally acting within his discretion when he finds that no time was fixed for remedying the defect, and, therefore, the application must date from the time when it fully conformed to O. XXI, r. 13, which would be April 5. The ruling reported in Vemuri Pitchayya v. Ankineedu Bahadur Zemindar Garu (1), turns on a converse case. There the District Munsif had exercised his discretion by fixing a time for the production of the descriptive schedule after the expiry of 12 years and this Court declined to interfere. But, of course, it was not held that the Munsif was bound to exercise his discretion in that manner. If he had liked to adopt the alternative he could have dismissed the application. Spencer, J., observes:—"I am, with due respect, inclined to think that the words 'on receiving an application for the execution of a decree' in r. 17 were not intended to make a party suffer for the failure of the Court establishment, which checks complaints and execution petitions on their presentation to at once notice all defects in any application that may be received and that these words do not preclude a Court from making an order allowing a defect to be remedied at a later stage." This can hardly be taken as putting the whole responsibility upon the Court. An applicant who files an application not in compliance with O. XXI, r. 13, does so at his own risk, and he cannot demand, as of right, that it shall be regularized by the Court establishment. In the present case, too, there is no question of suffering for the failure of the establishment, because the petitioner knew all along that his application was defective, and remedied that defect on his own initiative.

This judgment has proceeded on the assumption warranted by Vemuri Pitchayya v. Ankineedu Bahadur Zemindar Garu (1) that a Court retains its discretion to order the defect to be remedied after the application has been admitted and registered but before it has been finally disposed of in one of the ways mentioned in O. XXI, r. 17 (1).

As regards Asgar Ali v. Troiloka Nath Ghose (2) which the lower Court cites, it may be observed that the point specifically referred to the Full Bench has now been settled by cl. 2 of O. XXI, r. 17, which is an addition to the old s. 245. If an application is defective by not containing a description of the property, it is none-the-less an application provided that the Court has permitted the defect to be remedied. It also happened to be ruled in the same case that such permission could only be given before admission and registration (pp. 635-636). Whether "on receiving" in O. XXI, r. 17 (1) requires such strict interpretation is the question discussed in Vemuri Pitchayya v. Ankineedu Bahadur Zemindar Garu (1). Of course it would make the petitioner's case considerably weaker, if it were held, following Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (2), that the Munsif had no jurisdiction in 1923 to order the defect to be remedied, but even allowing in the light of Vemuri Pitchayya v. Ankineedu Bahadur Zemindar Garu (1) that he had jurisdiction I do not find that he exercised it improperly.

(1) 76 Ind. Cas. 750; 45 M. L. J. 651; 18 L. W. 739; 33 M. L. T. 125; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 367.

(2) 17 C. 631; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 960 (F. B.).

The petition is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the order of commutation of kulkarniki service in regard to five villages in the Khanapur Taluka of the Balgaum District was ultra vires of the Collector and was not binding on them.

The defendant, the Secretary of State, claimed that the suit was barred under paras 2 and 3 of s. 4 (a), Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act; that the order of commutation of the kulkarniki service was not ultra vires of the Collector; that Laxmibai at whose instance the order was passed was in 1915 the representative of the persons beneficially interested in the watan and was the duly registered representative watandar, and so was a "holder" as defined in cl. 4 of s. 15 of Bombay Act III, of 1874, and that the settlement made with her was, therefore, legal and binding on her successors, the plaintiffs, under cl. 3 of that section.

One Bhikaji Laxman was the sole representative kulkarniki watandar of seventeen villages, including the five mentioned in the plaint, and his widow, Laxmibai had been registered as the sole representative watandar after Bhikaji's death. On September 9th 1878 Laxmibai adopted plaintiff's father, Laxman, and two days later passed the adoption deed, Ex. 19. Laxman's natural father, Krishnaji on the same date, September 11, passed an agreement that Laxmibai should enjoy the right of kulkarniki service in the five plaint villages for the term of her natural life for maintenance.

Thereafter disputes arose between Laxmibai and Laxman which resulted in a suit being filed, No. 10 of 1896, in which Laxman got a decree that his adoption was valid but Laxmibai's rights under the agreement were preserved. Laxman's name was then entered in the register as watandar for twelve out of the seventeen villages, but Laxmibai's name was retained for the five plaint villages. In 1913 Laxman died, leaving a widow, Sitabai, and two minor sons, the present plaintiffs. On January 24, 1915, Laxmibai applied to the Collector to commute the right of kulkarniki service with respect to the plaint villages. On that application the commutation order was passed by the Collector. Laxmibai died on November 25, 1917, and thereafter Sitabai as plaintiffs' guardian asked the Assistant Collector to cancel the commutation order. This was refused, and the refusal was confirmed by an order of the Commissioner, and also by Government. Sitabai then gave notice that she would file a suit. Eventually the present suit was filed on September 16, 1921.

The District Judge has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that it was barred by s. 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. Assuming that it is a suit to obtain a declaration that the order of the Collector was ultra vires, and, therefore, null and void and not binding on the plaintiffs, the question is whether the plaintiffs are not entitled to prove certain facts which would justify the Court in granting them the declaration asked for in spite of the provisions of s. 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

In Maganchand v. Vithalrao (1) the Court found that the Assistant Collector's order, purporting to be made under s. 11 of the Hereditary Offices Act, was unauthorized, and, therefore, held that that order was no bar to the maintenance of the plaintiff's suit. Relying on that decision, two points have been taken by the appellants' Counsel before us:—(1) that Laxmibai was not the "holder" of the watan within the meaning of that term in s. 15 of Bombay Act III of 1874; and (2) that the provisions of s. 73 of the Act had not been complied with, and that, therefore, the order passed by the Collector directing commutation of the watan was not a proper order, so that the provisions of s. 4 (a) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act did not apply. It does not appear that when Act III of 1874 was passed, it was contemplated that the widow of a watandar could succeed to him as watandar. "Watandar," according to s. 4 of that Act, means a person having an hereditary interest in a watan. It includes a person holding watan property acquired by him before the introduction of the British Government into the locality of the watan, or legally acquired subsequent to such introduction, and a person holding such property from him by inheritance. It includes a person adopted by an owner of a watan or part of a watan, subject to the conditions specified in ss. 33 to 35. "Representative watandar" means a watandar registered by the Collector under s. 25 as having a right to perform the duties of an hereditary office. Although Laxmibai was registered under s. 25 as representative watandar, it does not follow that she was a watandar within the meaning of that term in s. 4, which includes for the purposes of the section any sole owner or the whole number of joint owners or any person dealt with as representative of the person beneficially interested or entered as such in the Government record at the time of the settlement, and it does not follow that she was a "holder" within the meaning of that word in s. 15 of the Act. By s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 "Every female member of a watan family other than the widow, mother or paternal grandmother of the last male owner, and every person claiming through a female, shall be postponed in the order of succession to any watan, or part thereof, or interest therein, devolving by inheritance after the date when this Act comes into force to every male member of the family qualified to inherit such watan, or part thereof, or interest therein. The interest of a widow, mother or paternal grandmother, in any watan or part thereof, shall be for the term of her life or until her marriage only." Therefore, the interest of the widow in a watan is to be compared to the interest of a Hindu widow in her husband's estate. I doubt whether it was ever intended that the Government should be able to treat the widow as a watandar for the purposes of the commutation of the watan service. In my opinion a widow holding an interest in watan property for the term of her life or until her marriage is not a "holder" within the meaning of that term in s. 15 of Act III of 1874.

It would follow, therefore, that the Collector negotiating with a person who was not a holder of the watan was not authorised to pass a commutation order under s. 15 of the Act and the decision in Maganchand v. Vithalrao (1) is applicable to this suit.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 148; 37 B. 37; 14 Bom. L. R. 793.

A further objection arises from the fact that the Collector had not complied with the provisions of s. 73 of the Act. That section is imperative and enacts that "No order under Part III. directing commutation of a watan.....shall be passed, unless after an investigation recorded in writing and a proper opportunity afforded for the hearing of claims and the production of evidence. In each such investigation...the Collector or other officer shall record his decision with the reasons therefor in his own handwriting." It is admitted that there is no record of any investigation having been made, or that any opportunity had been given to the other members of the watan family of being heard, or that any reasons were recorded by the Collector for his decision. The learned Judge considered that as the claimants did not take this point in the appeals to the Revenue Authorities, and as it was not set out specifically in the plaint, he was entitled to consider that the Collector had duly complied with the provisions of s. 73. Although it may be said that the plaintiffs did not specifically rely upon this fact in asking the Court to hold that the order was ultra vires, still in para. 5 of the plaint it is stated that the Collector made a settlement of commutation some time in 1915 without giving notice to the minor plaintiffs or their guardian, so that the question whether the Collector had complied with the provisions of s. 73 was in issue.

I think, therefore, that as the provisions of s. 73 had not been complied with, any order of commutation passed by the Collector would not be a valid order, so that on this ground also the suit to set it aside will not be barred under s. 4 (a) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed, and the appeal should be allowed and the declaration which the plaintiffs asked for decreed with costs in both Courts.

Crump, J.—I agree.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Abkari license—

Prohibition to transfer and to sub-let—Partnership by licensee, whether forbidden—Foreign law—Law of Mysore State—Question of fact.

What a foreign law is on a particular point, is a question of fact and has to be proved by the party setting it up. [p. 113, col. 2.]

Where by the terms of an Abkari license, the sale transfer or sub-lease of the right is forbidden, the mere fact that the licensee enters into partnership with others in respect of profits or losses of the business for the carrying on of which he had obtained the license does not necessarily involve a transfer of the license right and is not illegal or forbidden by law. Under the Law of Mysore such a partnership as the above is not unlawful. [p. 114, col. 2.]

Mahomed Ghouse Sab v. Thimma Setti, 1 Mysore L. J. 90, followed.

When the terms of a contract are reduced to writing and the question is whether the contract is illegal by reason of its seeking to do what is forbidden by law and the contention is that the agreement operates as a transfer, such a transfer should not merely be presumed but must be proved. It is sufficient if not in terms at least as . . . . . [p. 116, col. 1.]

Mr. K. Krishnaswami Iyengar, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. N. Rajagopalan and T. S. Rajagopala Iyer, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The only point that arises for determination in this suit is quite simple and though not frequently arising is of considerable importance. The plaintiff's suit is for the taking of the accounts of a partnership between himself and the three defendants. That a partnership agreement was made between these parties it is not disputed. The terms of the partnership have been reduced to writing and are to be found in the admitted copy filed as Ex. A. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have not contested the claim of the plaintiff and are apparently themselves anxious that the accounts of the partnership should be taken and the profits or losses ascertained and distributed.

The contest in the case which raises the only point for determination has been put up only by the first defendant and has reference merely to the validity of the contract sought to be enforced. The point as put by the learned Counsel for the first defendant is this. The partnership contract was made in the Mysore State within the terri-stories of His Highness the Maharaja and had reference to a business in arrack carried on by the plaintiff under a license obtained by him from the Mysore Government. Under the terms of the license granted to the plaintiff, he was not entitled without the previous permission of the Deputy Commissioner to do what he purported to do, namely, take into his business as partners the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. No such permission was obtained by the plaintiff, and, therefore, his act of entering into the partnership agreement was an act forbidden by the law and, therefore, void and, therefore, unenforceable. If this contention should be upheld, it follows that the plaintiff's suit must fail. And, on the other hand, if this contention should fail, the plaintiff would be entitled to a preliminary decree for the taking of the accounts of the partnership and the matter will have to be referred to the Official Referee for the taking of the usual accounts.

To begin with, I regret to state that neither the learned Counsel for the first defendant nor the learned Vakil for the plaintiff seemed to have paid any consideration to an important aspect in this case, namely, that whereas the contract was made and was apparently intended to be performed entirely within the Mysore State, this suit has been instituted in this Court. And in fact both sides argued the case before me as if there were no such complication and it was a simple case of the contract being or not being illegal according to the Law of the Mysore State. The Law of the State, however, it was recognised, had as being the Law of a Foreign State to be proved as a matter of fact by the expert witness as Advocate at Bangalore who has been called for the purpose. The question, therefore, has not been properly argued before me on the footing of a contract sought to be enforced in a British Court but made and intended to be performed in a Foreign State and that a protected State under the protection of the British Government and subject to its suzerainty. The first question that has to be determined in such cases is: What is the law applicable to the particular contract in question?; that is to say, by the application of which law should it be determined whether the contract in question is void for illegality as urged. Fortunately there is no serious difficulty in this case with regard to the law applicable, because whether we take the law applicable generally in the first instance as the law by which the parties intended that the contract should be governed or as the law of the place where the contract was made or as the law of the place where the contract was intended to be performed, it is in every case the same law, the Law of the Mysore State. No evidence has been adduced before me and no argument addressed to show that the intention of the parties was that the contract should be governed by any law other than the Law of the Mysore State. We may also presume that as the contract was apparently intended to be performed in its entirety within the Mysore State, the parties intended that the contract should be governed by the law of that very State. This being settled, the questions that next arise for consideration are (a) whether according to the Law of the Mysore State this contract of partnership was forbidden, (b) whether if so forbidden, the provision of law forbidding was only a fiscal or taxing enactment or a provision of law based on the public policy of only a particular State or whether the prohibition is founded on natural justice or some moral principle which, if it is not, ought to be recognised in international jurisprudence.

As regards the first question whether under the law of the Mysore State the suit contract of partnership was illegal and void, it must be observed, to begin with, that the question "What a foreign law is on a particular point" is a question of fact and has to be proved by the parties setting it up. No evidence has been adduced before me as to what the law of contracts is with regard to the illegality and unenforceability of contracts which are entered into in violation of rules of law or against public policy. I have reason to believe that the law of contracts in that State is the same as the Indian Contract Act. But this was, however, bound to be established and not to be left merely to inference. The first defendant on whom the burden of proof lay to establish satisfactorily all matters necessary for enabling the Court to come to the conclusion regarding the illegality of the contract did not give any evidence with regard to it. I may, however, observe in passing that from Ex. III it does appear as if the Indian Contract Act has been bodily adopted by the Mysore State. But while it is true that most of the Indian Statutory Law has been adopted in the Mysore State, it also appears that in some cases changes have been made in the enactments so adopted, and I am, therefore, not in a position, in the absence of satisfactory evidence, on the point to say what the Law of the Mysore State is with regard to the illegality of contracts.

In these circumstances, all that I can do is to proceed on the assumption that as indicated by Ex. III, the Contract Act in force in the Mysore State is the same as the Indian Contract Act. Section 23 of that Act provides amongst other things that the consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless it is forbidden by law or is of such a nature that, if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any law or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy. It further provides that every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void.

The question then is whether the partnership agreement is one of which the consideration or object is unlawful within the meaning of s. 23 of the Contract Act. This would depend obviously on the terms and conditions of the licenses granted to and obtained by the plaintiff. But neither he nor the first defendant has produced the original license or even a copy. The Court has virtually been asked by both parties to assume that the terms and conditions of the licenses were in the common form as appearing in Ex. I, (b). Clause 16 of the general conditions of retail vend licenses is as follows:—

"No privilege of supply or vend shall be sold transferred or sub-rented without the Deputy Commissioner's previous permission which will only be given if the applicant is prepared to forfeit his deposit already made except in cases where the Deputy Commissioner sees reason not to enforce the penalty, Nor, if the Deputy Commissioner so orders shall any agent be appointed for the management of any such privilege without his previous approval".

On behalf of the first defendant, my attention has been drawn to a case decided by the Mysore High Court and reported as Mahomed Ghouse Sab v. Thimmi Setti (1), proved by the expert witness called for the first defendant and marked as Ex. III in the case. That case, however, refers only to a case of sub-letting actually covered by the terms of cl. 16 of the conditions. Generally speaking, it cannot possibly be contended that the mere fact that a licensee enters into a partnership with others or another in respect of profits or losses of the business for the carrying on of which he has obtained a license necessarily involves either a sale, transfer or sub-letting of the license. There may, no doubt, be partnership agreements which involve or include a transfer of the interest in the license itself. There is, therefore, no warrant for supposing that every partnership agreement must necessarily violate such a condition as set out in that clause.

Mr. N. Narasimha Iyengar, Advocate at Bangalore, has also referred in the course of cross-examination to a case reported in the 9th Vol. of the Mysore Chief Courts Reports page 316, where it was held in that State that a partnership entered into by a licensee in such circumstances was not illegal and he also told me that that decision is regarded as good law up-to-date and has not been overruled. The partnership agreement in this case Ex. A does not contain any words of sale, transfer or sub-letting. No doubt in terms, as also the result of a partnership agreement, the partners are constituted agents or managers of the concern. But the last sentence in cl. 16 of the general conditions indicates that if it was intended to prevent any agent being appointed for the management of any such privilege without the previous permission of the Deputy Commissioner, a special order of the Deputy Commissioner should be made; that is to say, in other words, generally speaking the appointment of a manager for the management of the privilege may be made without any previous permission and if the Government should deem fit to prevent any such thing being done, a special condition or order is required to be made by the Deputy Commissioner. No such special order or condition has been proved in this case. The effect of a partnership agreement is only to constitute the partners the agents of each other, and it, therefore, follows that the terms of cl. 16 far from forbidding the appointment of such agents for management impliedly allows such appointments except in cases where it is specially forbidden. Having regard, therefore, to the terms of cl. 16 and also the judgment of the Chief Court already referred to, I cannot but hold that according to the Law of the Mysore State, as recognised and acted upon by the subjects of that State, a partnership agreement with reference to a license of the kind in question is not an agreement the consideration or object of which is unlawful. In this view which I have arrived at with regard to the question in issue, I am, therefore, bound to hold that the suit contract was not unlawful or void. This would be sufficient for the purpose of disposing of the issue. But the learned Counsel for the first defendant has referred me to various judgments of the High Courts in India for the purpose of showing that under clauses similarly worded in Abkari licenses issued by the British Government, the Courts have held that a partnership agreement is an agreement forbidden by law and, therefore, unlawful. It seems, however, unnecessary to refer to the decisions of the British Indian Courts in the matter. If there is a particular statutory enactment or a provision or rule having the force of law in a particular State and the highest Court in that State has decided that having regard to the terms of such enactment or rule, a partnership agreement in those circumstances is not illegal, I cannot hold that such an agreement is illegal because the British Indian Courts have held them to be illegal in very similar circumstances.

In my view, therefore, any detailed examination of the decisions of the British High Court in India is unnecessary. I may, however, briefly refer to them because after a careful examination of those cases, I have come to the conclusion that even on the principles decided in those cases the partnership agreement in this case could not be held to have been unlawful.

The case of Marudamuthu Pillai v. Rangasami Moopan (2), was one of the cases referred to and relied upon for the first defendant. The decision in that case proceeded upon a clause which is entirely different in its terms and scope from the clause in the present case. There are, no doubt, observations in the judgment of the learned Judges in that case regarding the principle underlying the provisions of the Abkari Act and also with regard to the partnership agreements entered into by or with the licensee being illegal. Those observations were not necessary for the decision of the case and were merely obiter dicta. With all respect, therefore, to the learned Judges that decided that case, I cannot regard it as a binding decision more especially when what I have to consider is not a British Indian license but a license issued by the Mysore State, which in some important respects materially differs from the terms that the learned Judges were considering. Further I may also in this connection observe that the learned Judges who came to the conclusion in that case that the rules under the Abkari Act were not merely for the protection of the revenue but also to regulate liquor traffic in the interests of the public were not confronted in the license with any such condition as that the previous permission by the Deputy Commissioner for the sale, transfer or sub-renting of the privilege of supply or vend will only be given if the applicant is prepared to forfeit his deposit already made except in cases where the Deputy Commissioner sees reason not to enforce the penalty. Further in the case of the license the learned Judges were considering, there do not appear to have been any such clause as the following:—

"Nor, if the Deputy Commissioner so orders shall any agent be appointed for the management of any such privilege without his previous approval".

The case of Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badri Nadh Sarda (3) was under the Opium Act and proceeded on the narrow ground that the terms of the Act prescribed that no one shall sell opium except as permitted by the Act and were different from the corresponding provisions in the Abkari Act. Further the learned Judges also relied for their decision on the terms of the partnership agreement with regard to which they observed as follows:—

"It is contended for the appellant that the admission of the plaintiff to partnership with the defendants is not a transfer. We are of opinion that it is. It is no doubt true that every contract of partnership is not necessarily a transfer but it is equally clear that such a contract may in many cases involve a transfer. Thus if two persons agree to start a business in partnership and to contribute capital therefor, there is no transfer involved in the transaction. But if one person carrying on a trade and possessing stock and capital, admits another into partnership with himself, making the stock and capital, the joint property of both, it is impossible to contend that there is not a transfer in such a case".

The Tamil document filed in this case is far from clear and while there is no doubt that all the profits and losses were agreed to be divided amongst the four partners in equal shares, I have been unable to find in the document any words of transfer even though I have no doubt whatever that a transfer must have been intended by the parties. But if as stated in the case of Marudamuthu Pillai v. Kangasami Mooppan (1) the object of the rules framed for the purpose of preventing sale, transfer or subrenting is that the Government should not lose its control over the licensee, it is impossible to see, how, by the mere fact that a licensee admits certain persons into partnership with him, the control that the Government has over the licensee is in any manner or degree lost. Moreover, when the terms of a contract are reduced to writing and the question is whether the contract is illegal by reason of its seeking to do what is forbidden by law and the contention is that the agreement operates as a transfer, such a transfer should not merely be presumed but must appear in the document if not in terms at least as necessarily involved. There is no transfer so far as I can see either of the business or of the stock in trade or of any interest in the license; and I think what the parties really intended was only that the profits and losses of the concern should be shared by them.

The next case cited to me by the learned Counsel for the first defendant was Ganapathi Brahmayya v. Kurella Ramiah (4). With all respect it seems to me that the correctness of that decision is open to doubt. The clause in the license which the learned Judges were construing was as follows:—

“The privilege of supplying and vending shall not, without the permission of the Collector previously obtained, be sold, exchanged or sub-leased, nor, if the Collector has ordered, can an agent be appointed, without his permission previously obtained, for exercise of any such privilege.”

Construing this clause, this is what the learned Judge says:—

“The clause prohibits sale by a stranger and the employment of an agent. In our opinion the taking of a partner has the effect, ordinarily of selling a portion of the business to him. It has certainly the effect of making him an agent for the sale of liquor.”

I cannot possibly understand how the learned Judges came to the conclusion on a construction of the clause that apart from any special order of the Collector which is not referred to in the decision, the appointment of an agent was regarded as forbidden. The clause states that no agent can be appointed only if the Collector has so ordered. This would ordinarily mean and imply that in cases where the Collector has not so ordered, the appointment of an agent would not be illegal. Therefore, unless it be that in that case it was admitted by both parties that the Collector had made an order forbidding the appointment of an agent, it is impossible to understand the judgment or regard it as properly decided. Further the observation of the learned Judges that in their opinion the taking of the partner with him has the effect ordinarily of selling a portion of the business to him, is too general and sweeping to be accurate; and in that respect I have no hesitation in stating that the law with regard to it is much more accurately stated by Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ., who decided the case of Nalan Padmanabha v. Badri Nadh Sarda (3).

On the other hand the case of Natta Bapraju v. Puran Achutha Rajasee (5) decided by Miller and Krishnaswami Iyer, JJ., is an authority for a decision that a partnership agreement with a licensee is not in all cases and under all circumstances illegal.

These are the Madras cases that were cited to me. In the case for Karsan Sadashiv Patil v. Gatlu Shivaji Patil (6) Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Chandavarkar, J., held that the Indian Legislature was by no means blind to the possibility of partnerships being entered into by licensees in which other persons may become interested in the sale of liquor and that the object of granting the license is to have control over the person who is authorised to sell the liquor and in order that sale of the liquor may not pass out of his control to unauthorised persons. Proceeding on this reasoning, those learned Judges held that a partnership was not prohibited by the terms of a license which merely forbade selling, transferring or sub-letting.

(4) 54 Ind. Cas. 45; 43 M. 141, 10 L. W. 476; 38 M. L. J. 123.

In the case of Champsay Dossa v. Gorthandas Kessowji (7) Mr. Justice Macleod sitting singly on the Original Side held with reference to the terms of the license granted for manufacture of salt that the admission of partners to share in the profits cannot be considered as a sub-letting or alienation of a part of the privilege unless there has been a document directly transferring to the partners a part of the right to manufacture or vend. He accordingly held that a partnership agreement was not illegal which was entered into by a licensee who under the terms of the license was forbidden to sub-let, mortgage or otherwise alienate the whole or any part of the privilege granted by the licensee of manufacturing salt on the land.

In the case of Gauri Shanker v. Mumtaz Ali Khan (8) Oldfield, J., who was one of the Full Bench of that Court held apparently with the concurrence of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Spankie that a partnership contract was not contrary to the conditions of a lease of a ferry under which a transfer or sub-lease by the lessee was forbidden.

In none of the cases decided in the Calcutta High Court and to which reference was made, was this question regarding partnership raised or considered.

In these circumstances having regard to the state of the case-law not only in Madras but in British India generally, the weight of considered judicial opinion is against regarding a mere partnership agreement as being in violation of the provision of law which merely forbids sale, transfer, or sub-letting. As Mr. Justice Macleod of the Bombay High Court points out as Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Krishna-swami Iyer, JJ., and Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ., have held, a partnership agreement does not necessarily involve any transfer by the licensee to the persons he admits as partners. No doubt a partnership agreement might also effect a transfer forbidden by law in which case it would be bad not because it was a partnership agreement but because it was a deed of transfer. In the present case in the agreement filed before me, no words have been relied upon for the purpose of showing that they are words of transfer or operate to effect any transfer of property, the transfer of which is forbidden by law. As I read the document the arrangement entered into by the partners was quite consistent with the licensee remaining as the legal owner but bound in equity to account for all the profits and losses to his other partners.

In any case, as I have already stated, what I have to consider is not whether apart altogether from the law of the Mysore State such a contract would or should be upheld by this Court but only whether according to the Law of the Mysore State the contract was void in its inception. If according to that law, as deposed to by the expert witness entering into a partnership with regard to the rights of a licensee is perfectly legal, this Court is bound to hold that, according to the law to which the contract is subject, the contract is not void or unenforceable, and I am glad to think that the rules of international law do not oblige the Courts of a foreign country to regard as against the law or as opposed to public policy and, therefore, void, any contract which the High Court of the very State in which the contract was intended to be performed and by the law of which it was intended to be governed, would not so regard it.

Some difficulty, no doubt, might have arisen if according to the State of the Mysore Law the contract would be illegal and the ground of illegality should appear to be not any fundamental principle, or morality or ethics or public policy but some regulation, which, as in this case, has for its chief purpose the realisation of revenue, and such a State happened also to be as in this case, a Protected Indian State. It is possible that even in those circumstances British Indian Courts might feel compelled to give effect to the Law of the Protected Indian States as it may be found to be. But in the present case no such question arises. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the defence of illegality set up by the first defendant regarding the plaintiff's claim to enforce the contractual obligation has not been made out. There would, therefore, be a preliminary decree in the suit declaring the partnership between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 each being entitled to equal share of profits and losses of the partnership and directing the usual accounts of the partnership to be taken from the first day of July, 1919 as provided in the partnership agreement. The first defendant who was chiefly responsible for protracting this litigation so long, will pay the plaintiff the taxed costs of the suit up to date. The costs to be incurred before the Official Referee will be dealt with at the time of passing the final decree in the suit.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 41-B OF 1923.

August 22, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Kotval, A. J. C.

SURYABHAN—APPELLANT

versus

RENUKA—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 74—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 132—Mortgages, prior and subsequent—Decree obtained by prior mortgagee paid off by puisne mortgagee—Suit by puisne mortgagee to recover money paid by him—Limitation, commencement of

Under s 74 of the Transfer of Property Act a puisne mortgagee on paying off a decree obtained by a prior mortgagee acquires all the rights and powers of the prior mortgagee as such as determined by the decree and the rights so acquired by the puisne mortgagee can be enforced by him by a separate suit. Article 132 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act would apply to such a suit, the period of limitation being twelve years from the date on which the money became due to the puisne mortgagee, that is to say, from the date on which the puisne mortgagee paid off the prior mortgagee's decree and became entitled under the provisions of s. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act to the rights created by the decree [p 119, cols. 1 & 2]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 9th November 1922, arising out of a decree by the Munsif, Amraoti, dated the 28th April 1922.

REFERENCE.

Kotval, A. J. C.—(March 12, 1925).—The plaintiffs as second mortgagees paid off the amount found due to the first mortgagee in a suit in which they were defendants. They now sue the mortgagor and other persons in possession of the mortgaged property for the recovery of the amount so paid. The lower Courts relying on Nathuram v. Sheolal (1) dismissed the suit on the ground that as the first mortgage was payable on the 10th March 1907, the suit which was brought on the 21st July 1921 was time-barred. Nathuram v. Sheolal (1) has been dissented from in Bora Shib Lal v. Munni Lal (2) and in my opinion requires to be considered by a Bench. I, therefore, refer to a Bench to be appointed by the Judicial Commissioner the point whether the question of limitation has been rightly decided in Nathuram v. Sheolal (1).

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Atmaram Bhagwant and Shridhar Atmaram, for the Respondent.

OPINION OF THE BENCH.

Findlay, O. J. C. and Kotval, A. J. C.—(August 11, 1925).—Vithal Sheoram and others brought a suit on a mortgage, dated the 10th March 1905, executed by the father of defendant No. 1, Ganpat against Ganpat and the present plaintiffs, who were subsequent mortgagees and obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure. The plaintiffs paid the decretal amount into Court and now sue to recover it from Ganpat. In default of payment they claim foreclosure or in the alternative sale. The latter relief they claim apparently on the ground that they acquired a charge by the payment of the decretal amount.

The lower Appellate Court relying on Nathuram v. Sheolal (1) has held that the claim is time-barred and has dismissed the suit. The point referred to this Bench is whether the decision as to limitation in that case is correct.

Nathuram v. Sheolal (1) was referred to and dissented from by a Bench in Bora Shib Lal v. Munni Lal (2). The learned Judges there observed:—

"It is impossible to hold that the right of the plaintiff accrued before he made any payment at all. In that ruling the learned Judge seems to have assumed that the plaintiff was the assignee of the decree. Under s. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act he no doubt acquired the rights and powers of the mortgagee whom he redeemed, but the fact of his redeeming the prior mortgage does not make him an assignee of the mortgage. His rights may be akin to those of an assignee, but he is not the actual assignee. If he had been the assignee of the mortgage and no suit had been brought on the basis of the mortgage by the prior mortgagee, he would have been bound to bring his suit to enforce that prior mortgage within the period of limitation which was available to the prior mortgagee. But a suit like the present is not a suit to enforce the prior mortgage nor is it an application for the execution of the decree obtained on the basis of the prior mortgage."

In Sibanand Misra v. Jagmohan Lal (3), Das, J., dissents from the above view.

Under s. 74, Transfer of Property Act, the puisne mortgagee on paying off the prior mortgagee acquires all the rights and powers of the prior mortgagee as such. These rights and powers are the rights and powers created by the decree: Narayan v. Nathmal (4). In the present case they are the rights to the payment of the amount decreed and foreclosure in default of payment. It is these rights which may be said to be impliedly assigned by law to the puisne mortgagee and not to the rights under the mortgage which became merged in the decree. It would be hard and unjust in some cases to hold that it is the rights under the mortgage which are assigned to the puisne mortgagee. To protect his interest under his own mortgage the puisne mortgagee must satisfy the mortgage decree where the mortgagor fails to do so. But before the time comes for him to pay it up, a claim on the basis of the mortgage may have become time-barred. The result would be, where the condition in the prior mortgage was one of foreclosure, that the puisne mortgagee would have to pay up the prior mortgage debt without being able to recover it from the mortgagor or be foreclosed and lose the amount advanced by him to the mortgagor. It is said that the hardship may be avoided by enforcing the assignment under s. 74 in the same suit and asking for a decree in Form 6. Form No. 6, however, refers to a case where the claims on both the prior and puisne mortgages are decided and decreed against the mortgagor in the same suit. There might be a decree in Form 7 in a case like the present but even then all that the Court may do is to grant a declaration keeping alive the mortgage in favour of one of the parties. It does not allow of any further action in the same suit by the puisne mortgagee against the mortgagor.

The rights acquired by the puisne mortgagee can be enforced by a separate suit: Gopi Narain Khanna v. Bansidhar (5).

Article 132, First Schedule, Limitation Act, would apply to such a suit the period of limitation being 12 years from the date the money became due. The money decreed can be said to have become due to the plaintiff and the right to foreclose in default of its payment to have arisen in his favour only when he made the payment and became entitled under the provisions of s. 71 to the rights created by the decree. This view finds support in Parvati Ammal v. Venkatarama Aiyar (6).

In Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein v. Ambika Pershad Singh (7), the claim was made on the basis of the prior mortgage which was claimed and held to have been kept alive for the subsequent mortgagees' benefit. The mortgage had not merged in a decree. The present claim is based upon the new rights created by the decree.

We are, therefore, of opinion, that the question of limitation has not been rightly decided in Nathuram v. Sheolal (1).

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' claim was resisted in this Court on the grounds that a separate suit was not maintainable and that in any case the suit was barred by limitation. Both these points fail in view of the opinion of the Bench.

The appeal, therefore, succeeds. The plaintiffs' claim will be decreed with costs throughout.

CIVIL REVISION PETITIONS NOS. 940 AND 941

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Rules for conduct of Elections, r. 2 (2)—Nomination paper—Signature by agent of candidate, validity of—Acceptance of nomination paper by Returning Officer—Misconstruction of rules—Revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

Under r. 2 (2) of the Rules for the conduct of Elections under the Madras District Municipalities Act, it is the candidate himself who must sign the nomination paper. A nomination paper signed by an agent of the candidate with his authority is invalid.

The validity of a nomination paper, even after it had been accepted by the Returning Officer, may be questioned after the election. The Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to enquire into the matter and if necessary declare the election void.

A mere error in the construction of rules by a Court sitting to dispose of an election petition is not a ground for interference in revision under s. 115, C. P. C., by the High Court.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in O. S. Nos. 7 and 8 of 1923 respectively.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar and K. S. Sankara Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. R. Rama Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are revision petitions to revise the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin in petitions presented to him under the Madras Municipalities Act, 1920. It appears that in an election for the Tuticorin Municipality, 8th ward, which was to be held in January 1923, a nomination paper was put in for Mr. A. Doraiswami Nadar which was admittedly not signed by the candidate but the name of the candidate was written in the nomination paper by his son owing to his (candidate's) absence at the time. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the son was authorised to sign his father's signature for this purpose but it has to be observed that the signature purports to be that of the candidate and there is no indication that it is written by somebody else. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the son was in fact authorised so to sign but under the Election Rules to which reference will be made in a moment, such a signature by the agent is not recognised and, therefore, the nomination paper was invalid.

For the petitioner two points are urged; (1) that not only under the Common Law but under many English Statutes signature by the agent even orally authorised is perfectly good and sufficient (2) that as the nomination paper has been accepted by the Chairman no question as to its validity is now open. The learned Subordinate Judge has carefully gone into the provisions contained in the rules and he has come to the conclusion that their object and scope require that the signature should be put in by the very party concerned and not by his proxy. Rule 2 (2) runs thus:

"Every nomination paper shall be subscribed by two such electors as proposer and seconder and the candidate shall subscribe a declaration on it expressing his willingness to stand for election."

I am of opinion that it is no guide to refer to various English cases such as In re Whitley Partners (1), which is a case under the Companies Act or the dictum in 1 Halsbury's Laws of England page 157 that an agent may be authorised to sign for another orally, which of course cannot be disputed, nor has the case cited in Pritchard v. Bangor Corporation (2) anything to do with this matter. I am not disposed to disagree with the construction placed on r. 2 (2) by the learned Subordinate Judge.

As to the second point, that once the Chairman has passed the nomination paper it is beyond question, that I think is disproved by the rules for the decision of disputes. Government Order 1134, dated 30th November 1920. Under r. 11 (c) "if in the opinion of the Judge the result of the election has been materially affected by any irregularity in respect of a nomination paper ..... the election of the returned candidate shall be void." That must refer to a nomination paper after it has been accepted by the Chairman and what turns out to be invalid or irregular. The Judge is there given jurisdiction to enquire into the matter and if necessary declare the election void. That is a strong argument against the sanctity of a nomination paper which has been accepted by the Chairman.

Another point has been argued with reference to these revision petitions and that is that they do not lie and in the latest Full Bench decision in C. R. P. No. 541 of 1923 the Chief Justice, Phillips and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.J., in a very similar case to this held in a decision as to the construction of rules which are similar that there was no question of jurisdiction or of acting illegally, "that the learned Judge had a point of construction before him and he decided it to the best of his ability" and "that the question of doubtful construction of a rule is not one that would enable the Court to interfere in revision." In my opinion these rules are strictly within the purview of those remarks in the latest Full Bench case. Even if they are not and civil revision petitions do lie, I am of opinion for the reasons given above, that the learned Subordinate Judge is correct in the decision that he arrived at. There is no doubt that in this case if an invalid nomination paper was in fact received and admitted the result of the election would be materially affected.

The civil revision petitions must be dismissed, C. R. P. No. 940 without costs and C. R. P. No. 941 with costs.

Per Hallifax, A. J. C.—Any adult member of a joint Hindu family whether male or female is entitled to be a manager of such family [p. 124, col. 1]

Every Court subordinate to the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Central Provinces and Berar is bound to follow a ruling published in Central Provinces Law Reports or Nagpur Law Reports until it has been overruled by another ruling similarly published. Even in the Judicial Commissioner's Court according to an old standing rule of practice a Judge sitting alone always follows an officially published ruling. If he doubts the correctness of such ruling, the only course properly open to him is to refer the matter for the decision of a Bench [p. 122, col. 1.]

FACTS.—Plaintiffs' father Rambharti died about 12 years ago. Rambharti by his senior wife Musammam Ani got plaintiff No. 1 and by his junior wife Musammam Jani got plaintiff No. 2. Within two years after Rambharti's death, Musammam Ani sold a site for Rs. 50 to the defendant by a registered sale-deed (Ex. D-1) on 26th February 1913. This sale-deed is executed by Musammam Ani alone for herself and also as guardian of plaintiff No. 1 (her son). The defendant has built a house over this site. The plaintiffs claimed to recover the site along with the house and shop over it (with superstructure) from the defendant on the grounds that the sale was without legal necessity, that Musammam Ani was deceived by the defendant, that she was an idiot and she was persuaded to make the sale and that she was not the guardian of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. The defendant contested the claim alleging that plaintiffs' claim was barred by time as their suit was filed long after three years lapsed from the date of the majority of plaintiff No. 1. On other points of legal necessity and the guardianship of the plaintiff he joined issue. The lower Court found that plaintiff No. 1 was aged 24 when the suit was filed, that plaintiff No. 1's suit is barred by time because Art. 91 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 applies as the sale by his de facto and de jure guardian is voidable and not ab initio void, that plaintiff No. 2's suit is not barred because Art. 144 applies as the sale is ab initio void (if not for legal necessity), that Musammam Ani who managed the affairs of the plaintiffs' joint family after her husband's death was the "guardian" of plaintiffs' estate in law and that the sale was for legal necessity. Plaintiffs' claim, was, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Appellants.

Sir Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. M. B. Marathe, for the Respondent.

OPINIONS OF THE FULL BENCH.

Hallifax, A. J. C.—(September 5, 1925).—The head-note* in Husen v. Rajaram (1) is as follows: "An alienation of the property of a minor by a person who is that minor's guardian de facto but not de jure is not merely voidable but absolutely void, and the minor need not sue to have it set aside before he can obtain possession of the property. Articles 44 and 91 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act do not apply to such a case." That is a correct epitome of the view of the law set out in my judgment in the case, in which the alienation in question was a sale of the property of a minor Hindu by the elder of his father's two widows, his mother being the younger. In the present case also the alienation was by the elder of two Hindu widows of property belonging jointly to her son and the son of the younger widow, both minors at the time, and the sale was for their benefit and necessary in their interests.

In both these cases, as in all the others to be mentioned later, the person who made the alienation purported to act as the guardian of the minor. The learned Judge of the lower Court has dissented from two officially published rulings of this Court, the one already mentioned and Vithu v. Devidas (2) which discussed and followed it, and has preferred to follow the view expressed in three judgments of Judges of this Court not officially published. The references to such judgments should always be by the number and year of the case, and not by the page of some unauthorised publication of which this Court may or may not have a copy. In this case it has not got a copy of the publication mentioned.

The impropriety of refusing to follow a judgment of this Court published officially needs to be pointed out, because it is so common. Every Court subordinate to this Court is bound to follow a ruling published in the Central Provinces Law Reports or the Nagpur Law Reports until it has been overruled by another judgment similarly published. Even in this Court according to an old standing rule of practice, which the Judges of this Court declared they would follow in an order published on the 21st of August 1913, a Judge sitting alone always follows an officially published ruling. If he sees reason to doubt the correctness of such a ruling the only course properly open to him is that taken by my brother Kotval in this case, to refer the matter for the decision of a Bench.

The three unpublished judgments of this Court followed in the lower Court are mentioned in the order of reference to a Bench which is quoted below. The first of them frankly dissented from Husen v. Rajaram (1) and the other two, with the judgment of the lower Court in the present case, dissented from Vithu v. Devidas (2) as well, though Kinkhede, A. J. C., in the judgment from which an extract is given below, seems to have thought that his view, with that of Stanyon, A. J. C., was accepted in Vithu v. Devidas (2). It happens, however, that the final decision of each of the four cases is correct, though the reasons given for it are unsound.

In the present case the two brothers whose property was sold have appealed against the decision that the transfer of the half of the property belonging to the son of the widow who did not join in executing the transfer is valid. The reference to the Bench was made by Kotval, A. J. C. in these terms: "The question here is whether a sale by a Hindu widow who was managing the estate of her minor son and step son of a part of the immoveable property belonging to the estate for necessary purposes is valid and binding on the step-son. The appellants contend that it is not and rely on Husen v. Rajaram (1), where the facts were more or less similar. The respondent points out that three Judges of this Court have differed from that ruling, vide S. A. No. 316-B of 1914, S. A. No. 493 of 1921 and S. A. No. 303-B of 1923. In these circumstances it appears desirable that the correctness of that ruling should be considered by a Bench."

The answer I would give is this. The statement of law in Husen v. Rajaram (1), which is repeated in Vithu v. Devidas (2), is perfectly correct, but the final decision of those cases is wrong because of a fact existing in each of them which was not brought to the notice of the Court. The statement of law in the judgment of the lower Court in the present case and in the judgments of this Court in the three cases mentioned in the Order of Reference is wrong, but the decision of each of the four cases is correct because of the same fact though there also it escaped the notice of the Court. That fact is that the transferor on behalf of the minor in each case, though purporting to act as the guardian of the minor, was the manager of the Hindu family of which the minor was a member and really acted in that capacity.

In the case of 1914 decided by Stanyon, A. J. C., there were two fatherless minors whose mother had married again, and they were living with their brother-in-law, who was as in fact looking after their property as well as their persons and made the alienation in question. In the case of 1921 decided by Prideaux, A. J. C., there was one minor, and the alienation was made by his step-mother, his own mother being dead. In the case of 1923 decided by Kinkhede, A. J. C., the alienation was by the paternal grandmother of the two minor sons of one father and two mothers, of whom the father and one mother were dead. In all three cases the minors were Hindus.

In each of these three cases the person who actually made the alienation purported to act as guardian, and was treated in the judgment as the guardian, de facto but not de jure. The decisions rested on the view that there is a difference between Hindu Law and Muhammadan Law in respect of the right to dispose of the property of a minor held by a person who is in fact acting as the guardian of the minor but without any right to do so; that according to the Hindu Law, such a guardian even though self-constituted can alienate the property of the minor whom he has taken under his protection, provided only that the alienation is for the minor's benefit.

This appears to be a wrong statement of a correct principle, but it was the position taken before the Bench in this case on behalf of the appellants. The reasons urged to support it are fully set out in the judgment of Kinkhede, A. J. C. in the last of the cases already mentioned in these words:

"In my opinion, an alienation by a de facto guardian of a Hindu minor has not the same effect as an alienation by a de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor. It has been laid down in Hunooman Persaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (3) that 'under the Hindu Law the right of a bona fide incumbrancer, who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly, for the purposes of saving the estate, or for the benefit of the estate, is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto, with the de jure title.' This view has been consistently accepted as a correct exposition of Hindu Law in a series of cases of the several High Courts, cf. Bai Amrit v. Bai Manik (4), Mohanund Mondul

v. Nafur Mondul (5), Thayamal v. Kuppanna Kondam (6), Jagov. Oodal (7) and Somwarपुर v. Gopalsingh (8) decided by Stanyon, A. J. C., on 28th April 1915 and quoted with approval in Vithu v. Devidas (2), by Mittra, A. J. C. Under Muhammadan Law de facto guardian has no recognised position and is no better than an officious intermeddler who as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (9) 'may, by his de facto guardianship, assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it.' In the aforesaid case of Mata Din (9) the point whether a sale by a de facto guardian if made of necessity or for payment of an ancestral debt affecting the minor's property and if beneficial to the minor was altogether void or voidable, was not decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, nor were the observations of their Lordships such as could apply to the case of the alienation by a de facto guardian under Hindu Law. There is a fundamental distinction between the guardian under the two systems of jurisprudence. The actual structure of the Hindu society with its joint family system is a thing unknown to the Muhammadan society. Under the Muhammadan Law a de facto guardian has no recognised position while the Hindu Law gives to him a position identical to that acknowledged in a de jure guardian. In this respect as pointed out by Dr. Gour in his Hindu Code, page 446, 2nd Edition 'the Muhammadan Law offers no analogy but rather presents a contrast. The one enquires who made the alienation, the other why it was made. This distinction between the two systems appears to have been ignored in a case in which an alienation by a Hindu de facto guardian was treated as ipso facto void, Hussen v. Rajaram (1).' That this is so is clearly pointed out by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Somwarपुर v. Gopal Singh (8) referred to above, I, therefore, respectfully record my dissent from the view taken in Hussen v. Rajaram (1) and prefer to follow the view taken in Somwarपुर v. Gopal Singh (8)."

(4) 12 B. H. C. R. 79.

The "structure of Hindu society, with its joint family system" certainly does differ from that of any other society in the world but that does not give any person the right to take charge of the property of any minor he may come across, just because he happens to be a Hindu, whether they are nearly or distantly related or not related at all, and "thereby clothe himself with power to sell it." It is, however, correct to say that it is the existence of the joint family system among Hindus that makes all the alienations under consideration valid though they would be invalid if the minors had not been Hindus, because they were made not by their guardians but by the managers of their families. The fundamental mistake made in respect of Hunooman Persaud Panday's case (3) is in assuming that it defines the powers of a guardian of a Hindu minor. It deals throughout with the powers of a manager, and the word guardian occurs in their Lordships' judgment only four times, twice in quotations from the judgment of the Sadar Diwani Adalat, once in a quotation from the plaint and once in their Lordships' summing up of their conclusions. In the last place the word may have been used because it had been used all through the case in the Courts in India or, if I may suggest it without disrespect, by a slip.

If there is any statement of the rule of Hindu Law as to who is entitled of right to be the manager of a joint Hindu family, I have been unable to find it, but I take it that any adult member of the family, male or female, is so entitled. If that is correct the person who actually executed the transfer in the present case, and indeed, in each of the five other cases mentioned except that of 1914 decided by Stanyon, A. J. C., was the manager of the family de jure as well as de facto. If, as seems to have been assumed only for the purposes of the argument in Hunooman Persaud Panday's case (3) a female cannot as of right be such a manager, even the mother of the only other member of the family who is a minor, then in this, as in all the other cases, the transfer was valid because it was made by the person who was the actual manager at the time, whether that person had a right to be manager or not, and it was for the benefit of the estate and necessary for its preservation.

The answer I would give to the Reference is, therefore, that the sale in this case by the Hindu widow who was managing the estate of her minor son and step-son of a part of the immoveable property belonging to the estate for necessary purposes is valid and binding on her step-son.

Findlay, Offg. J. C.—(September 5, 1925).—I have had the advantage of perusing and considering the opinion recorded by Hallifax, A. J. C. and I concur therein.

Kotval, A. J. C.—(September 5, 1925).—I concur.

By the Court.—As stated in the opinions separately recorded our answer to the question referred to us is that the alienation is valid and binding on the step-son of the widow who made it.

JUDGMENT.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff and his family obtained a saswatam lease of certain property which was dedicated in trust. The plaintiff was appointed the managing trustee and in pursuance of that appointment, he gave notice to the person in possession of the property to deliver it up. The title of plaintiff's transferor was disputed and subsequently plaintiff purchased the saswatam right from the rival jenmi in his own name. He now sues for damages for trespass and an injunction. The lower Appellate Court dismissed his suit on the ground that under s. 88 of the Trusts Act, plaintiff was bound to hold the property on behalf of the trust and could not, therefore, bring a suit in his personal capacity in derogation of the trust.

The first argument put forward in appeal is that inasmuch as the plaintiff did not obtain actual physical possession of the property, section 88 does not apply. In s. 88 there is no recital as to the possession of the property and in the cases relied on by the appellant, Muniswami Chetty v. Maruthammal (1) and Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkatavarada Iyengar (2), there is really nothing to support this contention. In fact in Muniswami Chetty v. Maruthammal (1) it was held that "If an executor accepts the office and acts as executor 'with full knowledge of all the circumstances bearing on his right,' . . . he is estopped from subsequently repudiating the Will." Here the plaintiff accepted the trust and acted upon it and consequently he is now estopped from disputing the trust.

The next point put forward is that the plaintiff is entitled to be re-imbursed out of the trust the money which he paid out of his own pocket and that, therefore, until that is done the property is his own. This is, no doubt, true and would be applicable in a case where the beneficiaries sought to take the possession out of the plaintiff's hands, but in the present case this is not even a suit against the beneficiaries but a suit against a co-trustee and when s. 88 lays down that the plaintiff must hold this property for the benefit of the trust, I do not think that any Court would allow him to sue in his own capacity as being solely entitled to the property. If he does sue in such capacity he is, in effect, committing a breach of trust. Plaintiff is admittedly in possession of the trust property and can out of it recoup himself what he has spent for the benefit of the trust. Consequently I think that the lower Appellate Court is quite right in dismissing his suit. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 10, O. XLV—Remand by High Court—Appeal to Privy Council—Addition of parties—Power of Court

A suit was dismissed by the District Court but was remanded by the High Court on appeal. Defendants applied for and obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Petitioner then applied to the High Court to be added as a defendant in the suit.

Held, (1) that the High Court having passed a final order in the case remanding the case to the District Court, was functus officio and could not, therefore, make any order adding parties to the case. [p. 126, col. 1.]

(2) that as regards the appeal to the Privy Council the High Court had no powers beyond those given in O. XLV of the C. P. C., and that there was, in that order, no power to add parties; [ibid.]

(3) that the District Court had seized of the case as a result of the remand by the High Court and had, therefore, power to add parties. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 8 of 1922 of the District Court of Pegu Kalenther Ammal, as widow of one Sheik Moideen, sued for administration of Sheik Moideen's estate by the Court, and joined as defendants Ma Mi, who also claimed to be a widow of Sheik Moideen's, and Mahomed Eusoof, who claimed to be his son by another wife Ma Kin.

The District Court found that Kalenther Ammal had been divorced by Sheik Moideen, and, holding on that ground that she had no right to sue, dismissed her suit.

She appealed to this Court, which found that she had not been divorced, and remanded the case to the District Court for disposal on the merits.

Ma Mi and Mahomed Eusoof then applied to this Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and leave has been granted.

Now the present petitioner Halima, who claims to be a daughter of Sheik Moideen, her mother Boudina having been a daughter of his by still another wife Jooma Bibi, claims in this Court to be added as a defendant in the suit.

She applied in the District Court after the suit was remanded by this Court, but, as the records were in this Court in connection with the appeal to the Privy Council, no orders were passed on her application.

It seems clear that this Court has no power either in the proceedings in Appeal No. 74 of 1923, or in the proceedings on the application for permission to appeal to the Privy Council to add petitioner as a defendant in the suit.

So far as the appeal to this Court is concerned, this Court, having passed a final order remanding the case to the District Court, is functus officio.

So far as the appeal to the Privy Council is concerned, this Court has no powers beyond those given in O. XLV, and there is in that Order no power to add parties.

The District Court has seizin of the case as a result of the remand by this Court, which remand is still effective, although proceedings in the suit have, by consent of the parties, been stayed, and the District Court has power to add parties.

Petitioner should, therefore, renew her application to that Court.

The application to this Court is dismissed with costs—Advocate's fee to be two gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.

Raza, J.—(November 17, 1925).—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for possession of certain zemindari shares in Mahal Utri Pargana Miranpur, District Sultanpur. The relative position of the parties will appear from the following pedigree:—

Harpal Singh, Har Bakhsh Singh and Bagwanidin Singh were co sharers of the said mahal. Harpal Singh and Har Bakhsh Singh both died childless. Harpal Singh died about 50 years and Har Bakhsh Singh about 40 years ago. Though Harpal and Har Bakhsh (brothers) lived jointly but mutation was effected in respect of the share of Harpal Singh in favour of his widow Musammam, Jasao Kunwar. She got possession of Harbkhsh Singh's share also on his death. On the death of Bhawandin's widow Musammam Jitao, mutation was made in favour of Musammam Jasao in respect of her share also in 1892. Thus Musammam Jasao got possession of these three shares and held them till her death. She died on the 18th November 1918. A revenue partition was made in 1911 and the said shares were allotted to a mahal called after her name. At the time of the death of Musammam Jasao three persons, namely, Gulab Singh, (father of the plaintiff), Raghubir Singh (father of the defendants Nos. 9 and 10) and Udit Narain Singh (father of the defendant No. 7) were the nearest reversioners of Harpal Singh. However mutation was effected in favour of the plaintiff Bajrang Singh, the defendant No. 1. Rampal Singh, and 8 others persons, the defendant No. 1 getting 19 shares and the plaintiff and others 16 shares. The plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant No. 1 and 9 others claiming one-third share.

The suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 principally. Their defence was that they were entitled to the property by virtue of a custom the particulars of which will be set out hereafter. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim holding that the custom set up by the contesting defendants was not satisfactorily proved and was not applicable to the present case. Rampal Singh defendant No. 1 alone appealed but his appeal was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur on the 12th July 1921. He has now appealed to this Court. The question of custom is the only question to be decided in this case. The plaintiff's father being one of the nearest reversioners, the defendant-appellant cannot come in except on the ground of the custom set up by him.

Musammam Jasao Kunwar had no right to the property which she was holding in her lifetime. She had no right to succeed Har Bakhsh Singh and Musammam Jitao Kunwar. However she acquired title to the property by adverse possession and it is not disputed that it became her stridhan property. The stridhan property of an issueless woman goes to her husband and after him to his heirs in order of their succession to him. Under the Mitakshara Law the right to inherit arises from propinquity that is proximity of relationship. The appellant is the relation of a remoter degree of descent than the plaintiff's father and cannot succeed until and unless the alleged custom is made out.

The custom set up by the defendant-appellant is as follows:—"In the community (tribe) and family of Harpal Singh and the parties the custom which prevails relating to inheritance is that on the death of a childless widow her as well as her husband's estate is inherited by the collaterals of her husband, having regard to their descent without any consideration of their nearness, the descendants of the eldest son receiving 19 shares and those of the remaining sons 16 shares." The defendant-appellant alleges that his ancestor Girdhar Shah was the eldest son of Faqir Shah. No mention of the alleged custom was made in the wajib-ul-arz (that is the Wajib-ul-arz of Utri Ex. A-6).

The oral evidence which has been produced by the defendant-appellant to prove that brothers and nephews succeed together by custom is unreliable and insufficient. The learned Munsif has subjected that evidence to a careful analysis. No instance was given in which succession by collaterals also was regulated by that custom. The oral evidence has been properly rejected by the lower Courts.

The appellant's learned Counsel relies on documentary evidence principally. He has referred to Exs. A-1 to A-5 and A-23. Exs. A-1 to A-5 show that the plaintiff's father Gulab Singh had brought a suit against his uncle Ram Niwas Singh in 1866 in respect of the property of his another uncle Phulman Singh, who had died childless. He was not entitled to any share in the property of Phulman Singh, under the Hindu Law, in the presence of his uncle Ramniwaz Singh but he had claimed a one-third share in that property. He had made no mention of any custom in his plaint but his plaint and his statement show that he had taken the law and the custom both, to be the same. Ramniwaz had admitted the custom in his statement and had contested the suit simply on the ground that a panchayat had already decided that Gulab Singh could not take the property unless he accepted his liability to pay his share of the debt of the deceased. The liability for the debt along with the property was the only question to be decided in that suit. The claim was eventually decreed without any liability for the debt. The principal custom which has been set up in this case was not set up or recognized in that case. Ramniwaz had stated the custom as follows:—

"If a co-sharer either a brother or other near relative dies without any issue, then his share is divided among the remaining living co-sharers according to their respective shares." In my opinion the statement of Ramniwaz alone does not establish the custom in question. It should be borne in mind that if a party relies upon the special custom of a family to take the succession out of the ordinary Hindu Law, such custom must be proved to be ancient, continuous, certain and reasonable and being in derogation of the general rule of law, must be construed strictly. A custom must be satisfactorily proved by evidence of particular instances so numerous as to justify the Court in finding in favour of the custom. One instance or even four modern instances are not sufficient to prove a custom. [See Durga Charan Mahto v. Raghunath Mahto (1).] When the custom is proved to exist it supercedes the general law which however still regulates all outside the custom. [See Ram Nundun Singh v. Janki Koer (2) and Mata Din Sah v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali (3).] In the first place the statement of Ramniwaz alone, mentioned above, does not establish the custom of brothers and nephews succeeding together and in the second place that statement does not establish the particular custom under consideration. I think the custom of brothers and nephews of a deceased man succeeding together does not lead to a necessary inference that a custom exists to this effect also that on the death of a childless widow her and her husband's properties are inherited, according to their respective stocks by the persons descending from the same ancestor as her husband but without any regard to the nearness and remoteness of the persons taking the properties. I think the latter custom is a different custom and is strictly to be proved. In my opinion Exs. A1 to A5 do not help the defendant-appellant in this case.

Exhibit A23 is a copy of a judgment in a suit between some Bajgoti Tahkurs of Dahyawau, District Sultanpur. It is true that following custom was held to be proved in that case:—"If a man dies without leaving a male issue his relatives, namely, brothers or cousins or nephews (son of brother or cousin) and grandson (grandson of a brother or a cousin) get shares in the property of the deceased without regard to nearness or remoteness." However that custom was held to be proved in that case as a family custom and not as a tribal custom. This is clear from the judgment of the Munsif who decided that case. The judgment shows clearly that no attempt was made to prove the custom as a tribal custom in that case. It appears that the parties to the present suit are also Bajgoti Thakurs, but it is not shown that they are related as members of a family to the proprietors of village Dahyawau. It was held in Lalman v. Nand Lal (4), that wajib-ul-araiz of villages belonging to the same clan are inadmissible in proof of a family custom unless it is shown that the proprietors of these villages were related as members of a family to the plaintiffs. "There is no objection to a party pleading that a custom obtains both in a family and in the tribe to which that family belongs but he must, of course, prove that the custom is binding on the family, whether he confines his evidence and plea to the family or not". Parbati Kuar v. Rani Chandrapal Kuar (5). In the present case no attempt has been made to prove the custom in question as a tribal custom. The defendant-appellant attempted to prove the custom as a family custom but failed in his attempt. I do not find a single instance in which the particular custom set up in this case was claimed, recognised or exercised. Under these circumstances I think the lower Courts were perfectly right in holding that the alleged custom was not proved and the plaintiff's claim must, therefore, be rejected. In my opinion there is no force in this appeal.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Ashworth, J.—(November 18, 1925).—This is a defendant's second appeal. The plaintiff's claim was resisted by the appellant on the ground of the existence of a certain custom, but both the lower Courts have held that he failed to prove this custom. The only question arising in this appeal is whether the lower Courts were right in holding that the custom did not exist. The custom set up may be phrased as follows:—

"A right of representation exists whereby collateral descendants in different degrees from a common ancestor succeed to the shares to which their immediate ancestor if alive would succeed."

There were two alternative claims in respect of this custom. One was that the custom prevailed in the family. The other was that the custom prevailed in the community of Baijgoti Thakurs settled in the Sultanpur District to which this family belongs.

As regards the family custom a preliminary objection has been taken that the decision of the lower Courts was one of fact which cannot be upset in second appeal. The evidence relied upon to prove this custom was the record of a certain case in which Gulab Singh, father of the plaintiff Bajrang Singh sued his uncle Ramniwaz Singh for a share of the property left by another uncle and was successful. The plaintiff in that case, it was urged by the present appellant, had based his claim on the custom now set up. The defendant in that case did not deny the custom but defended his suit on another ground. The suit was decreed. These proceedings embodied in Exs. A1 to A5 were pleaded as a transaction in which, to use the words of s. 13 of the Evidence Act, the custom was "claimed and recognised." The Court of first instance stated that "There was no evidence to prove that the father of Gulab Singh had pre-deceased Phulman Singh", i. e., the uncle whose property was in question in the suit. Accordingly it held that the case was not necessarily evidence of the custom set up. In other words the Court held that it was possible that Gulab Singh was suing for property which had vested in his father before that father's death and as representative of his father, in which case there was no invocation of the custom now set up. The lower Appellate Court also held that the claim was based on the ordinary law of succession and not on any custom. Now it may be that the Courts were wrong in holding that in that case no custom was set up either expressly or by implication. It may be that the plaint showed that Gulab Singh's father had died before the succession in question in that case opened out, and that for this reason custom was alleged by implication. But no question of law arises in second appeal in determining what the plaint in that case meant and in deciding even wrongly, that there were no circumstances which would give a particular meaning to that plaint, the Courts were deciding questions of fact. We allow the preliminary objection that so far as the alleged family custom was held not to be proved the decision of the lower Appellate Court is not open to appeal.

It is next urged that a tribal custom was set up and proved. It was alleged alternatively to a family custom in the plaint, but no attempt seems to have been made to prove it. Exhibit A23 is invoked in arguments in this appeal. That is a judgment where the custom set up was held applicable to "the descendants of one Chitra Sen." As the Court of first hearing has remarked, there is no evidence to show that the present family are such descendants. The wajib-ul arz of the village says that all the Bachgoti Thakurs of the Sultanpur District are descended from a common ancestor Barial Singh but it is not suggested that Barial Singh was descendant of Chitra Sen.

I have seen the judgment of my learned colleague I concur with it so far as the finding is that the appeal should be dismissed. I think it, however, desirable to express dissent in respect of three matters. My learned colleague quotes the case Durga Charan Mahto v. Raghunath Mahto (1) as an authority for holding that a family custom should not be held proved merely by four modern instances. Reference to that decision shows that the Calcutta High Court were dealing with a custom set up as a family custom and referred to the Privy Council case Chandika Bakhsh v. Muna Kunwar (6) as showing that their Lordships of the Privy Council had declined to find in favour of the alleged custom upon evidence which consisted of four modern instances. A reference, however, to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council will show that they were considering in that case not a family custom but a case of tribal custom. It is true that the head-note speaks of a family custom being set up but the custom that was being set up in that case was one said to obtain in the tribe known in Oudh as Ahban Thakurs. The evidence in the case had shown only four instances in favour of the tribal custom whereas there were altogether 18 instances discussed. I consider that this ruling of the Privy Council has no application to a custom set up as a family custom.

Again I cannot agree with the finding that the existence (if proved) of a custom of brothers and nephews of a deceased man succeeding together would not lead to a necessary inference that a custom existed to this effect also on the death of a childless widow. There is a rule of Hindu Law which is set out as follows in s. 196 (1) of Dr. Gour's Hindu Code, 2nd Edition.—

"The stridhan of an issueless woman devolves on her husband if she was married to him in the Brahama form which will be presumed, and failing him to his nearest sapindas in the order of their succession to him."

It is correct that a custom must be unequivocally stated and proved, but it does not follow that it cannot be proved by inference. It is urged that the evidence only justifies it being held that the property of a propositus will go to collaterals in different degrees without any preference being given to nearness, but what is proved does not justify us in holding that this will apply in respect of the property of a childless widow. Reliance has been placed on the case Bijai Bahadur Singh v. Mathura Singh (7). This is a judgment of a Single Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh, but it follows the Privy Council decision of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (8). In these cases it was held that from a custom excluding daughters and their issue from inheriting the property of their father it could not be inferred that they were excluded from inheriting the stridhan property of their mother. There was an obvious reason for this. Hindu Law generally favours the claims of daughters in respect of their mother's property. Here there is no such principle involved. I consider that inference is one of the methods of proof and that in the case of a custom, there is no reason to reject a clearly logical inference against which no consideration prevails. It appears to me that inasmuch as the stridhan of an issueless woman devolves first on her husband and then on his sapindas a custom regulating succession by sapindas to a male's property must also be held to regulate succession by the sapindas of the husband to the stridhan property of his widow.

Lastly I do not agree that Exs. A-1 to A-5 were not admissible as evidence of an instance under s. 13 of the Evidence Act, namely, as a transaction by which the custom in question was claimed and recognised. It makes no difference that the defendant contested the claim of the plaintiff in that case on another ground, namely, that he could not get the property in question without paying up the previous debt. The claim was only sustainable if inheritance was governed by the custom now set up. It was an easy answer to the defendant in that case that the custom did not exist. The fact that he did not resist the suit by denying the plaintiff's right in my opinion makes this case an instance. No doubt it was only one instance and it was unnecessary for this Court in appeal to consider it inasmuch as the finding in respect of the family custom was one of fact and no question of law arose.

By the Court.—We direct that the appeal shall be dismissed with costs to the respondent.

A plot of land was attached in execution of a decree.

(7) 68 Ind. Cas. 555; 9 O. L. J. 327; 4 U. P. L. R. (O.) 66; (1922) A. I. R. (O.) 278; 25 O. C. 345.

Plaintiff and defendant both filed objections to the attachment each alleging that he was the owner of the plot. The Court held that the plot had been purchased by the defendant from the Municipality and belonged to the defendant. Plaintiff subsequently purchased the plot from the Municipality and sued the defendant to recover possession of the plot.

Held, that although the Municipality was not a party to the execution proceedings the question of title to the plot was res judicata between the parties by virtue of the decision of the Executing Court.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 18th January 1924, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 7th July 1923.

Mr. S. Mukerji for Lala Har Gopal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that Government made over a certain area to the Municipal Committee of Dera Ghazi Khan with a view to the building of a new abadi. Plots were sold by the Municipal Committee and the land in suit is the frontage of one of those plots. One Pritam Das obtained a decree against one Bosa and after his death in 1918 applied that this frontage should be sold in execution of his decree. Objections were lodged by Musammam Lorindi Bai, the widow of Bosa and defendant in this case, and also by the plaintiff Mukand Lal. Both contended that the site belonged to them. It was decided by the District Judge on the 12th of June 1918 that Musammam Lorindi Bai had herself purchased this site from the Municipality and that it could not, therefore, be attached or sold. On the 18th of October 1917 the Municipality passed a mutation order entering the name of Musammam Lorindi Bai as the owner of this site and on the 1st of December 1917 granted permission to her to build upon it. In spite of this fact, acting on very peculiar advice given by the Government Pleader and accepted by the Deputy Commissioner, the Municipality while admitting that the title was doubtful and pointing out the fact to the plaintiff sold it to Mukand Lal, for Re. 1-8 it being clearly explained that he took all risks and would not be compensated if it were found that he had wasted his Re. 1-8. He now brings this suit and is met by the decision of the District Judge in a suit, to which he was a party, to the effect that the defendant had acquired a good title from the Municipality. His contention is that because the Municipality was not impleaded in those proceedings the decision does not bind him, as vendee from the Municipality. Whether it binds the Municipality or not it must certainly binds him, in my opinion, and it operates as res judicata. Knowing that this decision had been given he deliberately bought a bad title and he has only himself to blame. The Deputy Commissioner's order shows the rights sold as being Government rights. As a matter of fact they were the rights of the Municipality and this Mr. Mukerji admits, that is to say, the plaintiff's vendor and that of Musammam Lorindi Bai were one and the same. In spite of this fact he contends that he is now entitled to insist on strict proof of the payment of consideration by Musammam Lorindi Bai, although the matter has been finally adjudicated upon as between him and her by the District Judge, and it was decided in that litigation that Musammam Lorindi Bai had acquired a clear title and that the rights of the Municipality had automatically become extinct. Had he purchased the title of some person other than the vendor to Musammam Lorindi Bai, there might be some force in his contention that he can re-agitate the question as being a different person from that person who took part in the previous litigation but the vendor from whom he has been fit to purchase, and who behaved in this peculiar manner in selling to him, is the very person whose right, title and interest were held in that previous litigation to have been transferred to and vested in Musammam Lorindi Bai, and, therefore, extinguished for all time. As between him and her it has been found that her title is good and his must be bad, and, it was held that his present vendor had no subsisting title at the time he sold.

I find that it is a clear case of res judicata and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—[His Lordship after setting out the facts of the case, which are not material for the decision, proceeded:—] A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies from an order of the learned District Judge under s. 18, Religious Endowments Act. This objection, I think, is sound. The Act itself which creates the cause of action does not provide for any appeal from the order of the District Judge. Nor is there anything in the C. P. C. which would indicate that any appeal lay. The order of the District Judge is clearly not a decree and the cases in which an appeal lies from orders are laid down in ss. 104 and 105 of the C. P. C., the cases are there named in which an appeal lies from certain orders and an appeal lies from no other orders. These two sections coupled with O. XLI of the Code show quite clearly to my mind that no appeal is permissible in such a case. The only contention put forward by the other side is that under s. 20 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act of 1887 it is provided that save as otherwise provided by any enactment for the time being in force an appeal from a decree or order of a District Judge or Additional District Judge shall lie to the High Court. The learned Vakil wants us to construe that section as if it granted a right of appeal from every order of the District Judge to the High Court. This is clearly not the interpretation of that section; the only thing the section is dealing with is the forum to which an appeal, if any, shall lie from decrees or orders of the District Judge.

In my opinion the preliminary objection is a sound one and this appeal is not permissible.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Though an Executing Court cannot go behind the decree, it ought to interpret the decree when an application for its execution is presented before it, and for that purpose, it ought to refer to the pleadings in the case and to the judgment passed by the Court.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate the 14th of February 1925.Mr. Sarju Prasad, for the Appellant.Mr. Brijkishore Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think this case must go back. The learned Munsif thought that he had nothing to do with the meaning of the word "chhaja." The learned Subordinate Judge, on appeal, did not quite take that view, but he proceeded on the dictionary meaning of the word "chhaja." This is, in our opinion, erroneous. It is quite true that an Executing Court cannot go behind the decree; but it is well-established that that Court ought to interpret the decree when an application for execution is placed before it, and, for that purpose, it ought to refer to the pleadings in the case and to the judg-ent passed by the Court. We allow the appeal, set aside the orders passed by the Courts below and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law. Costs are reserved and will be dealt with by the learned Judge in the Court below.

Landlord and tenant—Muafi, grant of—Transfer, prohibition against, effect of—Grove—Transfer, unauthorised—Forfeiture—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 150, 167—Suit for resumption of grove—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

Where land is granted for planting a grove the person who plants the grove acquires, according to the general law, a transferable interest in the land and in the absence of a custom to the contrary, the trees become his property. The person who plants such grove possesses all rights in respect of his grove, which are not excluded by custom or the incidents of the tenure. [p. 135, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the grant of a muafi tenure contains a condition restraining the tenure-holder from transferring his right but there is no covenant for re-entry or forfeiture on such transfer, and the muafidar plants a grove, constructs a well and builds other structures of a permanent character upon the land, the landlord cannot claim to re-enter upon the land or forfeit the tenure upon a transfer of the tenure by the grantee. [p. 136, col. 1.]

Per Ashworth, J.—A local custom supersedes the Statute or general law. A local usage does not supersede it but is to be read into the contracts or implied contracts of persons living in the locality to which the usage applies. While a custom depends for its validity on its antiquity, a usage depends for its validity on its notoriety. [p. 137, col. 1.]

A provision in a grant against transfer would be meaningless unless one were to read into it also a provision that it will involve forfeiture. The terms of a grant forbidding transfer must, therefore, entail that the right of reversion operates from the date when possession is given to a third party under an unauthorised transfer. [ibid]

Sections 150 and 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act only exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in cases of the resumption of "land" which means land let or held for agricultural purposes and a grove is not such land. Therefore, a suit relating to the resumption of a grove does not fall within the purview of those sections. [p. 137, col. 2]

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 16th of May 1923.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. W. Dillon and M. A. Aziz, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a piece of muafi land occupied by a grove situated in Qasba Koil, close to the town of Aligarh. The land was originally granted by the predecessors of the plaintiff to Sirh Mal, the predecessor of the contesting defendant, for planting a grove, and the question for consideration is whether the descendants of Sirh Mal had a right to sell the grove to Chunna and Ram Lal, and are liable to ejectment in consequence.

The allegation of the plaintiff was that there was a custom appertaining to the muafis granted by the zemindars by virtue of which the muafi-holders or their descendants had no right to transfer the muafi by sale. The plaintiff questioned the right of the son and grandsons of Sirh Mal to transfer the grove, and he sued for the cancellation of the sale and for possession of the grove by the ejectment of the muafidars and their transferees.

The plaintiff relied in support of the custom on the wajib-ul-arz prepared in 1872 in which under the heading referring to "muafis granted by the zemindar for specific purposes", it was stated that so long as the muafidar or his descendants remained in possession, there will be no interference with them, and the muafidars shall have every right thereto except that of a transfer by sale. A list of the plots and groves then held as muafi was also given and among those plots and groves the grove in dispute was mentioned and described as an old grove (qadim baghicha) held by Sirh Mal. Both in the wajib-ul-arz and in the khassra it was stated that the land had been given for the purpose of planting a grove, and that fact is not disputed.

The Courts below found that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz was sufficient proof of a custom forbidding the alienation and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession.

The entry aforesaid does not, however, purport to record any custom. There are other clauses which purport to record customs then in force in the village, and there are some others which describe the rights of other classes of muafidars and of ex proprietors entitled to malikana rights. The entry relating to the muafidars holding groves in the village merely records the incidents of the tenure, as dictated by the zemindar or his agent at the time, and though, as stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (1), there is no class of evidence more likely to vary in value, according to the circumstances, than the wajib ul arz, for entries at times are made therein connoting the views of individuals as to the practice they would wish to see prevailing, rather than the ascertainment of well-established custom, it would not be unreasonable to presume from the entry that the intention of the grantor when he gave the muafi land for planting the grove was that the enjoyment of the muafi land (as distinct from the right to the timber or the fruits of the grove) was to be restricted to the grantee and his descendants personally. The plaintiff does not, however, rely on any such incident or condition of the grant in the plaint. He does not even assert that forfeiture or resumption was one of the conditions of the grant or incidents of the custom set up. In fact in Ala Bux v. Radhay Lal (2) it was held that a statement in the wajib-ul-arz by one of the interested parties that he had power to take away all muafis, would not be regarded as sufficient proof of a custom of resumption.

Where land is granted for planting a grove the person who plants the grove acquires according to the general law a transferable interest therein, and in the absence of a custom to the contrary, the trees become his property. As pointed out in Chokhe Lal v. Behari Lal (3), Lal Baijnath Singh v. Chandrapal Singh (4) and

Man Singh v. Madho Singh (5), the person who plants such a grove possesses all rights in respect of his grove, which are not excluded by custom, or the incidents of the tenure. No custom is established here and no right of forfeiture or re-entry or resumption is shown to have been reserved.

The muafidar built some structures over the land, besides a pucca well and boundary walls when he planted the grove. The grove was in existence from before 1872, and if one of the incidents of the tenure was that the muafidar shall have no right to alienate his muafi land, but no right of re-entry was reserved to the plaintiff, the muafi cannot be resumed and the muafidar or his descendants cannot be ejected, though the sale of the muafi rights can be set aside. In fact the wajib-ul-arz states that a zemindar shall not interfere so long as the muafidar and his descendants remain in possession. There is no proof of any abandonment by them of their muafi rights in favour of the zemindar. The vendees had taken security from the vendors for the refund of the purchase-money in case their rights were interfered with. They have accepted the decree passed by the Trial Court against them and have not further interested themselves in the case. The vendors alone have appealed and, in the absence of an express covenant for re-entry, no right of forfeiture can be enforced.

In Parameshri v. Vittapa Shanbaga (6), where a permanent lease was granted by a certain person to another without any right to the latter to alienate the property, it was held that an alienation subsequently made by the lessee did not entitle the plaintiff to terminate the permanent lease and re-enter upon the land. In Madar Sahib v. Sannabawa Gujranshah (7) a clause in a lease, whereby the lessee covenanted not to alienate, unaccompanied by any clause for re-entry upon a breach of the covenant, was held to be merely a covenant and not a condition, and a suit brought by the lessor for ejectment was dismissed. In Netrapal Singh v. Kalyan Das (8) where perpetual lease of a village was granted to a lessee and his heirs, containing a covenant against an alienation, by the lessee but no covenant giving to the lessor a right of re-entry upon breach of the former covenant, it was similarly held that the successors-in-title of the lessor could not recover the property, the subject of the lease, from the alienees of the successors-in-title of the lessee. In Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Siba Sundari Debi (9) where a grant was made to certain persons in succession without any power of alienation, it was held that though the alienation by one of the grantees, who was given a life-interest, was against the provisions of the grant and was bad in law, yet inasmuch as the breach of the provisions did not operate as a forfeiture, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for khas possession. In Basarat Ali Khan v. Manirulla (10) where a lease was granted containing a covenant prohibiting the digging of pits and tanks, or the transfer of the land in any way without a letter from the lessor and no right of re-entry was reserved, it was held that an assignment subsequently made by the lessee was operative, notwithstanding the covenant.

What applies to a lease, where no right of re-entry is reserved, applies with greater force to the grant of a muafi tenure, where the grantee of the muafidar has planted a grove, constructed a well, and built other structures of a permanent character on the faith of the grant without any covenant for re-entry or forfeiture. The muafidars still reside in the town in which the muafi is situated; and there is no finding that they have abandoned possession. The vendees alone seem to have abandoned their rights under the sale-deed.

The appeal ought, therefore, to be allowed and the decrees of the Courts below modified so far as they award possession as against the defendants-appellants. The parties to the appeal ought in the circumstances to bear their own costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Ashworth, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent as zemindar against the appellants—defendants, transferees, and other defendants, transferors of a certain grove, for cancellation of the sale-deed executed by the former in favour of the latter. The suit was based on the allegation that according to 'rivaj' (usage or custom) recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1872, the defendants first party held the grove on a tenure which did not entitle them to transfer it to a third party (defendants party No 2) and that the sale entitled the plaintiff to resume the grove. The defence was that there was no such custom or usage, and that, in any case, the defendants were entitled to compensation, in the event of the suit being decreed, for a well, buildings and improvements. Both the lower Courts decreed the suit but allowed the defendants to remove the materials of constructions from the grove. The first Court held that the wajib-ul-arz was decisive as evidence of the tenure of the defendants first party, and that this tenure did not allow sale. The lower Appellate Court held that the general law prevailing in these Provinces was that a grove holder could not transfer, and that this general law was given effect to in the wajib-ul-arz. It held that the defendants had failed to rebut the presumption arising from the general law.

In this appeal it is contended that the prevailing law in these Provinces is that a grove-holder may transfer his rights; and reliance is placed in Lal Baijnath Singh v. Chandrapal Singh (4) and other decisions of this Court. It is also maintained that the passage in the wajib-ul-arz relied upon by the plaintiff does not prove any custom, usage or tenure binding on the defendants. It may be conceded that there is authority for holding that a grove-holder can sell under the provisions of the Tenancy Act unless he is precluded by custom, usage or contract. The plaintiff relies upon para. 19 of the wajib-ul-arz of 1872 which is headed by the title "statement of muafi granted by the zemindar for special purposes." In this paragraph this particular grove is specified as granted without a right of transfer by the grantee. It has been clearly established by respondent's Counsel that it was the duty of the Settlement Officer in 1872 to "ascertain and record the fullest possible information in regard to landed tenures, rights, interests and privileges of the various classes of the agricultural community" and it was provided that "for this purpose the proceedings should embrace the formation of as accurate a record as possible of all local usages connected with landed tenures". This was provided in Regulation VII of 1822 which was not abrogated in this respect by Regulation IX of (9) 35 C. 1069; 8 C. L. J. 188.

(10) 2 Ind. Cts. 416; 26 C. 745; 10 C. L. J. 49.

1883, the last Regulation preceding the Settlement of 1872. I construe this to mean that it was a duty of the Settlement Officer to (a) record local customs and (b) local usage. The paragraph is not a record of custom, because it does not purport to be this, but it may be construed as a record of local usage applicable, at any rate, to the holdings mentioned specifically. Now a local custom supersedes the Statute or general law. A local usage does not supersede it, but is to be read into the contracts, or implied contracts of persons living in the locality to which the usage applies. While a custom depends for its validity on its antiquity, a usage depends for its validity on its notoriety. The Settlement Officers were enjoined not only to record customs but usages. Regarding para. 16 as a record of local usage, it would be good evidence and, if accepted as sufficient evidence, would be binding not only on the zemindars who signed the wajib-ul-arz but on the grantees. The plaint cannot be construed as excluding reliance on "usage" as distinguished from custom. I, therefore, hold that the lower Courts were right in finding that the defendants first party were not entitled to sell the grove.

The next question is what is the result of their having done so. It has been argued that the wajib-ul-arz does not specify forfeiture as a result of a sale, and that, therefore, there is no proof of liability upon defendants to forfeiture. But the provision against transfer would be meaningless unless we read into it also a provision that it will involve forfeiture. A liability implies a right and a right a remedy. There being no rent on the plot the zemindar would have no remedy. If there is a rent his remedy would have been to ignore the transferee and hold the transferor still liable. Apart from this it is clear that the transferor has given up possession. He has also given up his claim to title by the very fact of executing the sale-deed. In the case of abandonment the grove would revert to the zemindar, and the conduct of the transferor must amount to abandonment. He cannot claim to continue possession through his transferee because he can take no benefit from his unlawful alienation. Reference may also be made to s. 154 (c) of the Agra Tenancy Act (U. P. Act II of 1901) which enacts that a rent-free grant is forfeited on breach of a condition.

What is enacted as a rule of law in the case of agricultural land granted rent-free is also equitable in the case of non-agricultural land so granted.

The provisions of law applying in the case of leases, which forbid an unlawful transfer operating as forfeiture, except where there is a contract or custom or usage providing for this, are not applicable to rent-free grants. The terms of a grant forbidding transfer must entail that the right of reversion operates, from the date when possession is given to a third party under such unlawful transfer.

It is further urged that this being a suit for resumption of muafi, should have been brought in the Revenue Court under the provisions of s. 150 read with s. 167 of the Tenancy Act. It is sufficient to say that those sections only exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in cases for the resumption of land which means land let or held for agricultural purposes, and that a grove of the description in suit is not such land.

It has been urged that the plaintiff was bound to pay compensation for the well, buildings and other improvements. No rule of law or equity has been shown justifying such a claim.

For the above reasons, I would dismiss this appeal with costs including costs on the higher scale.

By the Court.—As we disagree, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs including costs on the higher scale in this Court.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 1702 OF 1918.

October 22, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice Fforde.MURLI DAS—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versusACHUT DAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 86—Statements recorded in Native State—Copies forwarded by Resident—Certificate, whether necessary—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 25—Decision under Act, whether operates as res judicata.

The mere fact that copies of depositions of witnesses recorded in a Court in a Native State are forwarded to a British Court by the Resident in due course is not equivalent to the certificate referred to in s. 86 of the Evidence Act.

When a certificate is required by law, it cannot be dispensed with merely because it can be obtained at any time.

A decision arrived at under the Succession Certificate Act upon a question of right between the parties does not, by virtue of the provision contained in s. 25 of the Act, operate to bar the trial of the same question in any suit between the same parties.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, dated the 8th May 1918.

Mr. Sardha Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in the present appeal relates to succession to the incumbency of a temple in Delhi known as Baghichi Madho Das. The previous incumbent Man Das died on the 17th October 1912. The plaintiff-respondent claimed to succeed as the chela of Man Das, whereas the appellant, Murli Das, who took possession of the temple after the death of Man Das, denied that the plaintiff was the latter's chela, and said that he himself was entitled to succeed as the gurbhai of Man Das. It was not denied that Murli Das was the gurbhai of Man Das, but the Court below held that Achut Das, the plaintiff, was appointed by Man Das to be his chela and was, therefore, entitled to succeed. It accordingly decreed his claim, and Murli Das appeals. The Court below, in addition to deciding the point of fact in favour of the plaintiff, held that the question whether he was a chela of Man Das was res judicata on account of the decision of the Jaipur Court in his favour in a succession certificate case.

Upon the question of fact the lower Court has based its decision upon (1) the oral evidence of three Bindra ban witnesses, Swami Gowardhan Das Rangacharia, Mahant Murli Das and Ohhote Lal, printed at pages 28 to 30 of paper-book A; (2) copies of the statements of certain witnesses who were examined in the succession certificate case (some of these witnesses have died and as regards the others the Court was of opinion that there was reasonable ground for holding that they could not be found within the meaning of s. 33 of the Evidence Act); and (3) a document (Ex. P. 1) which was prepared and attested for the purpose of meeting the claim of Murli Das to a succession certificate in the Jaipur State. As regards the copies of the depositions of witnesses who were examined in the succession certificate case it was objected in the lower Court, and the objection has been strongly pressed before us, that they are not admissible in evidence as the certificate of the Resident as required by s. 86 of the Indian Evidence Act has not been given. In regard to this the Court says (page 52 of the judgment) "As these copies have all been forwarded to this Court by and through him (Resident), I, therefore, take it, that he has certified by his action in the matter that the manner in which the documents are certified is the manner commonly in use in the Jaipur State for the certification of copies of judicial records. In any case the point is a trifling one as the necessary certificate under s. 86 can always be obtained." We are unable to admit the correctness of this view. It appears that the copies were obtained by the plaintiff himself in the Jaipur State, and that he got them forwarded by the State officials along with the evidence taken on commission. The mere fact that the Resident forwarded the papers in due course is not equivalent to the certificate referred to in s. 86. Further, we are unable to agree that, when a certificate is required by law, it can be dispensed with merely because it can be obtained at any time. We, therefore, propose to exclude this evidence from our consideration.

[Their Lordships after deciding on the rest of the evidence that the plaintiff was duly appointed chela by Man Das proceeded:—]

Having regard to our decision on the question of fact, it is unnecessary for us to decide whether the finding of the Jaipur Court in the succession certificate case operates as res judicata. The lower Court said it did so operate under s. 13 of the C. P. C., but it appears to us to have lost sight of s. 25 of the Succession Certificate

Act of 1889 which lays down that no decision under this Act upon any question of right between any parties shall be held to bar the trial of the same question in any suit between the same parties.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, Offg. C. J.—The onus of proving what profits might, with due diligence, have been received in any year lies upon the party claiming mesne profits, but the onus of proving what profits the person in wrongful possession actually received lies upon the person in possession. Vide Ramakka v. Nagesam (1). The best evidence of the profits derivable from the cultivation of a particular field in any given year is the evidence as to the actual yield in that year minus the cost of cultivation. But such evidence in order to be useful, must be exact, and it is always open to the party out of possession to falsify the accounts as to the number of measures of grain gathered at the harvest or the price prevailing when they were sold or the cost of cultivation. He may also adduce evidence to prove that the occupant was not diligent and might have got greater profits by proper diligence. In the absence of evidence as to actual profits, the next best evidence is evidence as to possible profits, of which evidence as to yield of similar adjoining lands in the year in dispute is an example. In the present case the petitioners did not prove that any particular items of the defendants declared accounts of the yield of lands kept under direct cultivation were incorrect, but they relied on the circumstance that for nine seasons there had been a net loss upon these lands as itself so highly improbable as to warrant the rejection of all the defendants' accounts on the ground that no man in his senses would go on cultivating the same land year after year, at a loss, although, every one is liable to losses in particular bad seasons. The yield of the suit lands in other years, which the Subordinate Judge has adopted as the yield for the years in dispute, is not such a good guide as evidence as to the yield of neighbouring lands of similar quality in these years would be, and is open to the objection that as regards the lands under lease, which are not kept separate, the leases are better evidence of the profits.

The plaintiffs failed to produce such evidence. The only course for the Court to adopt under these circumstances was to disallow mesne profits upon the lands under direct cultivation on account of the absence of any evidence as to what they might have yielded and the incredibility of the defendants' story that they did not actually yield any profit at all and to award mesne profits upon the leased lands only.

I, therefore, agree in the order proposed to be made in my learned brother's judgment.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—The only question that arises in this appeal relates to the mode of ascertainment of mesne profits. The suit is one for partition instituted by the daughter now dead and represented by her legal representatives of a deceased Mahomedan against her brothers and others for her share in their father's estate and for mesne profits.

The proceedings from which this appeal has been preferred relate to the mesne profits of the agricultural lands from the date of the plaint. A Commissioner was appointed to take evidence and report on the amount of mesne profits and he, in his report, fixed the sum of Rs. 3,561-14-6 inclusive of interest as the amount of mesne profit payable by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to the plaintiff's representatives. On objection taken to the Commissioner's report by both the parties, the matter came up before the Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin who awarded to the plaintiff's representatives the sum of Rs. 5,033-1-6 and interest thereon. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who have been found liable for this latter amount, have preferred this appeal.

At the enquiry before the Commissioner the plaintiff adduced no evidence whatever. The defendants, however, produced several account books and also examined a number of witnesses. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected entirely the evidence of these account books on the ground that in his opinion they had been specially fabricated by the defendants with a view to defeat and defraud the plaintiffs. The two circumstances that he relies on for coming to that conclusion are : firstly, that the defendants, at any rate, after the institution of the suit, knew that they would some day be held accountable for mesne profits and that they had, therefore, a strong motive for fabricating false accounts; and secondly, that the accounts of the khas or direct cultivation of certain lands by the defendants shows that such direct cultivation has, strangely enough, in almost every season during the accounting period, resulted not in profit but considerable loss. This latter circumstance is undoubtedly calculated to raise a great deal of suspicion. But that alone even coupled as it may be with the existence of strong motive would not be sufficient to discredit the account books altogether. It must be observed that the plaintiffs have not challenged the accounts in any other manner or sought to show by an examination of the accounts or cross-examination of witnesses to bring out any aspects or characteristics of the account books on which it may be found that the account books are not genuine. The Subordinate Judge, after rejecting the account books entirely, practically brushed aside the whole of the Commissioner's report and proceeded to assess mesne profits himself not on the basis of any figures available for the period in question but on the basis of figures found for a previous period by a former Commissioner appointed in the suit.

A considerable portion of the lands were lands let out to tenants even during the accounting period; and the agreements executed by the tenants in respect of the lands so leased out have all been produced and filed. In fact, so far as the rents recovered from these lands are concerned, both parties were clearly agreed that the plaintiff's representatives would be entitled to their proper share in the rents so realised. There was, therefore, no reason whatever for the Subordinate Judge to reject altogether the available figures in respect of the lands leased out.

We are clearly of opinion that the plaintiff's representatives would be entitled to their seventh share of the amounts found by the Commissioner as recovered from the tenants in respect of the lands leased out during the nine periods of cultivation in question. As this account has not been separately made up, the matter might have to be referred to the lower Court for the taking of such accounts if the parties here should be unable to agree in the same.

As regards, however, the lands which have been directly cultivated by the defendants during the period the net result of the cultivation in nearly all the periods has been shown to be considerable loss. The question arises in this connection, whether the claimant for mesne profits in such cases is entitled merely to a share of the actual profits received or recovered by the person in possession, and, if not, what the true measure of mesne profits should be. The point to start from is that mesne profits are in the nature of compensation or damages. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have observed in the case of Grish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (2) that mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case. In the case of Midnapur Zamindary Co., Ltd. v. Kumar Naresh Narayan Roy (3) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee refer to mesne profits as compensation to the plaintiff for the exclusive use of the land by the other party. The damages are for the wrongful withholding of possession or exclusion from possession of the party entitled thereto or found to be so.

The definition of mesne profits in the C. P. C., s. 2, cl. 12, itself contains a clear indication as to what the true measure of mesne profits is. It lays down that "mesne profits" of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom; that is to say, if, in respect of any particular property, the Court should find that profits received or recovered by the party in possession do not amount to what with ordinary diligence he might have received from the property, then the true measure is what would have been so received with due diligence, or, in other words, what the party in possession actually receives or recovers is the proper measure except in cases where it is or can be shown that what is so received or recovered falls below what would have been so recovered or received with due diligence.

As it is conceivable that in respect of certain lands the party in possession might have cultivated with the diligence and with regard to others without such diligence, the question can be decided only with regard to each item of property.

Applying these principles to the lands under the direct or khas cultivation of the defendants themselves, we find that in all the nine seasons to which the accounting relates, the defendants are said to have not only not recovered any profits but suffered considerable loss, the expenses being alleged to be far in excess of the yield. We cannot, therefore, treat this kind of dealing by the defendants with certain lands as dealing with due diligence. The very facts clearly show that these lands have not been managed by the defendants with that amount of due diligence, which is indicated in the definition of mesne profits. It is clear that if the lands had been let out, they might have fetched, if not large rents as in the other cases, at least some low rent.

We are, therefore, left to find out the mesne profits in respect of all the lands under the khas or direct cultivation of the defendants by determining what rent or income they would or could have fetched in those seasons if they had been let out by the defendants to strangers. It was incumbent on the plaintiffs to adduce some affirmative evidence with regard to the amounts for which these lands might have been reasonably let in the particular seasons or years by the defendants. See judgment in Ramakka v. Nagesana (1) in this Court not yet reported.* No such evidence whatever has been adduced. There is some evidence to the effect that all the lands that could be let were leased out by the defendants and that only the other lands were cultivated by them directly. There is, therefore, no material whatever from which the amount of mesne profits in respect of these lands could be ascertained. There is also no principle or warrant for burdening the plaintiff's representatives who were admittedly out of possession with any losses alleged to have been sustained by the defendants in the course of their khas or direct cultivation of lands which must have been carried on without due diligence.

The best course, therefore, in these circumstances would be to strike out from the account of mesne profits all the figures relating to the khas or direct cultivation of some of the lands by the defendants themselves and take only the lands leased out to tenants to ascertain the share to which the plaintiff's representatives would be entitled to therein. It seems to us that these figures could be easily worked out and agreed to by and between the parties themselves in this Court and in order to see whether they are in a position to do so, this case will be posted again for orders after the lapse of 10 days. If the parties, however, are unable to agree, the case will have to be sent back to the lower Court for the figures being worked out on that basis.

As both parties have partially succeeded and partially failed, there will be no order as to the costs of this appeal and each party will pay and bear his or their own costs in this Court.

MAUNG PO TOKE—APPELLANT

versus

MAUNG PO GYI—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 28 (2), 42 —Discharge, refusal of—Execution of decree—Leave of Court, whether necessary.

Where an Insolvency Court refuses the discharge of an insolvent under s. 42 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the proceedings are terminated as far as the Insolvency Court is concerned, and the insolvent is thereafter liable to be arrested in execution of any decree without the leave of the Court.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Bassein, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 95 of 1924.

Mr. Leong, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ray, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Maung Po Gyi presented an application for adjudication as an insolvent under the Provincial Insolvency Act, and he was adjudicated. His estate was vested in the hands of the Receiver; the Receiver declared a final dividend, and the estate was wound up as far as the Court was concerned. Maung Po Gyi then applied for his discharge, but his discharge was refused as his estate was not sufficient to pay eight annas in the rupee. One of his creditors, Maung Po Toke, then applied for his arrest in execution of the decree obtained by him against Maung Po Gyi. This application was resisted by Maung Po Gyi, on the ground that he was not liable to be arrested without the leave of the Court.

Mr. Ray, who appears for the insolvent, argues that under s. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the creditor cannot commence any legal proceedings against the insolvent without the leave of the Court. He argues that an application for the arrest of an insolvent is "commencing a legal proceeding against the insolvent," and that, as no leave of the Court had been obtained before the application was made the application must be dismissed. Mr. Ray cited before me certain authorities to show that an application for the arrest of an insolvent is "commencing a legal proceeding" but s. 28 (2) provides that nothing should be done against the property of the insolvent or against the insolvent without the leave of the Court during the pendency of the insolvency proceeding.

The main question which has to be decided now is whether the insolvency proceeding is still pending before any Court.

I am of opinion that there is no proceeding pending before any Court now. As far as the Court was concerned the proceedings terminated when the application of the insolvent for the discharge was refused. There is nothing further to be done by the Court as far as the insolvent is concerned.

Section 41 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides that the Court may refuse an absolute order of discharge; and s. 42 provides that the Court shall refuse an absolute order of discharge on proof of certain facts mentioned in that section, one of the facts being that the insolvent's assets are not of value equal to eight annas in the rupee.

The Court under the provisions of s. 42 refused the discharge of the insolvent and as far as that Court was concerned, the proceedings had terminated. I am, therefore, of opinion that the insolvent is liable to be arrested in execution of any decree, and that the orders of the lower Court are wrong.

I, therefore, set aside the orders of both the lower Courts, and direct that the matter be heard on its merits by the Court of first instance. The appellant will get his costs in all Courts.

Vendor and purchaser—Knowledge of defective title —Wilful default—Breach of contract—Damages.

Where a vendor contracts to sell property to which he knows that his title is defective, and there is a breach of the contract on his part, the conduct of the vendor is equivalent to wilful default, and he is liable to pay damages according to the ordinary rule, i. e., the difference between the contract price and the market price of the property at the date of the breach, although there may be cases in which it may be found that there was an implied contract that in the event of the title proving to be defective without any default of the vendor, he should not be liable to pay damages according to the ordinary rule. [p. 143, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kanga.

Mr. Munshi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Colman and Setalvad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kanga. The suit filed by the plaintiff was for damages for the breach of a contract dated the 20th August 1920 whereby the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff and the plaintiff agreed to buy from the defendant certain immoveable property at Cadell Road for the sum of Rs. 35,000. The plaintiff paid Rs. 1,500 by way of earnest money, and according to the terms of the contract if in the title there should be any such thing as might require to be set right then the defendant was to set it right on his own account, and if he could not do that then he was to return the earnest money which the plaintiff had paid. When the title was investigated it was ascertained that the property was ancestral and that the defendant had two minor sons who had an interest therein. The plaintiff, therefore, required the defendant to obtain an order of the Court sanctioning the sale by the defendant on behalf of his minor sons. The defendant, however, made no endeavour to obtain such sanction. Accordingly, there was a breach of the contract. There can be no doubt that the defendant knew that the property was ancestral and that accordingly his interest in the property was limited. It is, therefore, a case of a vendor contracting to sell property to which he knew that his title was defective; and the only question at issue is whether he should pay damages calculated according to the ordinary rule in the case of a breach of contract, or whether he is only bound to pay the purchaser's costs of the agreement and of the investigation of title. I do not wish to exclude the possibility of there being cases in which it may be found there was an implied contract that in the event of the title proving to be defective without any default of the vendor, he should not be liable to pay damages according to the ordinary rule. But in this case it seems to me that clearly the conduct of the plaintiff in agreeing to sell the property, in which he knew he had not a good title, is equivalent to wilful default, and there is no occasion to reconsider what I said in Hasan Premji v. Jerbai, [(1920) O. C. J. Appeal No. 41 of 1920, decided by Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J., on the 17th December 1920] in the passage which has been quoted by the learned Judge.

I think, therefore, that the decision of the Court below was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Shah, J.—I agree. It seems to me that, on the admitted facts of this case, the decision of the Trial Court is right. The defendant knew that the immoveable property, which he agreed to sell, was his ancestral property; and it is difficult to accept the suggestion made before us under the circumstances of this case that he could not realise the limitations upon his power to alienate this property which was part of the ancestral property and in which his minor sons had a vested interest according to Hindu Law. The limitations upon his power to alienate ancestral immoveable property are by no means obscure; and I do not believe that the defendant was not aware of them at the date of the agreement. When he was called upon to make good the title, he did not, and it is now conceded that he could not ask for the sanction of the Court for the sale on behalf of the minors on the ground of necessity or any other ground which would entitle him to convey the full title to the property so as to bind his minor sons. I do not see how he could be heard now to say that when he entered into this agreement he did not realise the limitations upon his power to sell this property. In the case of a vendor who agrees to sell property which he knows he is not competent to sell except under certain circumstances he cannot take advantage of a clause in the contract such as we have in the present case; nor can he urge with justice that he is not liable to pay damages on the footing of wilful default. On the facts it seems to me that this is clearly a case in which with full knowledge of the limitations on his power the defendant contracted to sell this property. It is right, therefore, that the damages should be assessed on the lines directed by the Trial Court.

ODDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION No. 239
OF 1925.

May 14, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Simpson, A. J. C.
NATIONAL BANK OF UPPER INDIA,
LIMITED, LUCKNOW IN LIQUIDATION—APPLICANT

versus

LAKHPAT RAI—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 207, 215—Voluntary liquidation—Decree obtained against Company, in whether can be allowed to Section 215 of the Companies Act lays a duty upon the High Court to see that justice is done in cases of voluntary liquidation.

Under s. 207 (1) of the Companies Act the assets of a Company which is being voluntarily wound up must be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities pari passu. A person who has obtained a decree against such a Company, therefore, cannot be allowed to realise his decree by way of execution inasmuch as to permit him to do so would give him more than his share of the assets of the Company.

Application under s. 215, Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913.

Mr. N. C. Dutt, for the Applicant.

Mr. Bhawani Shankar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the removal of an attachment. The attachment was made in execution of one decree, and the property attached is another decree. The applicants are Har Gobind Dayal and Seth Radha Kishan, the two liquidators of the National Bank of Upper India. The opposite party is one Lakhpai Rai, who was a depositor in the Bank. He tried to withdraw his deposit, but the Bank refused, and on 9th April 1923 he filed a suit against the Bank and on 31st May 1923 he obtained a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,362-10-0. By this time the Bank had gone into voluntary liquidation. That liquidation dates either from 6th May 1923, when one meeting was held, or more probably from 30th May 1923, when the proceedings of the first meeting were confirmed. In either case the decree was passed after the Bank had gone into liquidation, not that this point is of any importance. In execution of his decree Lakhpai Rai attached another decree. This was a decree for sale obtained by the Bank in a suit brought on the basis of a mortgage. It was dated 16th November 1923 and it was against one Ram Chandra. Lakhpai Rai attached this decree on 30th November 1923.

The first step taken by the liquidators was to apply to the Court, which was executing Lakhpai Rai's decree, for stay of execution. That Court refused stay of execution by an order passed on 23rd March 1925, on the ground that the proper course for the liquidators to take was to apply to this Court, under the provisions of the Indian Companies Act so the present application has been filed under s. 215.

It is pointed out that under s. 207 (1) the assets of the Company have to be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities pari passu, and that to allow Lakhpai Rai to realise his decree in this fashion would be to give him more than his share of the assets of the Company. It is also pointed out that s. 215 lays it upon this Court to see that justice is done in cases of voluntary liquidation.

On behalf of Lakhpai Rai it is pointed out that the Court has no power to pass the order prayed for. For me the matter is concluded by the authority in the case of National Bank of Upper India v. Gopal Das (1), similar powers were exercised by a Bench of this Court, and in the Single Judge case, Miscellaneous Application No. 238 of 1923, Ajit Prasad v. Chandra Bhal an application exactly on all fours with the present one was granted. I may add that I agree with my learned brothers that such orders ought to be passed by this Court. Order as prayed for with costs.

ABDULLAH AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 196-A, 239—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 120-B, 141, 149, 152, 302, 506—Conspiracy to obstruct Police and stop sale of certain goods—Unlawful assembly—Rioting—Murder committed in course of rioting—Responsibility of members of unlawful assembly—Sentence—Same transaction—Joint trial, liability of.

A large crowd of men assembled at a village and agreed among themselves to proceed in a body to a certain Police Station there to threaten and to obstruct the Sub-Inspector of Police and the Policemen with him in the discharge of their duty and then to proceed to a certain bazaar and stop the sale of intoxicants, meat, fish, etc. It was also agreed that if the Sub-Inspector of Police did not act in a certain manner and offered resistance, he and the Policemen with him would be assaulted. The crowd then proceeded towards the Police Station and on arrival there started an altercation with the Sub-Inspector of Police. Their behaviour and attitude was such that if they had been called upon to disperse they would not have done so. During the course of the altercation the members of the crowd began to throw stones at the Police. The Police then fired, killing two men and wounding several others. The mob inflamed to fury then murdered the Police Inspector and several other Police and chaukidars. Some of the members of the crowd were charged with offences under ss. 120-B and 302 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code and were convicted of the latter offence at one trial.

Held, (1) that the immediate object of the crowd as it reached the Police Station being to threaten and to obstruct the Police in the discharge of their duty, it was an object to commit an offence punishable under s. 152 of the Penal Code which was in itself sufficient to bring the matter within the purview of the third clause of s. 141 of the Code and that consequently the crowd formed an unlawful assembly when they started from the village; [p. 160, col. 1.]

(2) that the agreement arrived at between the members of the crowd to stop the sale of intoxicants, meat, fish, etc., in the bazaar, under the circumstances, was an agreement to commit an offence under s. 506 of the Penal Code and that for this reason also the crowd was an unlawful assembly within the meaning of s. 141 of the Code; [p. 158, col. 2.]

(3) that as soon as stones began to be thrown at the Police by the members of the crowd at the Police Station the members of the unlawful assembly became guilty of rioting and that in view of what happened subsequently the charge under s. 302 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code was fully established as against every one of the accused persons who was proved by evidence to have continued an active participant in the rioting after the moment when stones began to be thrown, unless it could be inferred from credible evidence that a particular accused person had separated himself from the rest before the offence of murder had been committed by any of them; [p. 160, col. 2.]

(4) that having regard to the fact that the majority of the accused were ignorant peasants who had been drawn into the affair by misrepresentation of facts and preposterous promises concerning the millennium of Swara, the arrival of which was to be forwarded by courage and resolution on their part, those of them against whom specific acts such as would have resulted in their conviction on a charge of murder apart from the special provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, were not proved, did not deserve the extreme penalty of death and should be sentenced to transportation for life only; [p. 162, col. 1.]

(5) that the charge against the accused being that the events which occurred at the Police Station followed upon the alleged criminal conspiracy arrived at between the accused at the village and were so connected therewith, not merely by sequence of time but by the link of causation, as to make the conspiracy at the village and the subsequent assault on the Policemen at the Police Station parts of the same transaction, within the meaning of that expression in s. 239 of the Cr. P. C., the joint trial of the accused was perfectly justified; [p. 146, col. 1.]

(6) that in order to decide whether the joint trial of the accused was or was not legal the Judge had to look to the case for the prosecution as set forth in the charges themselves and that it was not necessary for him to consider what the position would be if he eventually came to the conclusion either that no offence punishable under s. 120-B was committed by any of the accused or that if any offence was so committed it was one excluded from his cognizance by s. 196-A of the Cr. P. C. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Whatever may be said in defence of peaceful picketing when undertaken in the market of a large town by individuals or by small groups of earnest and enthusiastic men or women, has no application whatever to the flooding of a small bazaar by a body of men whose mere presence there would put a stop to all business which could only be carried on with their consent and with their active assistance. [p. 158, col. 2.]

In every case of a conviction on a charge of murder the law regards the sentence of death as the normal and the appropriate sentence. Where the Court sees fit to pass the lesser sentence of transportation for life it must record its reasons for so doing. [p. 161, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Special Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur.

FACTS.—In this case 225 accused were jointly put up for trial on various charges for an assault on the Police force of Chaura Police Station in the Gorakhpur District, resulting in the murder of 23 Police and chaukidars, the plundering of property belonging to the said officials and to Government, the destruction by fire of the Police Station buildings, and the causing of hurt to various Police and chaukidars.

The Government Advocate and Mr. Kadri, R. B., for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—[Their Lordships after referring to the incident and commending the bravery of the Police and the admirable way in which the lower Court and Counsel had handled the case, proceeded]:—

The charges against all the accused were six in number. There was a seventh charge affecting twenty-six only out of the entire number and an eighth charge affecting the same twenty-six and twelve others in addition. These charges are set forth in detail in the opening pages of the judgment under appeal and we do not propose to recapitulate them. They admit, however, of a certain classification. We have already spoken of the crowd which attacked the Police as an assembly of persons moving in a certain formation and animated by a definite purpose. It is an essential part of the case for the prosecution that the nucleus of this crowd consisted of a body of perhaps 1,000, perhaps 1,500 persons, which set forth from the little village of Dumri Khurd, situated some two miles or rather less from Chaura Police Station. It is alleged as against all the accused persons that they formed part of this original assembly at the village of Dumri and that before their departure from that place, they had entered into an agreement amongst themselves to do certain illegal acts of such a nature as to render them liable to punishment under s. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code. This has been spoken of in argument as the "conspiracy charge" and we propose to refer to it hereafter under that designation. For the present, the point which we have to note is that it was an integral part of the case for the prosecution in the Court below that the events which occurred later in the day, in the neighbourhood of Chaura Police Station, followed upon this alleged criminal conspiracy at Dumri Khurd in such a manner and were so connected therewith not merely by sequence of time, but by the link of causation as to make the conspiracy at Dumri and the subsequent assault on the Policemen at Chaura parts of the same transaction, within the meaning of that expression in s. 239 of the Cr. P. C.

The next five charges, Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, relate to what took place on the afternoon of the 4th of February 1922, at Chaura Police Station and in its immediate neighbourhood. They may be described as different presentations of one and the same charge in lesser or in more aggravated forms. They start with the second charge, which simply alleges as against all the accused persons that they were members of an unlawful assembly, within the meaning of the definition in s. 141 of the Indian Penal Code, at the time when force or violence was used by members of the said assembly, in prosecution of the common objects thereof. This charge is, therefore, laid under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. It is further the case for the prosecution that the force or violence thus used extended to the murder of twenty-three Police and chaukidars, the plundering of property belonging to the said officials and to Government, the destruction by fire of the Police Station buildings and the voluntary causing of hurt to various Police and chaukidars. We have, therefore, charges drawn up under ss. 302, 395, 436 and 332, Indian Penal Code, read in each case with s. 149 of the same Code.

The seventh and eighth charges, which affect some of the accused persons only, may be grouped together. They deal with the damage inflicted on the Railway line and on the telegraph wires and are framed respectively under s. 126 of the Railways Act IX of 1890 and under s. 25 of the Indian Telegraph Act No. XIII of 1885.

There is, as a matter of fact, one further charge of such slight importance that it had been almost overlooked. It affects a single one of the accused, the appellant Sikhari, and is framed under s. 412, Indian Penal Code. In substance it refers back to the charge of dacoity under s. 395/149, Indian Penal Code, in which Sikhari was already involved, and alleges against him, in the alternative, that, if he was not actually concerned in the said dacoity, he was at any rate subsequently found in possession of property which had been stolen in the course of the same. The charge is somewhat loosely worded and does not allege against Sikhari the essential point that he knew that the possession of the property in question had been transferred by the commission of dacoity, but this is not a matter upon which we find it necessary to insist.

Now the case for the appellants is that no offence of criminal conspiracy was committed by any persons at Dumri Khurd on the morning of the 4th of February 1922; or in the alternative that, if there was such conspiracy, it was not one in respect of which a prosecution could be instituted without an order in writing by the Local Government in view of the provisions of section 196-A of the Indian Penal Code. To this contention we shall have to revert later. The point immediately before us is that, whatever offence may or may not have been committed at Dumri Khurd on the forenoon of the 4th of February 1922, it was not one so connected with the offences committed at Chaura later in the same day that it could fairly be regarded as "committed in the same transaction" within the meaning of s. 239 of the Cr. P. C. Upon this plea the appellants base the further contention that there has been a misjoinder of charges, sufficient to invalidate the entire trial in the Court below. We think we do no injustice to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, the very able Counsel who argued this part of the case on behalf of the appellants, when we say that it is not our impression that he seriously pressed this argument to the logical conclusion that, if we found it correct, we should have no option but to order a re-trial of the entire case. He is certainly not to be blamed if he hesitated to face the possible consequences of such a contention, were it to prevail with the Court. Our own view of the question has been already indicated by the expressions we have used in setting forth the charges, but we should perhaps amplify it. When the learned Sessions Judge entered upon the trial of this case, and was faced with the question whether the provisions of s. 239, Cr. P. C., did or did not authorise him, not merely to try the 225 accused persons before him at one and the same trial, but to try them on each and all of the charges set forth against them under the order of the Committing Magistrate, he could not possibly know what conclusion he would arrive at after hearing the whole of the evidence. He had to look to the case for the prosecution as set forth in the charges themselves. He was, therefore, for the reasons which we have already indicated, warranted by law in entering upon this trial of the 225 accused on the charges as framed. The convictions which he has recorded are warranted by the conclusions at which he arrived on the evidence. As he had to regard merely the "charges," it was not necessary for him to consider what the position would be, if he had eventually come to the conclusion, either that no offence punishable under s. 120 B, Indian Penal Code, was committed by any persons at Dumri Khurd on the forenoon of 4th February 1922, or that if any offence was so committed it was one excluded from his cognizance by s. 196-A of the Cr. P. C. In any event, the acquittal of all the accused persons on the conspiracy charge would have removed any possible objection to the validity of the trial. It is possible that in certain events the prosecution may have to suffer the penalty of having attempted to prove too much, by seeing a verdict of acquittal recorded which might otherwise have been avoided.

We do not feel that we are greatly concerned at this stage to discuss the form of the various charges, so long as we are satisfied that there has been no such misjoinder of charges as to force upon us the duty of vindicating the law by quashing all the convictions upon this ground alone, and the consequent responsibility of considering the question of the ordering of a new trial upon such charge or charges as we might direct to be framed. On the case for the prosecution, the three groups of charges as we have set them forth were in respect of offences committed in the same transaction within the meaning of s. 239, Cr. P. C. The final charge against the accused Sikhari alone, was really in the nature of an alternative to one of the others. There was nothing illegal in the procedure adopted by the Trial Court. The conception we have formed of our duty in this matter is that we ought to concentrate our attention upon the one substantial charge in the case. There is not one of the appellants now before us who has been convicted upon any of the other charges, but has been also convicted of the offence of murder committed in the course of a riot and punishable under s. 302-149, Indian Penal Code. In respect of any of the appellants against whom this charge is not, in our opinion, satisfactorily proved, but who is not entitled to a clear verdict of acquittal upon all the charges, the only offence, in our opinion, established is that of simple rioting punishable under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. This offence is set forth in the second of the charges framed. As regards the conspiracy charge there are certain aspects of the case which we shall have to consider further, because of their bearing upon the important and essential question of the common object or objects of the unlawful assembly around Chaura Police Station referred to in the charge of murder. Otherwise we propose to concentrate our attention on the charge under s. 302/149 of the Indian Penal Code and to consider whether this is established against all or any of the appellants. The question of sentence can be completely and adequately dealt with under that single charge. So far as this Court is concerned no lesser sentence than that of transportation for life can lawfully be imposed on any accused person found guilty upon that charge.

On the occasion of the Wednesday market—the 1st of February 1922—a body of volunteers, thirty to forty in number, moved upon Mundera and halted outside the village in the morning, waiting to commence operations as soon as the bazaar was fairly under way. The shop-keepers and the agents of the substantial land-owner of the village were on the alert. The latter came out and questioned the volunteers and told them bluntly that Babu Sant Bakhsh Singh would not allow them to interfere with his market. Reading a little between the lines of the evidence there can be no doubt that any attempt at actual coercion on the part of the volunteers would have been resisted by force. Moreover, it is clear that word had been sent to the Local Police Station, for Sub-Inspector Gupta Singh marched into Mundera with a considerable body of Police and chaukidars. Before his arrival, however, the volunteers had abandoned their enterprise. In face of the resolute attitude of the agents in charge of the bazaar, the volunteers felt themselves too few in number to attempt anything. They scattered and most of them returned to their homes.

Two points, however, require to be noticed. The leaders of the volunteers, before they went off, distinctly told their interlocutors that they would return on the following market day (Saturday, the 4th of February) in such numbers as to enforce compliance with their demands. There is naturally some room for controversy as to the precise language used; but that it was a threat, and was understood as such, is fully proved, not only by the direct evidence, but by the fact that the landholder sent a trusted agent to Gorakhpur to appeal personally to the District Magistrate for special Police protection for his market on the following Saturday. There can be no doubt whatever that such an appeal was made, and that it resulted in the arrival by train at Chauri Chaura Railway Station, at about 9 A. M., on the 4th of February of a small body of armed Police, nine muskets in all.

The other circumstance, trifling in itself but of far reaching consequence, is that a few volunteers did enter the Mundera bazaar after the gathering had dispersed. There is no evidence worth speaking of that they actually did anything provocative, and we give accused generally the benefit of our belief that the volunteer enterprise had really been given up for the day and that the individuals who entered the bazaar did so on private business of their own. Unfortunately, their mere presence in the bazaar proved, under the circumstances, to be provocative. Sub-Inspector, Gupta Singh reached Mundera under the impression of an emergency calling for action on his part and he found the persons in charge of the bazaar excited and alarmed. There is some conflict of evidence as to the details of what followed. Indeed the one witness from whom one would have expected a clear and coherent account, Police Constable Siddiq (the one Constable who survived the massacre) is confused and self-contradictory. Taking the evidence as a whole, it seems clear to us that the Sub-Inspector was, at some time in the forenoon, at the office of the local landholder, when certain volunteers were brought before him by Policemen who had found them in the bazaar. There were probably only two of them; there may have been three or four, but one of them was certainly the accused Bhagwan Ahir, whom we have spoken of the "drill-instructor." The Sub-Inspector spoke roughly to the volunteers. His wrath was particularly directed against Bhagwan, whom he abused for drawing a pension from Government while taking an active part in an "unlawful association," whose ostensible object was the overthrow (no matter by what means) of the Government whose salt he was eating. There is an allegation that Bhagwan answered insolently; there is also a suggestion that the Sub-Inspector was in some way further inflamed against the man by one of the landholder's agents named Raghubar Dayal. What we are certain of is that the Sub-Inspector thoroughly lost his temper and struck the man; we hold it proved that he gave him two cuts with a light cane, and he very probably also struck him with the open hand.

Bhagwan and any volunteer or volunteers with him thereupon decamped and left Mundera altogether. No arrests were considered necessary by the Sub-Inspector and no official report was ever made as to any collision on that date between the Police and volunteers. A curious fact is that we have it, not only from the evidence of Siddiq but from a statement made by the accused Bhagwan himself (Ex. 226), that the latter voluntarily presented himself at the Police Station the following morning (the 2nd of February) and had an explanation with Sub-Inspector Gupteshar Singh. As might be expected the accounts of this explanation differ somewhat; but they agree to this extent, that explanations and apologies were tendered and received and that, as between the principal actors in this episode, the unfortunate incident seemed to have been brought to a conclusion satisfactory to both parties.

There were nevertheless other interested parties who saw in the Sub-Inspector's loss of temper and his unjustifiable action a lever which might be worked with impressive results. For what immediately followed we turn to the evidence of the approver Sikhari. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that this man was endeavouring to earn his pardon by making a clean breast of all facts within his knowledge. We find moreover abundant corroboration of all matters in his evidence which strike us as essential. He tells us that on the evening of the thwarted enterprise at Mundera, that is on Wednesday, the 1st of February 1922, there was a small gathering at his house. Bhagwan Ahir was present, and so also were ringleaders such as Nazar Ali, Lal Mohammad, Mahadeo, son of Thag, and Ramrup (barhai). What Sikhari understood from the conversation which followed was that, not Bhagwan only, but Mahadeo and Ramrup as well, had been beaten by Sub Inspector Gupteshar Singh. It was asserted that Babu Sant Bakhsh Singh (the owner of the Mundera bazaar) had caused them to be seized and brought to his office at Mundera, where they were beaten by the Police. On this it was agreed that letters should be sent out to volunteer associations in neighbouring villages, with a view to their assembling in a body strong enough to warrant them in paying a visit to the Sub Inspector and "asking him why he had beaten our men." Early on the following morning (Thursday, the 2nd of February 1922) the same persons came together again at Shikari's house and as the officials and ringleaders were illiterate, a body of eleven, the witness Nakched P. W. No. 125), was employed to transcribe ve copies of a letter to be sent out as a summons to neighbouring volunteers. There was some discussion as to the actual place to be chosen for the proposed gathering. Someone seems to have observed, shrewdly enough, that if this were fixed in the immediate neighbourhood of Chaura Police Station, the Sub-Inspector would break up the gathering by arresting the volunteers piecemeal as they arrived. Eventually a threshing floor at Dumri Khurd, in the immediate neighbourhood of Sikhari's house, was fixed upon for the meeting place. It was determined that the volunteers should first march to Chaura Police Station to settle their differences with Sub-Inspector Gupteshar Singh and thence proceed northwards to the Mundera bazaar in order to impose their will on the re-calcitrant shop-keepers of that place. There would thus be a long day's work before them, which could scarcely be undertaken fasting. Arrangements were, therefore, made for the collection of supplies in the shape of raw sugar which could be distributed to those attending the meeting. We have independent evidence that this was actually done. The five letters actually issued were to serve as summonses for five hundred to seven hundred and fifty men; but we note with interest that Sikhari says they were confident from the outset that more than this number would assemble once the news got abroad. They expected a gathering of between two and three thousand men.

The boy Nakched was perhaps a little confused under the stress of a severe cross-examination; but in the main he has told a consistent story, and we have no doubt he was trying to tell the truth to the best of his recollection. The account which he gave to the Investigating Police on the 16th of February 1922 (vide Ex. 137) of the contents of the letters he was required to write was given while his memory was still fresh. As a summary of the essentials of the message it is in complete accordance with the evidence subsequently given by the witness and we are prepared to accept it as an accurate summary. It runs as follows:

"The Sub-Inspector of Chaura seeks out and beats the volunteers; therefore bring all your volunteers to Dumri. We will go and enquire from the Sub-Inspector why he makes a practice of beating the volunteers; if he wants to send us to jail or to arrest us he may do so with all of us."

The meaning of this last phrase is obvious

enough: the volunteers were to assemble in such numbers as to make it palpably preposterous for the Sub-Inspector to attempt to arrest all of them. It was suggested in argument that we ought to see in these words a declaration beforehand, on the part of the leaders of the volunteers, that one and all of them would abide faithfully by their pledge to absolute non-violence submitting meekly to arrest or to any other action which the Police might take within the limits of their lawful authority. We are impressed rather with the ironic turn of the phrase and its dangerous implications. The volunteers had only to assemble in sufficient numbers, and to be resolute enough in their determination that nothing should be done to any one of them which was not done to the whole body and they impose their own will; the arresting of even a couple of thousand men was a known impossibility.

In his evidence at the Sessions trial Nakhchad attempts a somewhat fuller statement. As we read his evidence, he purports to give from memory a complete transcript of the letters. In this version we find the provocative statement that the Sub-Inspector is seeking out the volunteers in order to beat them. The closing phrase appears in a confused form, with a reference both to beating and to imprisonment. The essential point remains the same: there was to be no beating of individuals, no arresting of individuals. In this version, however, there is a reference to a further object for the assembly; they were to go on to Mundera and stop the sale of fish and of meat.

We do not think it would help the defence if we were to insist on this fuller account of the contents of the letters as it appears at page 543 of our printed record and we are a little sceptical as to the capacity of this boy of eleven to re-produce the entire contents from memory. We think it safer to stand by the summary of essentials which he gave while his memory was comparatively fresh. The volunteers were summoned to Dumri Khurd on the strength of a preposterously exaggerated account of the assault committed by the Sub-Inspector on the accused Bhagwan; the immediate object of the assembly was that they should march in an organized body to Chaura Police Station and ask the Sub-Inspector what he meant by it. The meeting was fixed for Saturday morning, the 4th of February 1922.

In the interval, further action was taken about which Sikhari apparently knows little or nothing, but as to which there is plenty of evidence. The accused Lal Muhammad sent in a report to the District headquarters of the Khilafat Committee at Gorakhpur. The evidence on this point consists partly of documents seized by the Police, when they raided the Khilafat Office on the 5th of February, and partly of the evidence of various members of the Executive Committee of the Khilafat at Gorakhpur, whom the prosecution put into the witness-box one after another, in the hope of getting at the whole truth concerning this important aspect of the case. We do not feel that any very substantial measure of success has been attained. On one matter of detail there is a distinct conflict of testimony. Maulvi Subhanullah (P. W. No. 134), seems positive that Lal Muhammad either brought his written report to Gorakhpur himself, or at any rate followed it up by a personal visit. The Secretary of the Khilafat Committee, Muhammad Sulaiman Adhami (P. W. No. 170), does not think that Lal Muhammad came to Gorakhpur in person, and is positive that Maulvi Subhanullah is making a mistake if he says (as he apparently does) that Lal Muhammad was sent from that gentleman's house to the office of the Khilafat Committee with his letter, or written report in his hand. There is a conflict of evidence also as to whether the paper, Ex. 95, is this report in original; indeed we are in some little doubt as to whether Lal Muhammad or any other volunteer had the capacity to draft such a document. We are beyond all question dealing with the testimony of reluctant witnesses, who were as economical of the truth as they dared to be. Certain facts are, however, fully established, Lal Muhammad did cause to be conveyed to the office of the Khilafat Committee a letter or report of which Ex. 95 is at any rate a correct transcript. This report was sent in by hand, so that the information it conveyed could be, and undoubtedly was, supplemented by oral communication with the person or persons who carried it. The communication was one which called for an immediate answer: if any written answer was returned it has disappeared, nor can any trace of it be discovered in the correspondence registers of the Gorakhpur Khilafat Committee. Some sort of answer, oral or written, or both, was unquestionably returned.

The letter, Ex. 95, is to the effect that two volunteers, while peacefully engaged about their own marketing (the name of the bazaar is, not given), had been seized and severely beaten by the officer-in-charge of the Local Police Station. "We, therefore, report this matter to your worships," the letter concludes, "in order that you may come and investigate the matter. It is because of your worships that we (ham-log, i. e., the local volunteers) have not committed any offence of any sort, for whatever action we take will be after inquiring from (you) our superiors." A book has been produced (Ex. 92) which purports to be the abstract register of correspondence received at the office of the Khilafat Committee at Gorakhpur: this register the witnesses called from that Committee have (not without some apparent shuffling and hesitation) admitted to be genuine. In this register there is an entry under date the 2nd of February, 1922, of a letter received from Lal Muhammad, Secretary, Chauri Chaura, the recorded summary of which is to the effect that the Sub-Inspector in charge of Chaura Police Station has severely beaten two volunteers, and the "people of that place" were ready to assault the Police in return, "but had been with difficulty restrained." It need scarcely be pointed out that this is not an accurate summary of Ex. 95. There are various points about the appearance of Ex. 92 calculated to suggest a doubt whether this is really the correspondence register, as kept up in the regular course of business. No abstract register of correspondence issued from the Gorakhpur Khilafat Office is forthcoming; and in face of the description of the book Ex. 92 in its own heading we are not prepared to accept the belated assertion of Niaz Ahmad Arif (P. W. No. 172) that this Exhibit is in fact the only register maintained at that office for correspondence received and correspondence issued.

In considering the inference to be drawn from this peculiar state of the evidence we bear in mind the fact that no official or member of the Executive Committee of the Khilafat at Gorakhpur is now on his trial before us; but we are very definitely called upon to form an opinion as to the objects with which the National Volunteers assembled at Dumri Khurd on the morning of 4th of February and as to the resolutions come to at that gathering before the meeting proceeded to take action in pursuance of the same. Looking at the matter from this point of view, we feel bound to record our opinion that the whole truth has not been disclosed in the evidence produced at this trial as to the communications which passed between the Executive Committee of the Khilafat at Gorakhpur and the local leaders of the National Volunteer associations in the neighbourhood of Chaura in the course of the 2nd and 3rd of February 1922. In particular, we do not believe that any written answer was ever returned by or on behalf of the said Executive Committee to the communication received from Lal Muhammad. We strongly suspect, to put it no higher, that the register of correspondence issued from that office has disappeared, not because of anything which it did contain but because of what it did not contain; that is to say, because no entry appeared therein of any written answer to Lal Muhammad's report. It follows that an oral answer was returned and that it was of such a character that those responsible for it could not venture to reduce it to writing. Our suspicions on this point are strengthened by certain evidence, which will be noticed in due course as to what took place at the meeting at Dumri Khurd. These considerations warrant us in putting upon Lal Muhammad's letter the sinister interpretation of which it is undoubtedly susceptible. In substance and in effect this accused reported to his "office" at Gorakhpur that the local volunteers had been roused by the outrageous conduct of the Sub-Inspector of Chaura to such a state of indignation that, if the officials would only give the word, they were prepared to teach that officer, and the Police generally, a signal lesson: and requested that some one should be sent down to look into the matter.

The reply to this communication was, as we believe and have already said, sent by word of mouth. The positive evidence as to its purport is to be found in the depositions of one or two "Khilafat" witnesses, who say that it was to the effect that the volunteers should be patient. If they were speaking the truth, and a written answer had been returned to this effect, we are confident that either the writing itself would be forthcoming, or reliable secondary evidence as to its purport. We are driven to form our opinion on this point from the evidence as to what actually took place on Saturday, the 4th of February.

From early morning on that day preparations were made at Dumri Khurd for the expected gathering. The place chosen was a threshing floor in front of the house of the accused, Behari (Pasi). The local volunteers arranged the ground, sacking being spread to provide seating accommodation for the central group of leaders. Some modest provision was made for refreshments by way of baskets containing raw sugar. Flowers were collected and made into garlands for the adornment of those whom the assembly might particularly desire to honour. From about seven in the morning a steady stream of volunteers began to flow in. There is evidence scattered about the record, in the depositions of witnesses from various villages within a radius of several miles from Dumri, which shows the manner in which these men had been summoned by messages and mustered in little groups of half a dozen or so, before marching for the appointed rendezvous. Harpal, the village watchman of Dumri (P. W. No. 34), had received instructions beforehand. He watched the proceedings until two or three hundred men were collected, ascertained from the general trend of the conversation that the intention was to march on the Mundera bazaar and then slipped away to report the matter at Chaura Police Station. He says that volunteers were still streaming in when he left Dumri Khurd. The approver Sikhari (P. W. No. 1), estimates that five or six hundred men had come together by about 8 A.M. and that the numbers had increased to about one thousand when the meeting was brought to a close by the organized body of volunteers setting out for Chaura Police Station. So far as we have been able to check this estimate by the evidence of other witnesses, it certainly does not appear excessive: we are satisfied that the men who set out from Dumri Khurd for Chaura Police Station were at least one thousand in number, and may well have been fifteen hundred.

For the proceedings at this meeting, generally spoken of in the evidence and in the judgment as "the Dumri Sabha," we have before us a very considerable body of evidence. In the first place, we have the depositions of the two approvers, Shikari and Thakur. Next we find references to this matter in statements made under s. 164 of the Cr. P. C., to a Magistrate, before the commencement of the enquiry preliminary to commitment, by a number of accused persons. The most important of these are the statements of Ramrup Barhai (Ex. 225), Bhagwan Ahir (No. 226), Mahabir Saithwar (No. 214), and Raghbir Sunar (No. 251). In the third place, we find more or less detailed accounts of the affair from three witnesses, Jakat Narain Pande (P. W. No. 91), Bhawani Prasad Tewari (P. W. No. 25) and Shankar Dayal Rae (P. W. No. 102). It is quite beyond question that these three men were present at the occurrences they profess to describe. The first strikes us as the sort of vain and irresponsible busy-body whom one so often finds thrusting himself to the front in connection with some political or social movement. The reception he met with on his first arrival at Dumri is enough to show that the peasantry of the neighbourhood not only respected his caste and were inclined to take him at his own valuation as a professor of religion but looked upon him as a person of some authority in connection with the non-co-operation movement. We see no reason to believe that he was ever accepted as such by the organizers of the Congress or Khilafat movement in Gorakhpur itself; nor on the other hand do we see any real ground for regarding him as a Police spy, though he was accused of being one by indignant volunteers before the meeting at Dumri was over. His own account of what took him to Dumri is that he hastened to the place as soon as he heard what was going on because he had formed a low opinion of the character of local volunteers and was persuaded (from what had happened at Mundera on the previous Wednesday) that they were going to get themselves into trouble by acting contrary to the true precepts of non-violence as laid down by "Mahatmaji" Gandhi. He naturally tries to put his own conduct in the most favourable light, and we are not greatly concerned to inquire how far honest zeal for what he thought right, mingled with mere curiosity and a desire to gratify his self-importance in determining his conduct. He certainly did go to Dumri and he does seem to have exerted himself, to the best of his ability, to prevent mischief. Bhawani Prasad is a land-holder and village headman of Pokharbinda, a hamlet which had sent a contingent of volunteers to Dumri. He was on friendly terms with Sub-Inspector, Gupteshar Singh and was sent for to the Police Station on the Saturday morning. He was relieved to find the small contingent of armed Police arriving from Gorakhpur, and he went to Dumri, on the Sub-Inspector's suggestion, to see what was really happening and to warn the volunteers that they had better abandon whatever enterprise they were meditating, whether against Chaura Police Station or Mundera bazaar, especially in view of this re-inforcement which the Police had received. Rae Shankar Dayal is a resident of the Ballia District who was making a living in Gorakhpur out of District Board contracts and a contract which he held in connection with the Mundera bazaar. It was his interest in this matter which took him to Dumri to see what the volunteers were really doing. He has played an ambiguous part in this trial and portions of his evidence have been severely commented on by the learned Sessions Judge. We are satisfied that he may be regarded as a witness distinctly friendly to the accused persons.

The effect of this evidence as a whole is to corroborate the account of the meeting at Dumri given by the approver Sikhari, at least in its broad outlines, sufficiently to enable us to feel certain of its straightforwardness and general accuracy. Of the present accused, the men who took the lead were Nazir Ali and Lal Muhammad; also, in a lesser degree, Shyam Sunder and Abdulla alias Sukhi; with these must be placed Sikhari himself, a man of the name of Indarjit whom the Police had not been able to arrest up to the time of the trial in the Court below and an ascetic with a pair of tongs, an article commonly carried by religious mendicants of a certain class. He is frequently referred to in the evidence; and was probably a mischief-maker from a distance. No one seems to know his name. Jagat Narayan Pande and Shankar Dayal were cordially received on their arrival, garlanded and permitted to address the meeting. The latter was apparently mistaken for some emissary from head-quarters whom the volunteers were expecting, under the description of "the Ahrauli Babu." Both tried to persuade the gathering to break up and to abandon their expressed intention of proceeding in a body to Chaura Police Station and Mundera bazaar. Jagat Narayan especially exerted himself in this sense, appealing to the precepts of "Gandhi-ji" and to the fact that armed Police had reached Chaura. He was violently opposed by Nazar Ali, also by Lal Muhammad, Shyam Sunder and Abdulla alias Sukhi. He was told that he was no better than a Police spy, ridiculed, abused and finally turned out of the meeting with contumely. Eventually Nazar Ali carried the entire meeting with him in a resolution that they were to march in a body, first to Chaura Police Station, to ask the Sub-Inspector why he had beaten two volunteers, and thence to Mundera bazaar to stop the sale of intoxicants, of meat and of fish. These objects were to be pursued unflinchingly and carried through in the teeth of any opposition that might be encountered. No one was to start on the expedition who was not prepared to venture his life on the hazard. When challenged to do so by Nazar Ali, all those present bound themselves by oaths to persevere to the end. Anyone who turned back after setting forth with the rest was to be considered, if a Hindu, to have eaten cow's flesh, if a Musalman, the flesh of swine. What may be a coarse variant of the oath, but is more likely to be a description of any defaulter, is mentioned by Sikhari as particularly applicable to anyone "who should retreat from before the bullets at the thana." The assembly was a large one and it is easily conceivable that more than one form of oath was used. The coarser one, be it oath or description, was abhorrent in its terms and might well appeal more particularly to those elements in the crowd, drawn from the lowest strata of society, which are abundantly represented in the list of appellants before us.

On all the points hitherto set forth the evidence as to the proceeding at this Dumri Sabha is clear, consistent and overwhelming. There remains, however, one detail which calls for separate consideration. When Sikhari made his first statement before a Magistrate on the 16th of March 1922, he said, speaking of a late stage of the meeting "In the meantime two Muhammadans, one of whom was wearing spectacles, came there. I do not know where they lived. They took out a piece of paper and began to read it. Then they began to sing. In this song the names of Muhammad Ali and Shaukat Ali were uttered, again and again, and it was about their imprisonment. After singing the song they went away to the west. Then we got up and passing along the raised borders of the fields reached the road." In his evidence at the trial, after speaking of the ejection of Pandit Jagat Narayan from the meeting and the departure of Rai Shankar Dayal—it is curious to note that he ignores Bhawani Prasad altogether—Sikhari goes on to state—"Two other men came, one wearing green glasses who was of my stature, but older, about 32, who from his words appeared to be a Musalman; the other was younger than I—I cannot say whether he was a Hindu or a Musalman. The man with glasses began to read from a slip of paper singing 'we are going for two years each' We understood going to jail. Then Nazar Ali stood and publicly administered an oath."

On the 13th of March 1922, the accused Bhagwan Ahir made a statement before a Magistrate, which contains the following passage:—"Then two Muhammadans wearing spectacles came there. They began to sing a song describing the deeds of Shaukat Ali and Muhammad Ali. On hearing the song all became angry and said, "Come, we will all go to the thana."

Four days later the accused Mahabir, son of Lalsa Saithwar, in a statement similarly recorded, told the Magistrate:—"Two Musalmans came there. One of them was wearing spectacles and the other had a beard. They came there and began to sing. After this all the volunteers, who were about three thousand, got up and started from there crying out, Mahatma Gandhi ki jai."

The accused Raghubir, son of Jaddu, is a sunar by caste a man of higher social position than the bulk of the accused. On the 4th of March 1922, he told a Magistrate as follows:—"Lectures were delivered. There was a Babu who in his lecture said that we should not go either to Mundera bazaar nor to the Police Station. If we went in a body there would be a riot. But no one listened to him. A Miyan, whose name and residence I do not know, delivered a lecture and asked his hearers whether they were ready to die. They replied that they were ready. Then all started from there."

It would be quite possible for us on the evidence which we have already reviewed, to record our finding as to the nature of the agreement come to by the volunteers assembled at Dumri Khurd and whether that agreement did or did not amount to a criminal conspiracy. We think it better, however, to proceed with the narrative of events. The evidence as to what the volunteers agreed amongst themselves to do cannot be altogether dissociated from the evidence of what they actually did. We shall have to consider, in connection with certain statements made by the approvers Shikari and Thakur, if their testimony is or is not borne out by the subsequent conduct of the volunteers.

Up to a certain point there is no room for controversy as to the course of events. When the volunteers left the threshing-floor at Dumri, they made their way along the field boundaries to the broad unmetalled road which runs from Gorakhpur to Deoria, by going eastward along which they would come to the Chaura Police Station, rather less than two miles distant. On this road the men were got into some sort of rough formation. The services of drill-instructor Bhagwan were requisitioned for this purpose. Flags which had been prepared beforehand were sent to the front and the crowd began to move under the guidance of their "officers," who halted them and moved them on again by the sound of whistles. They were in an excited mood, continually raising triumphant cries and acclamations. As a point roughly about half way to Chaura they came to Bhopa bazaar, where a road branches off to the left that is to say in a northerly direction, towards a Railway crossing, beyond which it leads directly to Mundera bazaar. This was the route which the crowd would have followed if they had not resolved to visit Chaura Police Station before going to Mundera. At this point they were met by the witness Awadhu Tewari a servant of Babu Sant Bakhsh Singh, the proprietor of the Mundera bazaar. The evidence of this witness as to what he saw at Bhopa corroborates Sikhari. The approver says that by that time the crowd had swollen to a total of 2,500 or 3,000 men. Awadhu puts the number considerably higher, but is probably exaggerating. He says the crowd came towards him carrying flags and raising triumphant cries. The leaders appeared to him to be the accused Nazar Ali and Shyam Sunder and the approver Sikhari. He gives an interesting and obviously genuine account of his conversation with them, when he endeavoured to persuade them to turn back or to disperse. Nazar Ali spoke with great insolence and remarked in an ironical tone that he was going on to the Police Station to get a beating. He raised his flag and the crowd moved on, still crying out "Victory". The witness hurried to the Police Station and told the Sub-Inspector what he had seen. In the meantime the crowd moved on as far as a building often referred to in the evidence as the factory of Lala Halwai. This brought them close to the Police Station enclosure which lies in an angle, where a short length of metalled road turns northward from the highway between Gorakhpur and Deoria and leads to a Railway crossing and the bazaar of Chaura, beyond which it proceeds to Mundera bazaar. The Police Station enclosure extends practically from the Gorakhpur Deoria highway on the south to the Railway crossing and the line of the Railway on the north side. The entrance to the Police Station is on the east, that is to say opening on to the short length of metalled road leading northwards from the highway to the level crossing. Opposite this entrance, and across the metalled road, were a few buildings, including the private quarters of the Sub-Inspector in charge of the Police Station. According to Sikhari the crowd was continuously increasing in numbers as they moved from Bhopa bazaar towards Chaura. We unhesitatingly accept his evidence as proving that when the crowd came to a halt beyond Lala Halwai's factory it was over 3,000 strong. Sikhari says "they were in ranks . . . the road on either side." He adds:— "When we came to the factory we knew there was danger and that there was a guard with guns at the thana (Police Station). We were ready to sacrifice our lives. We saw that the darogha (the Sub-Inspector in charge of the Police Station, i. e., Gupteshar Singh) was standing with Police and chaukidars. We supposed he was standing there to beat us. We went on because we considered ourselves to be in . . . numbers; and what could he do to us. We ought perhaps to explain that the vernacular word used by the witness, which had been translated "to beat," is a word of wide significance, meaning also "to strike" and even "to kill" it would undoubtedly include striking with bullets or other missiles as well as the infliction of blows in hand-to-hand combat.

To resume our narrative: at this point the witness Sardar Harcharan Singh came forward from the direction of the Police Station to meet the crowd. A conference took place between him and their leaders. He estimates the number of the crowd at three to four thousand. Their leaders appeared to him to be Nazar Ali, Shyam Sunder, Sikhari and the unknown ascetic carrying a pair of tongs who has been referred to elsewhere. He found the crowd in a singular state of fierce excitement. He says their leaders addressed him in a tone which was anything but respectful. They told him plainly that they were resolved at all costs to go to the Chaura Police Station and thence through the Chaura bazaar, through the village of Bale, to Mundera bazaar. The witness persuaded them to wait while he went to speak with the Sub-Inspector. It must be remembered that the Police occupied at this moment a position which was strategically sound. They were drawn up across the highway, the breadth of which would presumably be commanded by the muskets of the armed Police. These were the men on whom Sub-Inspector Gupteshar Singh would have to rely in the event of an encounter. The four or five men of the Civil Police whom he seems to have kept about him would scarcely count for anything as a fighting force. He had with him also, so far as we can gather, 40 or 50 chaukidars or village watchmen, being in part men whom he may have called in to the Police Station that morning in anticipation of trouble, and in part men whose turn it was to go to the Police Station on that day to draw their pay. These men were efficiently enough armed for an encounter at close quarters with the brass-bound lathis of stout bamboo which formed part of their official equipment. They were, however, a mere collection of village watchmen, wholly unused to acting together in numbers. The records of dacoity cases in this Court afford abundant evidence of the slight reliance which can be placed upon an assemblage of village watchmen as a fighting force. On the other hand no one who examines this record can fail to realise something of the impression produced on the minds of those who saw the crowd at close quarters, not merely by their numbers but by the spirit which animated them. Bhawani Prasad after seeing them at Dumri advised the Sub-Inspector to bow his head to the storm and let the day go by. He evidently believed that successful opposition to the march of the volunteers was out of the question; that it would be better to let them work their will, for that one day, in Mundera bazaar and to see what could be done subsequently in the way of re-establishing order. Sardar Harcharan Singh was deeply perturbed. We do not think that anything in his conduct bears out the imputations of treachery and double-dealing which have been cast upon him. He returned to the Sub-Inspector, after his interview with the leaders of the volunteers, with the conviction plainly on his mind that there was no stopping these men if they moved forward, as they were evidently determined to do. We take it that there was perceptible in the spirit of this crowd that sort of magnetic force which the ancient Greeks ascribed to supernatural influence, and which has often been noted as emanating from an army destined to be victorious in an impending encounter. Psychologically it has its basis in the recognition on the part of each member of the force that those around him are animated by the same resolution which he feels in himself: he knows that if he elects to go forward, he will not go forward alone. Sardar Harcharan Singh believed that he could exercise sufficient influence over the crowd and its leaders to ensure their marching, peacefully and without disorder, past the Police Station, if they were allowed to proceed in this way towards their destination at Mundera bazaar. He apparently received some assurance to this effect from the leaders. He says that, in communicating his views to the Sub-Inspector, he suggested that it would be easier "to deal with the crowd" after they had passed the Police Station.

If Sub-Inspector, Gupteshar Singh had followed resolutely the plain dictates of duty, if he had continued to bar the road against the advance of the crowd and had offered them a reasonable time in which to disperse, under threat of opening fire in the event of their refusal, his chances would have depended on the possible intimidating effect of two or three volleys delivered at close quarters into the crowd massed along highway and "overflowing," as Shikari says, "the road on either side." If the crowd broke in panic, the miscellaneous force of chaukidars might have been useful enough in completing their dispersal, and possibly in arresting their leaders. If the resolution of the crowd held firm, we very much doubt whether, with the force and with the weapons at his disposal, Sub-Inspector Gupteshar Singh could have prevented the dispersal of his force by sheer weight of numbers, their isolation and subsequent massacre.

The matter was not put to the test. The unfortunate Sub-Inspector is not to be blamed, or at any rate to be severely blamed, if his resolution gave away. He had to consider, not only the chances of an actual conflict, but the subsequent justification of his own action against the flood of adverse criticism which would undoubtedly have been let loose upon him. He accepted the advice of Sardar Harcharan Singh, withdrew his force from across the highway and fell back within the Police enclosure. From that moment he and those with him were doomed. The crowd so far kept their express or implied compact with Sardar Harcharan Singh, that they moved in more or less orderly formation along the highway to the south of the Police Station and, turning to their left, began to file past the thana gate towards the Railway crossing; and on beyond into the Chaura bazaar. From this point we have to deal with evidence about which there has been some controversy. We think it useless to enter upon a detailed analysis of all the items of evidence upon which our conclusions are founded. Certain matters of detail must remain in doubt; but as to the main course of events we believe it possible to formulate conclusions quite sufficient for the determination of all the issues set before us.

It must be remembered that, when Nazar Ali and Lal Muhammad called the volunteers together, they had not done so merely in order to carry out their previous threats against the vendors of intoxicants, of meat and of fish in the Mundera bazaar. They had got together their men on the understanding that they were to go to Chaura Police Station and have it out with the Sub-Inspector about the matter of the beating of the volunteers. We know that highly exaggerated statements had been put about on this subject. Accordingly, while numbers of the crowd were continuing on their way towards the Railway crossing and Mundera bazaar, some of their leaders, with a considerable body of followers, came to a halt in front of the open gate of the Police Station and demanded to see the Sub-Inspector. Matters about which there has been considerable controversy are the numbers of the men who thus came to a halt and the question whether, as the movement of the crowd continued, there was ever at any moment a perceptible interval of space between the group which was halted in front of the Police Station and the rest of the crowd. It cannot appear surprising to any one who endeavours to form a mental picture of the scene that the available evidence on question of this sort should be conflicting. We are prepared to believe that the number of those who definitely halted in front of the thana gate, to have it out with the Sub-Inspector, did not exceed three hundred. Events moved rapidly : a crowd of three to four thousand men cannot get along very fast by a narrow street and over a Railway crossing; we very much doubt whether there was at any moment a clear interval of space between those who were still moving on northwards and those, who, whether of set purpose or out of mere curiosity, lingered about the eastern front of the Police Station. The evidence satisfies us that the demand for an explanation in the matter of the beating of a volunteer, or of volunteers, was made in insolent and over-bearing tones and that Sub-Inspector, Gupteshar Singh adhered to the policy which he had adopted by speaking the crowd fair. He told them that the man whom he had beaten (the accused Bhagwan) was not a brother of theirs; that he was a Government pensioner and might, therefore, fairly be regarded as subject to his (the Sub-Inspector's) authority. There are statements here and there on the record which attribute to the Sub-Inspector words and expressions of extreme abject apology. Whatever he said, his remarks were received by the crowd, not merely with satisfaction, but with insolent and mocking triumph. Numbers of witnesses depose to a coarse jest which passed from mouth to mouth in the crowd, no doubt with slight variations of form, ascribing abject terror to the Sub-Inspector personally, to the Police generally and even to that abstract entity referred to as "the Government." Along with this came a derisive clapping of hands, similar to that which had driven Pandit Jagat Narayan from the assembly at Dumri. Some of the crowd which had halted by the Police Station gate began to move northwards, but we are quite satisfied that the gateway was still beset by numbers of the crowd when the patience of the much tried Sub-Inspector gave way. The man is dead, and we shall never know with certainty what was passing in his mind. We can well believe that he was roused to anger by the taunts of the crowd, their coarse jest and their derisive hand-clapping.

It is quite conceivable, however, that it was precisely these taunts which brought home to him the disadvantages of the position into which he had allowed himself to drift. After all, the armed guard had been sent out, not to defend him personally, but in order that he might use it to protect the licensed vendors and other shopkeepers of the Mundera bazaar against terrorism and mob violence. The organised crowd of volunteers was now moving steadily on towards Mundera, while the Sub-Inspector himself was practically blockaded inside his own Police Station by the crowd which still hung about the gateway. If the volunteers achieved their threatened purpose in Mundera that day, and still more in the not improbable event of the baser elements of the crowd getting out of hand there and plundering shops or the like, he would have to answer to his superiors for the remissness by which he had allowed these things to happen. He may well have felt, and we think that in all human probability he did feel, that the first and most urgent duty incumbent upon him at that moment was to recover his own freedom of action by clearing the road immediately in front of the Police Station. He ordered a number of chaukidars forward for this purpose. As might be expected, the evidence regarding the brief and confused scene which followed is somewhat conflicting. The crowd, undoubtedly, scattered before the advance of the chaukidars; there are witnesses who speak of them as running in different directions. In the main, however, the natural tendency of the crowd would be to press northward towards the Railway crossing, that is in the direction of their own re-inforcements. Hence we have some of the witnesses who speak of the chaukidars as driving the crowd towards the Railway crossing, which would in itself be a futile thing for the Police to have done. What precise degree of violence was used by the chaukidars it is impossible to determine. Sardar Harcharan Singh, who was in as good a position to observe what happened as any other witness, will not admit that the chaukidars actually struck any one: he describes them as thumping the ends of their lathis on the ground, which is a well-known and frequently adopted method of breaking up, or moving on, a crowd by threatening them with painful, but not serious, injury to their feet. There is no doubt a good deal of evidence to the effect that some of the chaukidars "beat" some of the volunteers, and we are prepared to take it that blows were struck. What seems to us the one crucial fact which stands out in plain relief from the evidence is that the crowd generally, and more particularly the volunteers who constituted the back-bone of the crowd and the leaders of those volunteers, were prepared beforehand for just such a contingency. As the cry was passed along that the chaukidars were beating the volunteers, whistles were sounded and, upon this preconcerted signal, the whole crowd swung back upon the Police Station. The men spread themselves out along the Railway line, arming themselves with kankur and brick-bats from the ballast, which missiles were also carried down towards the eastern front of the Police Station. A steady hail of missiles began to overwhelm the scanty Police force, already disorganised and manœuvred into an untenable position. The firing of the first volley in the air was met by a cry that "Mahatmaji Gandhi" was working miraculously in favour of the volunteers and was turning the bullets to water. We have plenty of evidence on this record as to the wide-spread belief in this gentleman's miraculous powers. We have no doubt that such a cry was raised and that it put the finishing touch to the resolution of the mob. When the Police began to fire in earnest, and two of the rioters had been shot down and others wounded, the only result was to inflame this resolution into fury. What followed has been already told.

In the light of these events we must now go back to the question, what was it that the volunteers assembled at Dumri agreed to do? The case laid before us by the defence may be fairly summed up as follows. The agreement, undoubtedly, was that the volunteers should go first to Chaura Police Station and thence to the Mundera bazaar. At the former place they were to submit to Sub-Inspector, Gupteshwar Singh a sober and dignified remonstrance against his illegal conduct in assaulting individual volunteers. They were to offer themselves to him for arrest in a body, if he was prepared to act upon the view that under the order of Government every enrolled volunteer was ipso facto liable to arrest and prosecution. When this piece of business was satisfactorily settled, they were to move on to Mundera bazaar and there, by peaceful persuasion exercised towards the licensed vendors of intoxicating liquor and drugs, and towards any persons whom they might find attempting to purchase the same, put a stop to the public sale of these harmful intoxicants. They were at the same time to stop the sale of meat and of fish, either absolutely or unless the vendors submitted to the sweeping reduction in price of which we have already spoken. As a matter of fact this latter alternative cannot be seriously considered. Everyone must have known that meat and fish would not be sold at the price suggested by the volunteers and the idea of obtaining meat and fish at reduced prices had by this time been wholly superseded by the idea of punishing the vendors of these commodities in Mundera bazaar for their contumacy by closing their shops altogether. All the evidence on the point is simply and plainly to the effect that the volunteers were to stop the sale of meat and of fish.

On this the first comment we have to make is, that the very idea of a body of 3,000 men or more controlling the shops in the Mundera bazaar by means of peaceful persuasion is on the face of it almost grotesque. Whatever may be said in defence of peaceful picketting, when undertaken in the market of a large town by individuals, or by small groups of earnest and enthusiastic men or women, has no application whatever to the proposed flooding of a small bazaar like Mundera by a body of men whose mere presence there would put a stop to all business which could only be carried on with their consent, and indeed with their active assistance. Secondly we cannot deal with the question of the object of the volunteers in moving on Mundera bazaar without taking into consideration the events of the previous Wednesday. The expedition of Saturday, February 4th, was in plain fulfilment of the threats which had been used by Nazar Ali and other leaders of the volunteers on the previous market day. So far as this part of the case is concerned, we have no doubt that the agreement came to at Dumri to stop the sale of intoxicants, of meat and of fish in the Mundera bazaar was, under the circumstances, an agreement to commit an offence punishable with rigorous imprisonment for two years at least, namely, the offence of criminal intimidation under s. 506, Indian Penal Code.

As regards the visit to Chaura Police Station, it may perhaps be necessary to distinguish between the intention of those who organised the movement and the purpose of the great mass of the crowd who gave their adhesion to the same. Lal Muhammad, Nazar Ali and those who were with them had used very exaggerated versions of the Sub-Inspector's violence towards the volunteers in order to get together the largest possible gathering of their supporters. They were taking them to Chaura for the avowed purpose of asking the Sub-Inspector why he beat volunteers. To the minds of the great majority of the crowd this expression, we have no doubt, carried very much the same significance as that conveyed by the corresponding English phrase in the historic rhyme, which tells how the Cornish men proposed "to know the reason why" Bishop Trilawny was being prosecuted by King James II. At the same time the purpose actually uppermost in the minds of those who organised this demonstration was to overawe the Police at Chaura into quiescence, before the crowd moved on the Mundera bazaar, in order that they might be certain of being able to work their will there without interference.

From every point of view the agreement come to amounted to criminal conspiracy. There has been much criticism before us, directed against the drafting of the conspiracy charge, and that criticism is not altogether without foundation. As we read the charge, the illegal acts which the accused are alleged to have agreed amongst themselves to do fall under two distinct heads:—

(a) to overawe the Police by force or show of force,

(b) to beat the Police, in consequence of what the Sub-Inspector and his subordinates had previously done at Mundera on the 1st of February.

The second part of the charge, as thus stated, is not sustainable, if only for the reason that when Sub-Inspector, Gupteshar Singh caned the accused, Bhagwan Ahir, he was not acting in the discharge of his duty. The first part of the charge is, in our opinion, borne out by the evidence. We have also expressed our opinion that the agreement come to as to what was to be done by the crowd when they reached Mundera amounted to criminal conspiracy, although that is not expressly set forth in the charge. As a matter of fact, although we are prepared technically to affirm the convictions recorded under s. 120-B, Indian Penal Code, except where we have arrived at the conclusion that in the case of a particular appellant the evidence is insufficient to support any of the charges, the question is to our minds one of little more than academic importance. What we really have to determine is whether Sub-Inspector Gupteshar Singh was warranted by law in the action which he took that afternoon at Chaura Police Station, and what was the common object of the crowd there assembled at least from the moment when they began to discharge volleys of missiles against the Police.

On the first point we have in substance already expressed our opinion. A statement has been made in evidence that, before calling upon the chaukidars to disperse the assembly in front of the thana gate, Sub-Inspector, Gupteshar Singh made some attempt to issue a formal command directing the assembly to disperse. It is likely enough that the unfortunate Sub-Inspector did try to strengthen his own position by formal compliance with the provisions of s. 127, Cr. P.C. It would have been no more than a formal compliance at most, and the evidence on point is not particularly convincing. We are, however, abundantly satisfied that, from the moment the crowd of volunteers left Dumri Khurd, right up to the time when they began to file past the gate of Chaura Police Station, they not merely constituted an unlawful assembly, but were conducting themselves throughout in such a manner as to show the firmest possible determination not to disperse if called upon to do so. The Sub-Inspector was, therefore, abundantly justified, under section 128, Cr. P. C., in attempting the dispersal of the crowd at the moment when he did so. If he failed in his duty at all, it was in not having done so sometime before. Arguments which have been addressed to us at the hearing of this appeal only serve to suggest the storm of criticism which the Sub-Inspector would have provoked if he had resolutely done his duty, as we conceive it, by barring the further advance of the crowd before they reached the southern boundary of the Police Station. In this connection we are bound to note the great stress laid in argument before us on the fact that the volunteers set forth on this expedition were, generally speaking, unarmed. We agree that the evidence justifies the conclusion that they did so, though we are not prepared to say that numbers of those who joined the crowd on the march were similarly unarmed. It may be matter for consideration also how far the flags mounted on staffs, carried in front of the crowd, were capable at need of being used as weapons. We do think, however, that those responsible for organising this movement did intend that the volunteers should advance on the Police Station without weapons and that, in the main, they succeeded in carrying out this purpose. This finding in no way conflicts with the findings we have recorded as to the unlawful character of the assembly. The crowd was formidable enough, without carrying weapons, to have overwhelmed any resistance offered by the small Police force, provided only they showed sufficient courage and resolution. If their resolution had failed them and they had scattered, after suffering a number of casualties from the muskets of the Police, the fact that they carried no weapons would no doubt have been used to support a story of the wanton massacre of peaceful demonstrators by the agents of a ruthless Government.

The immediate object of the assembly as it reached the Police Station was to threaten and to obstruct Sub-Inspector, Gupteshwar Singh and the Policemen with him in the discharge of their duty, an offence punishable under s. 152, Indian Penal Code, an object sufficient in itself, and apart from any of the other clauses of s. 141 of the same Code, to bring the matter within the purview of the third clause of the said section. We have, however, already indicated our opinion that a further and more dangerous purpose lurked behind. Shikari stated in his evidence that the resolution come to at Dumri was that, after asking the Sub-Inspector why he had beaten volunteers, they should beat him if his answer was unsatisfactory. The approver Thakur stated that the agreement they had come to was that if he (the Sub-Inspector) "beat us we should beat him." We are asked to disbelieve these statements on the strength of various arguments based, in part, upon a comparison of the evidence given by the approvers at the Sessions trial with previous statements which they had made in the Magistrate's Court, or elsewhere. This evidence, however, and particularly Thakur's version of the scheme as it presented itself to the minds of the volunteers, fits in too well with what actually occurred at Chaura for us to feel any doubt that these controverted statements are substantially true. The instructions which had come down to the volunteers from their superiors, by what channel we do not know, were that they were not to be the first to use violence; but that, if the Police used force, they were to be at liberty to retaliate in such manner as they might consider best and most effective. The evidence as a whole leaves no doubt whatever in our minds on this point. We know also that the objects which the volunteers had set before them for accomplishment, at Chaura first, and afterwards at Mundera, were such as must sooner or later provoke the most long suffering of Police Officers to the forcible use of his lawful authority against the lawless crowd.

An intention to assault the Police in certain eventualities was, therefore, part of the common object of the whole assembly of volunteers from the time they left Dumri. From the moment the whistles sounded and the crowd turned back and commenced their organised, and, to the extent which we have indicated, their premeditated, attack on the Police Station, the object of every member of the crowd was unquestionably to cause the utmost hurt in his power to any Policeman on whom he could succeed in laying hands. After the first effective volley had been fired, and when the crowd continued their attack and pressed it home in face of the casualties they had suffered, their object was, beyond possibility of doubt or contradiction, to do simply what they did, namely, to take life, in revenge for life. The crowd which stormed the Police Station and massacred the Policemen and chaukidars was the same crowd which had commenced the attack with volleys of missiles. The charge drawn up under s. 302/149, Indian Penal Code, is fully established as against any one of the accused persons who is proved by evidence to have continued an active participant in the riot after the moment when kankar began to be thrown, unless and until it can be inferred from credible evidence that he separated himself from the rest before the offence of murder had been committed by any one of them.

Passing on to consider the cases of individual appellants, we find it convenient to depart from the alphabetical order followed by the learned Sessions Judge. Up to certain point at any rate, it appears to us that we are able to obtain a clearer and more logical view of the effect of the evidence as a whole by grouping the accused persons together, as far as possible, under the head of the villages in which they reside. The prosecution believed that they had evidence in their possession to support the conclusion that contingents of volunteers from no less than sixty villages, situated within a radius of fifteen miles or so from Chaura Police Station, took part in the final encounter with the Police. The list of appellants now before us contains representatives from a large proportion of these villages; but considerable groups come from each of five or six particular localities which have consequently assumed a special importance in the history of the case. We propose to take up these groups first.

We begin with the village of Dumri Khurd, which was the rendezvous of the volunteers and from which the nucleus of 1,000 to 1,500 men set forth on their expedition to Chaura Police Station and Mundera bazaar. The learned Sessions Judge had before him no fewer than 31 accused persons from this village. He found the evidence against six of them insufficient to warrant a conviction—a fact which in itself suggests to our minds that the prosecution net had been spread a little too widely, so far as this village is concerned. One feature common to practically all the accused from this village is that they are implicated in the evidence given by the approver Shikari. The circumstances under which this man made his appearance in the witness-box are sufficiently set forth in the judgment under appeal. He proved himself an intelligent and even plausible witness. His statement, as we have been taken through it, reads convincingly. We have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge that Shikari did take that part in the events referred to in his evidence which he ascribed to himself, possibly even a somewhat more prominent part. In the main, as we have already stated, we are satisfied that the witness had made up his mind to earn his pardon honestly, by making a clean breast of the facts so far as known to him. At the same time we are entirely in agreement with the principle which the learned Sessions Judge has himself laid down, that this is not a case in which the Court would think of departing from the general rule of practice which requires some reliable corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice, before it will accept that evidence as sufficient proof of the guilt of a particular accused. In certain instances the learned Sessions Judge has himself found reason to suspect that Shikari may have stretched a point against particular neighbours of his, for the sake of gratifying an antecedent grudge. Apart from this, the man was obviously under a considerable temptation to introduce into his story the names of any of his own fellow villagers against whom he believed that the Investigating Police Officers were entertaining serious suspicions. His failure to do so might, according to the mentality of a person of his class, endanger his own pardon by creating a suspicion in the minds of the Police that he was endeavouring to shield neighbours of his own about whose doings he could not well profess ignorance. We have made these general remarks because, upon a review of the entire evidence against the Dumri men and a further sifting of that evidence, we have come to the conclusion that the doubts entertained by the learned Sessions Judge regarding the adequacy of the corroboration forthcoming against six of these men should have been extended to a considerably larger number.

We have now to consider the appropriate sentence to pass on each of those appellants in respect of whom we have affirmed the conviction on the capital charge, namely, that under s. 302/149 of the Indian Penal Code. The law allows us a certain discretion. We are empowered to confirm the sentence of death in each case which has been passed by the Trial Court; or we can set aside that sentence and substitute for it one of transportation for life. The exercise of this discretion is subject to the same condition by which the learned Sessions Judge felt himself to be bound. In every case of a conviction on a charge of murder the law regards sentence of death as the normal and appropriate punishment. Where the Court sees fit to pass the lesser sentence of transportation for life it must record its reasons for so doing.

We do not, however, agree with the learned Sessions Judge that it is impossible to formulate such reasons in respect of any of the appellants in this case whose conviction on the capital charge we have affirmed. We do not think it expedient to say too much on this point, for we, in no way, desire to extenuate the savage nature of the crime or to come forward as apologists for the lawlessness of the crowd. We take account nevertheless of the fact that this crime grew out of a political agitation. The appellants are in the main ignorant peasants; the great majority of them were drawn into the business by misrepresentations of fact and preposterous promises concerning the millennium of "Swaraj," the arrival of which was to be forwarded by courage and resolution on their part. Some indeed were apparently influenced by the belief that Mr. Gandhi was a worker of miracles. We cannot take leave of the case without an uneasy feeling that there are individuals at large at this moment, men who have not even been put on their trial in connection with this affair, whose moral responsibility for what took place at Chauri Police Station on the afternoon of February 4th, 1922, is at least equal to that which rests upon such men as Nazar Ali and Lal Muhammad, who acted as leaders openly, in the light of day, and at least placed their own lives on the hazard along with the rest.

These are sufficient reasons, in our opinion, to warrant the course we propose to take. We reserve the supreme penalty of the law for the ringleaders and for those against whom we find specific acts proved by the evidence such as would have bound us to convict them on a charge of murder, apart from the special provisions of s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code. As to these we find nothing which can in our view warrant any other sentence than that of death. Against the remainder we pass the only other sentence permissible to us by law, that of transportation for life.

We propose to go a step further than this. In respect of a considerable number of the men whom we are sentencing to transportation for life we have formed the opinion that their cases are fit to be considered with a view to the exercise of the clemency of the Crown.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS PETITION No 61 OF 1925.

November 3, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.
VISHWANATH PRASAD PANDE—

APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—NON-APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 526—Transfer of criminal case—Expression of opinion by Magistrate in another case about guilt of accused.

The fact that a Magistrate has expressed in another criminal case a distinct opinion about the guilt of the accused is a reasonable ground for the apprehension that he may not have a fair and impartial trial before the Magistrate and is, therefore, a good ground for transferring the case from his file. [p. 163, col. 1.]

Application for transfer of Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 41 of 1925 under s. 110 of the Cr. P. C. pending before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bhandara, to the file of some other Magistrate.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The present applicant desires a transfer of Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 41 of 1925 pending against him under s. 110 of the Cr. P. C., from the Court of Mr. G. L. Mukerji, First Class, Magistrate, Bhandara. The only ground in the transfer application, which seems to me to require serious notice, is the fact that in Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 18 of 1925 against Lochan and Chunbadia under the same s. (110) of the Cr. P. C. the same Magistrate expressed a distinct opinion at the end of his order that the present applicant was abetting the actions of these two men who are his servants.

It is urged that on this ground the applicant has reasonable cause of apprehension, that he will not meet with a fair or impartial trial. While I am far from supposing that the Magistrate would be likely to be unfair or non-impartial towards the present applicant, it is in the circumstances of this case, impossible, if one takes the point of view of the applicant, to hold that there is not reasonable ground for an apprehension of the kind he says he entertains.

The learned Standing Counsel on behalf of the Crown, in opposing the application has relied on the decisions in Rajan Kanta Dutta v. Emperor (1) and Emperor v. Har- gobind (2). The former decision so far as any general principle can be extracted from it, merely lays down that, in applying the doctrine of reasonable apprehension in the mind of an applicant like the present one, regard must be had to the circumstances of each particular case. The second decision is somewhat different. There two cross-cases arising out of a riot were pending in a single Magistrate's Court. Tudball, J., did not find it necessary to order the transfer of the second case, although the Magistrate had expressed an opinion in the previous case that the applicants in the second case were the aggressors. The learned Justice merely pointed out that it would be the duty of the Magistrate to act simply and solely on the evidence which was laid before him in the course of the second trial. A decision somewhat to the contrary effect is to be found in the case Rangasami Goundan v. Emperor (3).

Now, in the present instance, the fact remains that the Magistrate has, possibly quite rightly, expressed a distinct opinion in his order of 5th August 1925 that the present applicant was guilty of abetting Lochan and Chunbadia, his two servants, concerned therein. This seems to afford ample ground for a reasonable apprehension of the kind alluded to in s. 526 of the Cr. P. C., and it would appear to me also that, even from the point of view of the Crown itself, it is highly desirable that the present case should be disposed of by a Court in which there could not be the slightest ground for any allegation that there was any tinge of conscious or unconscious bias on the part of the Magistrate concerned. For these reasons, therefore, I order Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 41 of 1925 to be transferred from the Court of Mr. Mukerji, First Class Magistrate, Bhandara, to the Court of the District Magistrate, Bhandara, or to the Court of such other First Class Magistrate in the District as he may appoint to dispose of it.

June 5, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raouf.

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Practice—Dispute of Civil nature—Criminal proceedings.

Parties should not be encouraged to resort to the Criminal Courts in cases in which the point at issue between them is one which can more properly be decided by a Civil Court. In each case, however, it must be seen whether the issue as to title is raised bona fide or mala fide [p 164, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Magistrate, Ferozepore.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Abdul Aziz and Ata Jelani Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This petition for revision is the result of a dispute between the Municipal Committee of Zira and the petitioner with regard to a pond around which are certain number of trees. It was reported to the Municipality that some of those trees had dried up. Thereupon the Municipal Committee resolved to sell the timber of those trees. A notice was issued to the public inviting them to attend the sale which was to take place on the 18th of February 1925, at 10 A. M. The petitioner claims to be one of the proprietors of the pond and of the trees standing around that pond. He also claims that he has purchased the shares of some of the other co-proprietors under four sale-deeds. He asserted his right of ownership by openly cutting certain trees on the date and at the hour fixed for the sale by the Municipal Committee. Thereupon the Committee decided to prosecute the petitioner in the Criminal Court for the offence of theft. A certain amount of evidence was taken and the Magistrate framed a charge charging the petitioner of the offence of theft under s. 379, Indian Penal Code. Against the order framing the charge the present petition for revision has been preferred and it has been contended chiefly with reference to the ruling in Emperor v. Bishan Das (1) that the dispute between the parties being of a civil nature the Magistrate ought not to have framed the charge of theft against the petitioner and ought to have directed the parties to go to the Civil Court and seek a remedy there. The learned Judges who decided the case made some observations on this particular point, which is summed up in the head-note appended to the report of the case in the following words:—

"That it is a very sound general principle and one to be observed by all Magistrates that parties should not be encouraged to resort to the Criminal Courts in cases in which the point at issue between them is one which can more appropriately be decided by a Civil Court."

This ruling has been followed in various other cases in this Province, see, for example, Khushi Ram v. Emperor (2) and Iadha Shah v. Zaman Ali (3). There is a later case also, namely, Shib Das v. Emperor (4), which also lays down a similar rule. Of course in each case it is to be seen whether the issue as to title is raised bona fide or mala fide. It is premature for me to decide at this stage whether the petitioner and his co-owners are the proprietors of this bond and the trees or the Municipal Committee exercises right of ownership over them. But from what I have been able to see from the record I am not prepared to hold that the claim asserted by the petitioner is wholly without foundation. It is possible that he may not have a title which may be accepted in a Civil Court, but on the other hand it cannot be said in an off-hand manner that he was not exercising his right of ownership when he began to cut the trees on the date fixed by the Municipal Committee for the sale of these trees. Having regard to all the circumstances of this case I think the Magistrate would have exercised a better discretion if he had followed the instructions contained in Emperor v. Bishen Das (1) I, therefore, accept the petition and quash the charge framed by the learned Magistrate.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

- CRIMINAL REVISION No. 98 OF 1925.

August 13, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.
BAJIRAO—APPLICANT

versus

Musammam DADIBAI AND ANOTHER—

NON-APPLICANTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Possession of agent or servant, whether can be pleaded against principal or master.

The possession of an agent or a servant which is permissive cannot give a party to a proceeding under s. 145 a locus standi against his principal or master. The possession that can be pleaded in such a proceeding must be possession based on a claim of right to possession. [p. 165, col 2.]

Nrutta Gopal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh, 10 C. W. N. 1088; 4 Cr. L. J. 215, followed.

Application for revision of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Gondia, dated the 15th April 1925, in Criminal Case No. 30 of 1924.

Mr. M. V. Abhyankar, for the Applicant.

Messrs V. M. and Y. V. Jakatdar, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The facts of this case have been fully stated in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order. The present applicant Bajirao now come up in revision against the said order under which Musammam Kamabai and Dadibai were ordered to put in possession of the 9 sir fields in question in Mouza Gangla.

It cannot be denied that on 28th February 1924 Kondibai and Laxmanrao executed a deed of surrender in respect of the sir land in question in favour of the present applicant, and the said deed of surrender contained a condition that the applicant would enter into possession on 1st May 1924, that is in the beginning of the agricultural year 1924-25. In the previous proceeding under s. 145, Cr. P. C., the all important document is the compromise application of 16th August 1924. This compromise application was signed not only by Kondiba, Laxmanrao and Bajirao, but by Narayan for Musammam Kamabai as well. Objection had been taken to it, but as it forms part of a record which is clearly admissible as evidence of an admission by Kamabai that Bajirao had obtained possession not necessarily on 1st May 1924, but on some date before 16th August 1924, the date of the petition in question. It is Narayan's authority to make the admission which is now sought to be impugned on behalf of the non applicants, but it is noticeable from his evidence in the said proceedings that he was agent both for Laxmanrao and for Kamabai. The Magistrate, after examining three witnesses, including Kondiba, passed an order cancelling his preliminary one. Even the Magistrate found, vide para. 5 of the order now sought to be revised, that the dispute had been settled by the male members, viz, Kondiba and Laxmanrao, who were, in effect, the principals. On 30th October 1924, however, when Bajirao sent his ploughs to sow the rabi crops, he was obstructed by the non-applicants, vide Exs. P. 6 and P. 7. In consequence of the reports to the Police and their further enquiry a fresh preliminary order was passed on 16th December 1924.

The only vital question, therefore, for consideration is whether the present applicant was in possession on 16th December 1924, or within two months beforehand. The compromise petition, as a result of which the previous proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., were abortive, may or may not be attackable in the Civil Court, but must, for the purposes of the proceedings, obviously be assumed to be a genuine one, and it follows therefrom that the applicant was, on the non-applicant's own admission, in peaceable possession, at any rate, in August 1924. There has been no evidence of the non-applicants' possession between that date and 30th October 1924 when undoubtedly they obstructed the applicant in his attempt to sow the fields. Applicant's possession would prima facie appear to have been a lawful and proper one in pursuance of a deed of compromise containing the relevant admission as to possession, which had been duly filed in Court. The Magistrate has laid great stress on the question of who was in possession on 1st May 1924. But assuming that the non-applicants were in possession then, and assuming further that they had sown the kharif crop of that year, the position was entirely altered by the admission made in the deed of compromise, and on the material available it certainly seems to me that the presumption must be made that the applicant was in lawful possession within two months of the date of the preliminary order. The forcible obstruction of the applicant from sowing the rabi crop on 30th October 1924 occurred less than two months before the date of the preliminary order.

In dealing with the various reports, which have been made to the Police in connection with various episodes in this dispute, the Magistrate seems to have put an entirely wrong construction on the reports in question. Let us consider who the non-applicants are. They themselves practically admit that they are holding on behalf of Kondiba and Laxmanrao who are in reality their principals. The plea that they have some right to the land in respect of the claim for maintenance is not one which need be considered seriously in a summary proceeding like that we are concerned with. What the reports like e. g. Exs. P. 1 to P. 5 do show is that when Bajirao went, in pursuance apparently of a bona fide belief that he was entitled to the possession of the fields in question, to take steps for cultivating them or reaping the crops he was forcibly obstructed by the servants and partisans of the non-applicants. The Magistrate, for some reason or other, construes this mere act of resistance and obstruction as proof of the possession of the non-applicants. I am wholly unable to endorse such an interpretation of these documents. What all these documents as well as the later reports (Exs. P. 8 to P. 10) do show is that the non-applicants were attempting to obstruct the applicant in taking effective measures to cultivate the land in question. The position of the non-applicants, in effect, amounts to this that they were attempting to obtain or hold possession of the property against their principals. Musammam Kamabai in her evidence frankly admits that she was merely managing the property on behalf of the two principals Kondiba and Laxmanrao. At the very best, therefore, the only plea, which can be put forward in favour of the possession of the non-applicants, is that their possession was merely on behalf of their principals.

I fully concur with the view laid down in Nritta Gopal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (1), that the possession of an agent or a servant which is permissive cannot give a party to a proceeding a locus standi as against his principal or master. The possession that can be pleaded in a proceeding under s. 145, Cr. P. C., must be possession based on a claim of right to possession. From this point of view the position of the non-applicants is an absolutely untenable one. They, at the most, have a right to challenge the surrender of the sir fields in the Civil Court, but their attempt to claim possession in their own names, on the face of it, an improper and erroneous one in the circumstances of the present case. There may, of course, be reason for supposing that the present non-applicants are merely taking up the position they do as the result of a fraudulent and collusive conspiracy with Kondiba and Laxmanrao, but with this aspect of the case I am not at present concerned. Clearly, to my mind, in the present case the presumption must be drawn that Bajirao was put in effective possession by the surrendering tenants on some date prior to 16th August 1924 and remained in such possession, at any rate, until 30th October 1924 when the non-applicants prevented him from pursuing the cultivation of the fields in question.

I am wholly unable to understand the Magistrate's finding in para. 13 of his judgment to the effect that he had grave doubts about the deed of compromise. If by this he meant that there may be a chance of successfully contesting the said compromise in the Civil Court, he may have been correct in this statement, but if, on the other hand, he meant that he was not, for the purposes of determining the question of possession, to assume that the admissions made in the deed of compromise as to the applicant's possession were actually made, then clearly he was not entitled to put such a construction on the said transaction in dealing with the present proceeding.

It is no part of my duty in the present proceeding to determine whether the compromise was, as Kamabai alleges, made "behind her back" or not. We can only deal with the actual facts as to possession on the evidence available, and the circumstances, under which the previous s. 145 proceedings were brought to an end, formed themselves the strongest and most irrefutable proof that the applicant was in possession within two months of the preliminary order we are concerned with. Undoubtedly it is true that the Police reports on the record show that the non-applicants were diligent in obstructing, in every possible manner and for the most part in illegal fashion, the applicant from effectively carrying on the cultivation of the fields in question, but this fact of itself does not necessarily predicate that the possession was with the non-applicants. On the contrary, all the circumstances go to show that the non-applicants, no doubt owing to a belief that they had a genuine grievance were all through attempting to dispute and render ineffective by forcible and illegal action the surrender which had duly been made in favour of the present applicant by Kondiba and Laxmanrao.

The argument, which has been advanced on behalf of the applicant to the effect that if there had been a real compromise in August 1924, they would not have obstructed the applicant in October, hardly requires serious discussion. Very obviously various possibilities remain in this connection. It may be that the non-applicants have been put up by Kamabai and Laxmanrao to render their surrender abortive or ineffective, or again it may be that the non-applicants have taken up the position they have of their own accord. It is, however, impossible and unnecessary to decide these questions in the present case. It is, in my opinion, clear, even on the case of the non-applicants themselves, that the applicant was in possession within two months of the date of the preliminary order. He is in possession prima facie under a good and legal title acquired, not only on the basis of the surrender but on the admissions made in the deed of compromise, and it seems to me that from this point of view his possession must be in the meantime confirmed.

The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, dated 15th April 1925, is accordingly reversed and instead I order Bajirao, the applicant, to be put in possession of the sir fields Nos. 116, 118, 120, 129, 130, 139, 140, 141 and 144, total area 52.40 acres, situate in Mauza Gangla, until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and I further forbid the non-applicants, Musammam Dadibai and Kamabai, to create any disturbance of such possession until such eviction.

G. R. D.

Order accordingly.

Where it is shown that at an identification parade witnesses picked out certain men as having taken part in a riot, but did not state to the officer who conducted the parade what part each man had taken in the riot, the officer's evidence that he had told the witnesses to pick out the persons present in the riot, is quite sufficient and it is not necessary that he should have examined the witnesses as to the part played by each individual [ibid].

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Sialkot, dated the 18th December 1924.

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Appellants.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—(May 6, 1925).—The appeals of Ganda Singh son of Khushal Singh and Bhan Singh are accepted and it is ordered that they be set at liberty.

JUDGMENT.—(May 15, 1925).—A very serious riot took place on the 12th April 1924 at village Mahar in the Sialkot District in which three men Maula Dad, Imam Din and Nawabson of Umra were killed and four men: Umar Din, Hussain Bakhsh, Nawab son of Bulanda and Bakha were injured: Hussain Bakhsh having two fingers cut off and having lost in consequence the use of both hands. Twenty men were sent up for trial of whom four were discharged by the Committing Magistrate, eight were convicted by the Sessions Judge and eight were acquitted. It is also said that four absconders took part in the riot. Of the men convicted six, Partap Singh, Kartar Singh, Ajab Singh, Ganda Singh son of Jiwan Singh, Amar Singh and Ganda Singh son of Khushal Singh have been sentenced to death, Sharam Singh son of Hawind Singh and Bhan Singh son of Atar Singh have been sentenced to transportation for life. All have appealed and the case is also before us for consideration of the question of the confirmation of the death sentences.

After hearing the arguments addressed to us by the learned Counsel for the accused and the Crown we accepted the appeals of Bhan Singh son of Atar Singh and Ganda Singh son of Khushal Singh finding that the evidence was not sufficient to justify their conviction. After further consideration we have come to the conclusion that although there is a considerable amount of evidence against Sharm Singh and Amar Singh there is a certain element of doubt in their cases also.

In the case of Sharm Singh, Hussain Bakhsh the most important witness, did not identify him at the parade held in Jail though he, subsequently, picked him out in Court, and although he was identified by Nawabson of Bulanda and Bakha, the remaining evidence against him is not sufficient to establish beyond all possibility of doubt that he actually took part in the riot.

The case of Amar Singh is similar: he also was not identified by Hussain Bakhsh in gaol nor by Ahmad Din, and the remaining evidence in his case also is not conclusive.

We acquit both these men.

The facts are that a large "bhanga" party consisting of some 20 men armed with chhavis, gandas and lathis and headed, it is said, by Sohan Singh Zaildar, who has not been sent up for trial came from the village Bhula to village Mahar. They marched to the house of Maula Dad deceased, where he was sitting with Ahmad Din and Hussain Bakhsh his brothers and Imam Din his cousin. They deliberately picked a quarrel and attacked Hussain Bakhsh first and then assaulted the others and killed and injured them.

The medical evidence shows that Maula Dad who was killed had four incised wounds on his head and six others on his body: Imam Din had two incised wounds on the head and twelve blows from a lathi and was so seriously injured that he could not be carried to the hospital. Nawab son of Umra had three injuries, his leg having been cut right through, his forearm broken and his head fractured. Ahmad Din had 8 injuries, Nawab 13 and Bakha 4. Two of the accused Partab Singh and Kartar Singh were found in jail to have been injured, Kartar Singh having an incised wound on the back of the head and Partap Singh 4 injuries caused by a blunt weapon. Both Counsel for the accused and Counsel for the Crown rely on the fact of these two men having been injured, the latter pointing out that the medical evidence shows that the injuries must have been inflicted at or about the time of the riot and that no satisfactory explanation has been given as to how they were caused, the former urging that there must have been a general melee and that it is only fair to presume that it was the members of the village Mahar who began the quarrel.

We will first deal with the general criticisms which have been made on the evidence produced by the prosecution and will then deal with the case of each accused.

The first point and one to which due importance must be attached is that the leader of the bhangra party is said to have been Sohan Singh Zaildar, who has not been sent up for trial, and Counsel urges with considerable force that it was presumably found in the course of the investigation that he had been falsely implicated because of his prominent position and that this fact must be taken as discrediting the whole of the evidence for the prosecution. We have given due weight to this contention and have treated the evidence with extreme caution throughout.

In addition to the eye-witnesses who have given evidence in Court certain statements were recorded with a view to their being used as dying declarations. These were the statements of Hussain Baksh, Ahmad Din, and Nawab son of Umra. Of these only Nawab son of Umra died and it is only his statement which can be treated or considered as dying declaration. This was recorded by Muhammad Bashir Head Constable, who certified in Court that he had recorded it correctly and that Nawab was in his senses at the time. Counsel contends that inasmuch as Muhammad Bashir did not repeat in his own words what Nawab said to him this statement is inadmissible. In Ghazi v. Emperor (1) and Abdül Jalil v. Empress (2) it was laid down that such statement must be proved and this would appear to show that if proved they are admissible. We also find that it has been clearly laid down in Emperor v. Balaram Das (3) that such a statement is admissible in proof of its own contents and it is unnecessary that the person who recorded it should repeat exactly what was said. In ss. 159 and 160 of the Evidence Act a distinction is drawn between the manner in which a witness may refresh his memory by referring to the writing he has made and the testimony which he can give of facts stated in the document. If it is merely a question of a man refreshing his memory the document itself is not tendered in evidence, and the witness merely gives evidence in the ordinary way after reading what he had written. Section 160 deals with the case where in spite of writing a document the witness has not got specific recollection of the facts therein recorded but is sure that they were correctly recorded. Where this is the case the witness is still entitled to testify to the facts and the document itself is then tendered in evidence. This is what happens in cases such as these and the fact that the witness does not say in so many words that he does not recollect exactly what the witness said, which he naturally cannot do, does not affect admissibility of the evidence which he gives. Following Emperor v. Balaram Das (3) we find that this evidence is certainly admissible and we take the same view as was taken in Amir Zaman v. Emperor (4).

The next point on which the Counsel has laid stress is the evidence of identification dealing with the two parades, which were held at village Kalswala and in Jail. At the first of these parades accused Nos. 1—6 were not present, the obvious reason being as found by the learned Sessions Judge, with whom we agree, that it was considered unnecessary to include them in this first parade as they and their names were already known and the parade was not conducted with a view to see which men out of those, who were arrested, could be identified by the witnesses but to see which men out of a large number of over 250 the witnesses could pick out as having taken part in the riot. The criticism amounts to this that the witnesses themselves do not in all cases repeat in Court that they picked out certain men, that the evidence on the subject consists of the statements of officers who conducted the parade and who tell us what happened. This, Counsel urges, is secondary or corroborative and not primary evidence and, therefore, by itself has no value. Relying on the same ruling which we have quoted above we find that this evidence is admissible.

A further criticism is that the witnesses are not stated to have told the officer who conducted the parade what part each man took in the riot. This, in our opinion, is unnecessary. It has to be shown that the witnesses knew what they were doing and understood that they were identifying the men who took part in the riot, and this has, in our opinion, been shown to have happened. Sardar Hazara Singh Tahsildar says that he told them to pick out the persons present in the riot. This evidence is quite sufficient and it was unnecessary for him to record at the time or to examine the witnesses as to the part played by each individual. The facts are not the same as those of Lal Singh v. Emperor (5) on which Counsel relies for there the notes were merely referred to and nothing more and the necessary facts were not established.

The fourth general criticism is that Hussain Bakhsh the man who was seriously injured and who made the First Information Report has given a different statement in Court in the sense that he says that he was so seriously injured that he lost consciousness and did not see all that is contained in First Information Report. This is not of any great importance and we are satisfied that he did not see exactly what part each of the rioters played and that at the time he made his First Information Report he was not able to name all the persons who took part.

We now turn to the cases of the individual accused.

[After discussing evidence against each accused their Lordships concluded:—]

There can, in our opinion, be no question as to sentences and we confirm all the four sentences of death.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 297.—Jury trial—Charge—Omission to read material evidence—Omission to explain accused's right to benefit of doubt—Trial, whether vitiated.

An objection that in . . . 's charge to the Jury the Sessions Judge . . . material portions of the evidence is not in itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the Jury. In each case it must be a question whether the omission to read the material portion of the evidence was such as to mislead the Jury and the Court of Appeal will not interfere if it has not prejudiced the accused. The omission to tell the Jury that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt is not a misdirection vitiating the trial, though as a matter of practice it is as well to always end the charge with these words. [p. 170, col. 2]

Mr. V. N. Herlekar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been convicted by the unanimous verdict of the Jury of rape and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 by the Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur.

It is contended that the charge is vitiated because the Sessions Judge has not laid the evidence before the Jury and that he misdirected them in certain particulars which are given in the grounds of appeal.

I have read the charge several times and have also read the whole of the evidence. It is to be noted that the evidence is not very lengthy, the witnesses on whom the case depends being the complainant (P. W. No. 1), Ram Narain, (P. W. No. 2), Nathulal, (P. W. No. 7) and the two constables. The learned Pleader for the appellant has referred to some old cases which lay down that the whole of the evidence must be read out to the Jury. That is not the law now. An objection that in delivering his charge to the Jury the Sessions Judge did not read material portions of the evidence is not in itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the Jury. In each case it must be a question whether the omission to read the material portion of the evidence was such as to mislead the Jury and the Court of Appeal will not interfere, if it has not prejudiced the accused. Emperor v. Appunna Devappa (1) and Empress v. Rachia Mahato (2)

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has referred in para. 6 of his charge to the evidence that the present appellant was inside the room with the other two accused at the time the girl was heard crying out, and that one man left the room after P. W. No. 2 went to call the Police. In para. 5, the Judge has called the Jury's attention to the discrepancies in the evidence pointed out by the Pleader for the accused, and asked them whether they are such as to lead to a reasonable conclusion that the statements are not substantially true.

I am, therefore, of opinion, that the Judge put the case fairly before the Jury, though perhaps not so fully as he might have done.

Objection is taken to certain statements made by the Judge in his charge. They are marked (a), (1) in the memorandum of appeal.

Statement (a) regarding the First Information Report is perfectly unobjectionable. Statement (b) is a statement of evidence appearing on the record. So is statement (c). The fact that this statement was made in cross-examination, not in examination-in-chief, was not brought to the notice of the Jury, but as the arguments for the defence had been heard that day and the evidence was fresh in the minds of the Jury this is not a sufficient ground for interference with the verdict.

Statement (d) is not only not a misdirection but a statement which the Judge was bound to make to the Jury. It was his duty to ask the Jury to consider, whether if the girl was ravished by two men, the man other than Sarjerao was the present accused. I do not understand how this can be made a ground of appeal.

Statement (e) consists of two parts. The first is a statement of a well-known fact and the Jury was asked to consider the medical evidence in the light of that fact.

The second portion is a statement of a fact appearing in the evidence of Shaikh Juman, constable, (P. W. No. 9). The Judge drew the attention of the Jury to the fact that the bundle of cotton on which the girl is alleged to have been lying was not produced, and to the question whether the girl's ludga was under her person at the time of the commission of the offence.

The last statement is that lawyers usually describe such evidence as has been given in this case as overwhelming evidence against the accused. It would have been perhaps better if the Sessions Judge had not expressed his opinion of the evidence in so forcible a manner, but in the very next sentence he invites the Jury to find their own opinion on the facts as to which evidence has been given.

The omission to tell the Jury that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt is not a misdirection vitiating the trial, though, as a matter of practice, it is as well to always end the charge with these words.

After considering all the statements to which exception has been taken, I do not think there was any misdirection requiring the interference of this Court. The sentence, though severe, is not out of proportion to the heinous nature of the offence in this particular case, which was of a peculiarly revolting character, the girl being confined in a room in a serai and ravished by two men in succession while the chaukidar of the serai stood by with a cane threatening to beat her if she cried for help.

The appeal is consequently dismissed without notice to the Crown.

The defect of the absence of a certificate is not curable by the subsequent production of the certificate. [ibid.]

Case reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Gujranwala at Sialkot, with his No. 55-J of 22nd February 1924.

FACTS appear from the following report of the Additional Sessions Judge:—The accused on being charged under s. 363, Indian Penal Code, by Chaudhri Muhammad Ismail Khan, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the Gujranwala District, were committed to this Court by order, dated 9th of January 1924, to stand their trial in this Court on the said charge.

Both Ram Charan and Musammat Gopi are Native Indian subjects of His Majesty; they are charged with having kidnapped the two minors from Jatauli Kadim which is situate within the Bharatpur State which is without the limits of British India as that term is defined in the General Clauses Act, X of 1897. An offence under s. 363, Indian Penal Code, is not a continuing one, and, therefore, the offence, if committed, was committed in Jatauli in the Bharatpur State. Under s. 188 of the Cr. P. C. the accused Ram Charan and Musammat Gopi as Native Indian subjects of His Majesty having, it is alleged, committed an offence without the limits of British India, viz., in the Bharatpur State, may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed in the place where the accused are found. The accused Ram Charan was "found" in the Bulandshahr Jail where he was and is serving a term of rigorous imprisonment in December 1922.

Musammat Gopi was "found" and arrested on the alleged charge in Aligarh in November or December 1922. In short both the accused were found in British India but outside the Punjab in the United Provinces, and could have been dealt with in that Province only. But a condition precedent to this dealing with the said accused is laid down by the proviso to the said section, and this prohibits any inquiry into the said charge of the offence of kidnapping without a certificate from the Political Agent of Bharatpur State that the charges are to be enquired into in British India. The record of the case does not show that any such certificate has been obtained, and a reply received to the enquiry sent to the District Magistrate, Gujranwala, confirms this. Therefore, the Magistrate at Gujranwala had no jurisdiction to enquire into the said charge for the following reasons:—

The offence was committed in the Bharatpur State and is only triable at the place where the accused are "found," i. e., either in the Bulandshahr or Aligarh Districts as may be determined by the Allahabad High Court on a certificate given by the Political Agent of the Bharatpur State as required by s. 188 of the Cr. P. C. The provisions of sub-s. (4) of s. 181, Cr. P. C., cannot be invoked on the ground that the minors were conveyed, concealed or detained in the Gujranwala District as, in my opinion, this sub-section does not apply to any offence under s. 363, Indian Penal Code, and, secondly, the sub-section only provides an alternative venue when the offence is committed in British India. Section 183 completely ousts any jurisdiction exercisable under sub-s. (4) when the offence is committed outside British India.

The authorities dealing with the application of s. 188 are:—Shamir Khan v. Empress (1), Roda v. Empress (2) and Queen-Empress v. Mastana (3).

The one applicable to the present case is Queen-Empress v. Mastana (3), as the defect has not only been noticed by this Court, but attention has also been drawn to it by the learned Public Prosecutor.

In the other two cases cited objection was never taken to the want of jurisdiction, and it was, therefore, held that this only amounted to an irregularity and was cured by the provisions of s. 537 of Cr. P. C.

For the above reasons and following Queen Empress v. Mastana (3) I am of opinion that the accused Ram Charan and Musammat Gopi have not been validly committed to this Court, and I submit the record for the orders of the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the commitment be quashed under s. 215, Cr. P. C.

The other two cases under ss. 420 and 368, Indian Penal Code, have been tried at the Sessions held on the 18th and 19th February 1924. No conflicting findings can possibly result from this course, and it was really unnecessary to have committed the two cases under ss. 363 and 368.

(1) 35 P. R. 1883 Cr.

(2) 30 P. R. 1889 Cr.

Mr Jai Lal, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The accused persons are neither present nor represented before me, and I express no opinion upon the suggestions of the learned Sessions Judge that s. 181 (4), Cr. P. C., does not apply to any offence under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code and that s. 188 completely ousts any jurisdiction exerciseable under s. 181 (4) when the offence is committed outside British India. On the question whether the commitment must be set aside, because the Committing Magistrate has held an enquiry without a certificate of the Political Agent obtained under s. 188, the ruling of the Chief Court reported as Queen-Empress v. Mastana (3) appears to me to be conclusive. The learned Government Advocate, who has appeared, at first contended on the strength of the last few words of the judgment that in that case a specific objection to the commitment proceedings had been raised on behalf of the accused and he was disposed to argue that on the analogy of Shahmir Khan v. Empress (1) which was affirmed by a Full Bench in Fateh Din v. Emperor (4) the defect of the absence of a certificate would be curable by the subsequent production of a certificate for which he was prepared to arrange. The referring order, however, of Mr Justice Maude in Queen-Empress v. Mastana (3), makes it clear that the objection to the legality of the commitment order was raised by the Sessions Judge only and not by any of the accused. The case, therefore, was exactly parallel with the present case, and the two rulings approved in the decision, namely, Queen-Empress v. Katharperumal (5) and Queen-Empress v. Ram Sundar (6) held definitely that in such circumstances as the present the enquiry held by the Magistrate and the commitment order were wholly void.

Acting under s. 215, Cr. P. C., I quash the commitment.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 413 OF 1923.
December 20, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Adami and Mr. Justice Foster.

UTTAM SINGH—PETITIONER

versus

JUDHAN RAI—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Dispute concerning immoveable property—Arbitration, reference to, validity of—Award concerning future possession, whether can be taken into consideration—Order relating to property not referred to in preliminary order, validity of.

Under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. it is for the Court to consider which of the parties was in possession of the property in dispute at the date of the proceedings or, in some cases, within two months previous to the date of the proceedings. The scheme of the enquiry is retrospective and not prospective. There might be certain circumstances in which the parties may agree that the Court should refer the matter in dispute to arbitration for the purpose of deciding the question as to who was in actual possession at the time of the proceedings, but the question as to future possession in such a proceeding cannot be referred to arbitration. The law does not allow delegation of the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 145 to arbitrators. The utmost that the Code allows in a proceeding under s. 145 is that the Court may direct a local enquiry and bring the enquiry report on the record as evidence. [p. 173, cols. 1 & 2.]

If, however, the Magistrate has before him clear and undeniable evidence that there is no further likelihood of the breach of peace and that the parties have come to a settlement of their dispute, the Magistrate must drop the proceedings. In such a case a compromise between the parties may be taken by the Magistrate as evidence for an order to be passed under cl. (5) of s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., but the compromise cannot possibly be made the basis of an order under cl. 6 of the section. [p. 173, col 2.]

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. in respect of property which was not referred to in the initiatory proceedings. [ibid.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Sitamarhi, dated the 15th February 1923.

FACTS.—In a proceeding under s. 145, Cr. P. C., after the parties had filed their written statements, it was agreed that the matter should be referred to arbitration. The award, which related to future possession of the parties, was accepted by the Court and the dispute decided accordingly.

Mr. Bhagwan Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Foster, J.—[After stating the facts, his Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

The main question with which this revision is concerned is whether a reference to arbitration, such as was made in this case, can be made the basis of an order under s. 145. It appears to me that the scheme of the section is against such a proposition. As the wording of the section goes, it is for the Court to consider who was in possession at the date of the proceedings or (in some cases) within two months previous to the date of the proceedings. So the scheme of the enquiry is retrospective and not prospective. There might conceivably be certain instances in which the parties have agreed that the Court should refer the matter in dispute to arbitration for the purpose of deciding the question as to who is in actual possession at the time of the proceedings. Apparently such a procedure has not been condemned. In the case of Taramani Chaudhurani v. Gyanendra Mohan Chaudhuri (1) the question put to the arbitrators was: who was in possession of the land in dispute? As regards the case of Haldhar Singh v. Bulaki Singh (2) which has been quoted by the opposite party, I am unable to find from the report of that case whether the arbitrators' report was as to actual possession at the moment or as to future possession under their award. In the present case it is obvious that this distinction is important, because in the order of the 15th February 1923, the Sub-Divisional Officer states that the lands "will be divided amongst the parties." So the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer on the arbitration award was prospective and not retrospective. This appears to me to be an impossible foundation for the formal order which, in the Cr. P. C., which was in force before the 1st of September, 1923, was formulated in Sch. V (XXII). In that formal order the Magistrate certifies that he is satisfied without reference to the merits of the claim of either of the said parties to the legal right of possession that the claim of actual possession by one of the said parties is true.

There are decided cases in which the delegation of the jurisdiction of the Court, under s. 145, to arbitrators has been condemned. In the case of Banwari Lal Mukerjee v. Hriday Chakravarti (3) this procedure was condemned on the ground that the law does not allow delegation. The utmost that the Code allows in a proceeding under s. 145 is that the Court may direct a local enquiry and bring the enquiry report on the record as evidence. In the case Hamidul Huque v. Sheikh Atait Hussain (4) the procedure was also condemned on the ground that it was not in accordance with the specific directions given in s. 145. An analogous case to this, bearing out the same principle, is to be found in case of Sadhu Biswas v. Mahammad Ali Biswas (5), where a compromise was filed in a proceeding under s. 145. The importance of this last quoted ruling is that it has some bearing on the next matter which I propose to discuss; that if the Magistrate has before him clear and undeniable evidence that there is no more likelihood of a breach of the peace and that the parties have come to a settlement of their disputes, it is obvious that the Magistrate must drop the proceedings. In this last case it has been laid down that a compromise can only be taken by the Magistrate as evidence for an order to be passed under cl. (5) of s. 145 and cannot possibly be made the basis of an order passed under cl. (6). That decision appears to me to govern any case in which an arbitration award is before the Court and where that arbitration refers not to existing and past possession but to future possession after division of the property or alteration of the existing conditions.

There is only one point remaining. It is admitted by the opposite party that the proceedings were initiated in respect of 39 bighas and odd and that the final order that purports to have been passed under s. 145 has reference to 82 bighas. It is obvious that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass such order in respect of land which was not referred to in the initiatory proceedings.

For these reasons I would set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer on the ground that it is an order which he had no legal authority to pass.

Adami, J.—I agree.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Statement made to Police, whether admissible—Map containing hearsay matter, whether admissible.*

In the course of a Sessions trial the Investigating Sub-Inspector of Police, when examined as a prosecution witness, was asked whether he had during the trial examined any witnesses on behalf of the accused. He stated that he had examined certain witnesses but that they had denied their presence at the occurrence. One of the persons named by the Sub-Inspector had been summoned by the accused as a defence witness.

Held, that the statement of the Sub-Inspector was not admissible in evidence having regard to the provisions of s. 162 of the Cr. P. C. [p. 175, col. 1]

A person who makes a map in a criminal case ought not to put upon it anything more than what he sees himself. Particulars derived from witnesses examined on the spot should not be noted on the body of the map but on a separate sheet of paper annexed to the map as an index thereto. [ibid.]

Such particulars are hearsay evidence and are not admissible. Where the map is prepared by a Police Officer, such particulars are also inadmissible under s. 162 of the Cr. P. C. [ibid.]

Mr. Khondkar (Deputy Legal Remembrancer), for the Crown.

Babu Khironde Lal Sen, for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal is by Bhagirathi Chowdhury and four others who have been convicted in accordance with the majority verdict of the Jury by the Sessions Judge of Rajshahi. The first accused has been convicted under ss. 147 and 325, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced under s. 325 to five years' rigorous imprisonment, no separate sentence having been passed under s. 147. The other four accused persons have been convicted under ss. 325/149, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

The riot alleged to have taken place was over a piece of land, in course of which, it is said, one Mir Panchu was beaten to death.

Several objections have been taken on behalf of the accused to the address by the Judge to the Jury; but it is sufficient to refer to two of these, as in our opinion, the others are not important.

The first objection is that certain statements have been admitted by the learned Sessions Judge which are inadmissible in evidence. In the course of the examination of Ananta Prosad Das (Sub Inspector of Police) he was asked in examination-in-chief whether he examined during the course of the investigation any witness on behalf of the accused and he said that he had examined only two witnesses Bartu Chowdhury and Daulot Ghose who were produced before him and both of them stated that they were not present at the occurrence. This, it is said, is in contravention of the provisions of s. 162, Cr. P. C. That section says that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation . . . shall be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial . . . It is not clear why the witness was made to make this statement; but it is suggested that one of the persons named by him at least, namely, Daulot Ghose, was a witness, cited by the defence and, therefore, in anticipation of the evidence which might be given by Daulot Ghose, this statement was made by the Inspector. In my opinion this statement by the Sub-Inspector is not admissible. Section 162, Cr. P. C., is clear enough to exclude any statement made by any person and directs that such statement shall not be used for any purpose. The way in which this evidence has been brought out is objectionable in more ways than one. It is in direct contravention of the above provision of law and it is not justified by any other provision of law which makes evidence contradicting possible evidence of a possible witness admissible against the accused. The mere fact that one of the persons so named by the Sub-Inspector was cited by the defence did not justify the prosecution in getting out a statement made by him in anticipation of what he might say. This statement by the Sub-Inspector in the hearing of the Jury must have apparently prejudiced the case for the defence and left an impression in the mind of the Jury that the accused produced witnesses in support of their case before the Sub-Inspector and both of them denied any knowledge of the occurrence. This statement is not, therefore, admissible.

The second ground on which the legality of the trial is assailed is that the map prepared by the Sub-Inspector and placed before the Jury contains statements of witnesses and hence the map should not have been placed before the Jury with those statements thereon. There are two very important endorsements on the map. The first is against the point marked with an arrow and runs thus: "The deceased and Luddi Sheikh Peadas stood here and the deceased received lathi blow from Bhagirathi chowkidar accused while standing here." In another part of the map certain dotted lines were put and the remark against them is, "showing the route taken by the deceased on being chased by the accused persons." These statements were not of the Sub-Inspector from his personal knowledge but from what he had heard from other people at the time of the investigation. Such statements are, therefore, inadmissible under s. 162, Cr. P. C., and as hearsay evidence. The impropriety of placing maps before the Jury containing statements of witnesses or of information received by the person preparing the map from other persons has been recently pointed out in several cases. In Emperor v. Abinash Chandra Bose (1), the learned Chief Justice has fully dealt with this matter and it has been laid down that "a person who makes a map in a criminal case ought not to put upon it anything more than what he sees himself. Particulars derived from witnesses examined on the spot should not be noted on the body of the map but on a separate sheet of paper annexed to the map as an index thereto." The direction given here may be inconvenient but the law seems to be clear. The learned Chief Justice in a very recent case to which my learned brother was party [Emperor v. Mofizel Peada (2)] decided on the 1st May 1925) referred to a map like the one in the present case and remarked that the map placed before the Jury was a clear instance of what should not be done, and observed as follows:—"In my judgment, the map in its present state ought not to have been allowed to be placed before the Jury. If it was necessary for the map to be placed before the Jury, the proper thing to be done was to have a clean copy made with these entries omitted so that the Jury would have a map before them which would not have prejudiced their mind in any way." In my judgment apart from the instruction in the Police Regulations and the High Court Circular Orders, it is highly prejudicial in the interest of justice to allow statements which may or may not be admissible in evidence to be introduced in a case by indirect means. For instance, the map prepared by the Sub-Inspector from certain information received from another person introduces a statement made by that person and it is possible that the person who gave the information to the Sub-Inspector was not himself competent to make the statement his information having been derived from others not before the Court. Apart from s. 162, Cr. P. C., such statements under the general law ought not to be made to go in in the shape of entries in maps. The trial accordingly has been vitiated by the introduction of these pieces of evidence and, in my opinion, the conviction cannot stand.

In the result the conviction of and the sentences passed upon the appellants should be set aside and a re-trial ordered. The appellants Nos. 2 to 5 will remain on bail and the appellant No. 1 in custody until further orders by the Magistrate.

Panton, J.—I agree.

Criminal trial—Practice—Conviction, whether can be based on interested and contradictory evidence.

It is not safe to base the conviction of an accused person on the evidence of interested witnesses who were not mentioned in the First Information Report as eye-witnesses of the occurrence and whose evidence is contradicted by other witnesses produced on behalf of the prosecution. [p. 176, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate First Class, exercising enhanced powers under s. 30, Cr. P. C., Ferozepur, dated the 7th February 1925.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. H. Cardon Noad, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Pali, Chanan and Sarwan, sons of Nikka Jat, have been convicted

(1) 84 Ind. Cas. 651; 52 C. 172; 23 C. W. N. 995; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 1029; 26 Cr. L. J. 350.

(2) 89 Ind. Cas. 242; 29 C. W. N. 842; (1925) A. I. R. (C.) 909; 26 Cr. L. J. 1298.

ed, the first named under s. 324/109 and the last two under s. 304, Part II of the Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to one and six years' rigorous imprisonment respectively. They have all appealed to this Court and I have heard Dr. Nand Lal on their behalf and the Assistant Legal Remembrancer on behalf of the Crown.

The case for the prosecution is that Nikka father of the convicts owed some money to one Kishen Singh on a number of deeds. On the 13th of November 1924 he consolidated all the previous loans into one and effected a mortgage of his property in favour of Kishen Singh and had the mortgage attested before the Naib-Tahsildar. The former mortgage deeds had to be returned to the Naib-Tahsildar and the Naib-Tahsildar ordered Ram Rattan a Patwari to arrange for the return of the deeds. On the 14th of December the parties came to the Patwari, but there was some difference of opinion as to the manner in which the former deeds had to be dealt with. The result was that the parties quarrelled and the quarrel between the parties led to the Patwari being abused by the relations of Nikka. The Patwari left the place on a pony in order to report the matter to the Naib-Tahsildar who was encamping in a village a few miles away. During the absence of the Patwari his brother Durga Das passed in front of the house of Nikka and told the three appellants that his brother had gone to make a report to the Naib-Tahsildar and that they would be ruined. On this all three appellants are alleged to have come out of their house armed with dangs. Sarwan and Chanan beat him. Durga Das fell down. Pali was going to strike him but on the bye-standers asking him to desist and finding that Durga Das had fallen on the ground he did not actually strike him. Information was immediately conveyed to the Patwari of this incident. He came back soon after the assault. The deceased died as a result of the injuries received the next morning.

Sarwan Singh admits his presence, but says that he was abused by the deceased who along with another person attacked him. He is unable to explain how the deceased received these injuries. He denies the presence of his two brothers. Pali and Chanan both deny their presence at the fight.

The First Information Report was made by the Patwari Ram Rattan, who has appeared as P. W. No. 1. This report was made after the death of the deceased, and, therefore, at a time when the informant had presumably ascertained the full facts of the incident. There two Nathus and a Pohnu were mentioned as eye-witnesses. At the trial Amin Chand, Sucha Singh and Pohnu were produced as eye-witnesses. Pohnu does not support the prosecution. On the other hand he distinctly contradicts the version put forward by the prosecution. Amin Chand is a son of Ram Rattan Patwari, and, therefore, a nephew of the deceased. Sucha Singh is a son of Kishen Singh the mortgagee. Both these witnesses are obviously interested. Kishen Singh states that when information of the incident was first conveyed to the Patwari by Bainka, his son, the names of Chanan and Sarwan alone were mentioned as the assailants. In my opinion it will not be safe to uphold the conviction of Chanan and Pali on the evidence of Sucha and Amin Chand, specially considering that they were not mentioned in the First Information Report as eye-witnesses and that their evidence is contradicted by other witnesses produced on behalf of the prosecution.

The case of Sarwan, however, stands on a different footing. He admits his presence and some sort of quarrel with the deceased, but makes an obviously absurd statement that he does not know how the deceased received his injuries. The evidence produced on his behalf is unreliable and is open to the same criticism as the statement of Sarwan. In my opinion Sarwan must be held responsible for the injuries caused to the deceased. The learned Counsel on behalf of Sarwan claimed the benefit of a right of private defence on behalf of Sarwan. In my opinion no facts entitling the convict to any such right have been established. It was then contended that in any case Sarwan acted under grave and sudden provocation. There is no force in this contention also. The use of the language imputed to Durga Das does not in any sense amount to grave and sudden provocation.

I accept the appeals of Pali and Chanan and acquitting them order their release forthwith. The conviction and sentence of Sarwan are confirmed and his appeal is dismissed.

Mr. H. N. Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sen, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration that a deed of zerpeshgi dated the 20th December 1907, executed by Musammât Inderbaso in favour of the defendant No. 1 was fraudulent and collusive and without legal necessity; that the said mortgagor had no right or title to execute the zerpeshgi deed and that, therefore, it was not operative on plaintiff who had inherited the land in dispute from her father Sadhu Dubey.

The case of the plaintiff was that one Sheo Dubey had two sons Nakched and Chulhai; that Nakched had a son Dukhi Dubey and Chulhai had a son Sadhu Dubey; that Dukhi and Sadhu were joint; that Dukhi died and Sadhu came into the family property by survivorship, that after Sadhu's death his widow Musammât Jharo succeeded her and that after Musammât Jharo the plaintiff inherited the property in suit from her father. The plaintiff alleged that Inderbaso Kuer, the widow of Dukhi, illegally and fraudulently executed a deed of zerpeshgi dated the 20th December 1907 in favour of her brother, the defendant No. 1, who in turn assigned the mortgage in favour of defendant No. 2. The case for the defence was that the plaintiff was not the daughter of Sadhu and Jharo; that Dukhi and Sadhu were not joint when Dukhi died that upon Dukhi's death Inderbaso Kuer succeeded to his property and upon her death her daughter Sona Kuer succeeded. The defendant No. 1 alleged that he was the daughter's son of Inderbaso, that is, the son of Sona Kuer and not the brother of Inderbaso Kuer, as alleged by the plaintiff. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiff was the daughter of Sadhu Dubey; that the zerpeshgi deed was fraudulent and collusive; that Dukhi died whilst living joint with Sadhu and that defendant No. 1 is the brother of Inderbaso; and he decreed the suit. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge affirmed the finding that the plaintiff was the daughter of Sadhu; but he held that, even assuming that Inderbaso, the mortgagor of defendant No. 1, had no title to the land in suit, the defendant No. 1 having got possession of the land in 1907 on the basis of his zerpeshgi and having continued in possession for over 12 years his title was perfected by adverse possession. He, therefore, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

It is contended before us, first, that the question of adverse possession was not in issue and that the Court of Appeal was not competent to raise it or pass his decision on it. Secondly, that the question whether Dukhi or Sadhu were joint or separate was not gone into by the Court of Appeal; that he should have gone into the question fully.

There is no doubt that title by adverse possession does not appear to have been raised in the pleadings, but the principle has often been laid down that a party may be allowed to succeed on a title by adverse possession pleaded for the first time in the Court of Appeal if such a case arises on facts stated in the pleadings and the party is not taken by surprise. The learned Subordinate Judge bases his decision on the following facts. He finds that as early as 1898 in the Cadastral Survey Inderbaso Kuer's name is recorded in the survey khatian, and he observes that this entry must be regarded as a presumptive piece of evidence of possession of Musammât Inderbaso. He finds that in 1901 there was a zerpeshgi in favour of defendant No. 1 granted by Inderbaso Kuer; he finds that in 1907 the zerpeshgi in suit was executed; that the dues of the previous bond were satisfied out of the consideration of the disputed zerpeshgi in favour of defendant No. 1. These two old registered bonds, he observes, executed so long ago as 1901 and 1907 show that Musammam Inderbaso exercised acts of possession over the disputed land. He also records it as an admitted fact that Sadhu, the father of the plaintiff-appellant, "died seven or eight years ago," and that the defendant's possession over the land in suit commenced during Sadhu's lifetime, and further that admittedly he is still in possession. He also states that the witnesses of the plaintiff had to admit that plaintiff never got possession of the land in suit; that in fact not a single witness examined by the plaintiff spoke a word about the possession of the plaintiff or her predecessor Sadhu over the land in suit. It is also found that at the Revisional Survey of 1919, the name of defendant No. 1 was entered as being in possession as zerpeshgidar of Inderbaso. Now most of the material facts above mentioned were stated in the pleadings and evidence was gone into in detail on all the points. On the principle laid down in the case of Lilabati Misra v. Bishen Chobey (1) the learned Subordinate Judge rightly comes to the conclusion that limitation having once commenced to run in the lifetime of a full owner cannot be taken to be suspended if he dies and is succeeded by a limited owner. Upon the facts found and upon the facts appearing in the pleadings I am inclined to think that the finding as to adverse possession is well-sustainable. Ordinarily the principle, no doubt, holds good that adverse possession should be distinctly raised in the pleadings and should also form the subject-matter of an issue, but where the fact is so clear and unmistakable that the plaintiff has never been in possession of the land claimed for nearly 22 years and where, on the other hand, possession is exercised adversely to him as found in the present case, I see no reason for interference.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 135—Mortgage with possession—Suit by mortgagee to recover possession—Limitation, commencement of—Submersion of land, effect of.

In the case of a mortgage with possession the mortgagor is liable to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee on the date of the mortgage, but is not bound to do so until the mortgagee asks for or seeks to enforce his right to possession. If the latter fails to do so, the mortgagor's possession cannot be said to be that of a trespasser or wrong-doer. [p. 179, col 1]

The mortgagor's right to possession, however, determines on the date of the mortgage, and under Art 135 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, a suit by the mortgagee to recover possession of the mortgaged property must be brought within twelve years of such date. Where, after such date the land mortgaged becomes submerged and is taken possession of by the mortgagor on its re-appearance, the mortgagor will be deemed to have remained in constructive possession thereof during the period of submersion and time will be deemed to have continued to run against the mortgagee during the period of submersion. In any case, time having begun to run against the mortgagee from the date of the mortgage, the subsequent submersion of the land would not have the effect of stopping it. [ibid]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 13th October 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 15th January 1924.

Mr. N. C. Pandit and Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for determination in this second appeal is whether the plaintiffs' suit for possession of the land mortgaged to them was barred by time or not. The Trial Court decreed the suit in respect of that portion of the land which had been in possession of a prior mortgagee and was redeemed by the plaintiffs in 1921, but dismissed the suit with regard to the rest on the ground that it was barred by time. On appeal by the plaintiffs, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the suit was within time in respect of the rest also by virtue of a certain condition embodied in the mortgage deed. It is contended on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the said condition did not warrant the conclusion drawn by the learned District Judge.

The facts, that need be stated here for the purpose of the disposing of this appeal, are briefly as below:—

The land is situated on the banks of the river Sutej and is liable to submersion under water, but, as found by the learned District Judge, the whole of the land mortgaged was out of water at the time of the mortgage, that is, on the 25th June 1894, which is the date of the registered deed of mortgage. The mortgagor's right to possession, therefore, determined on that very date as the mortgage was with possession, and under Art. 135 of the Limitation Act, the suit for possession should have been brought within 12 years from that date. Limitation began to run against the mortgagee from the said date, but a considerable portion of the land remained submerged under water from 1903-04 to 1911-12, and the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents contends that the mortgagee should be deemed to have been in constructive possession of the land during this period, because he argues, the mortgagors were trespassers from the date of the mortgage and their possession as trespassers and wrong-doers should be deemed to have terminated with the submersion of the land. But the learned Counsel could cite no authority in support of his proposition that in case of every mortgage with possession, the mortgagor becomes a trespasser and wrong-doer if he remains in possession after the mortgage. The mortgagor is, no doubt, liable to deliver possession to the mortgagee, but is not bound to do so until the mortgagee asks for or seeks to enforce his right to possession. If the latter fails to do so, the mortgagor's possession cannot be said to be that of a trespasser or wrong-doer.

As the time began to run from the date of the mortgage, the subsequent submersion of the land could not have had the effect of stopping it. Further the mortgagor, who was in actual possession of the land before submersion, should be deemed to have remained in constructive possession thereof after submersion as evidenced by his having taken actual possession when the land emerged from the river. It cannot be said that the mortgagee, who had never obtained possession, remained in constructive possession so long as the land was under the water.

The condition which, according to the learned District Judge, gave the mortgagee a fresh cause of action for suing for possession every time that the land emerged after submersion runs as follows:—

"Jis qadar arazi kul khata se khwah qabza murtahin, khwah ba qabza muzhiran (rahinan) burd ho jawe to us men se bawajih hissa marhuna ke zimawari murtahinan ke samjhi jawegi, aur jis qadar arazi baramad hogi us men se bhi murtahin bawajih hissa marhuna ke zamin lene ka mustahiq hoga."

Now, the property mortgaged was only a share in an undivided joint holding and, therefore, this condition gave expression to the ordinary rights and liabilities of all the co-shareis following each submersion or re-appearance of the land. The condition does not create any new right, that is, a right, which the mortgagee would not have been entitled to but for the stipulation in question. If the mortgagee had once taken possession, he would have remained in constructive possession after the submersion of the land and been entitled as matter of course, to take possession of it on its re-appearance. Thus the condition does not create any right which the mortgagee had not already got as such. The mortgagee's cause of action arose when the mortgagor's right of possession determined, and as that right had once determined, no fresh cause of action could be said to have arisen after that. The lower Appellate Court's interpretation of the condition would lead to the conclusion that a fresh cause of action would arise even if the first submersion should have taken place more than 12 years after the mortgage.

In view of what has been stated above I accept the appeal with costs and, reversing the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Trial Court.

CIVIL REVISION NOS. 381 AND 382 OF 1923.

March 13, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Jwala Prasad, KT.
LAURENTIUS EKKA—PETITIONER

versus

DHUKI KOERI—OPPOSITE PARTY.
Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. III, rr. 1, 4—Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 4—“Practise,” meaning of—Advocate, authority of, to act on behalf of client—Vakalatnama, whether necessary—Compromise consented to by Pleader, when can be set aside—Fraud—Collusion—Petition presented out of time—Delay, explanation of—Extension of time, prayer for—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5.

The word “practise” in s. 4 of the Legal Practitioners Act, includes the right to appear, plead and act. [p. 182, col. 1.]

By virtue of the provisions of cl (3) of r 4 of O. III, C. P. C., an Advocate, unlike a Pleader, can be verbally appointed to act on behalf of his client, and when so appointed, under r. 1 of O III, he can appear, plead and act. There is, therefore, nothing to prevent an Advocate, either in the High Court or in the subordinate Courts, from presenting an application on behalf of his client without any power of appointment or vakalatnama given to him in writing. [p. 181, col. 2.]

A petition filed out of time must show on the face of it the reason for the delay, and there must be an express prayer for condonation of the delay under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. [p. 182, col. 2.]

A compromise consented to by a Pleader duly authorised in that behalf will not be set aside, unless fraud or collusion is imputed to the Pleader. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Ranchi, dated the 9th June 1923.

Mr. H. P. Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Saran, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi, dated the 9th June 1923, rejecting an application of the petitioners presented under O. XLVII, r. 1, of the C. P. C., for review of a judgment, dated the 23rd December 1922, passed by him.

The petitioners were plaintiffs in the case and sought to recover possession of the disputed land on a declaration of their title thereto as their ancestral bhuinhari land. The defendants, on the other hand, claimed to be in possession of the property under purchase made by their father in 1873 from one Sheikh Bhukun, an auction-purchaser of the land. The plaintiffs' suit was dismissed by the Munsif, and the appeal filed by them was placed in the file of the Subordinate Judge for disposal. The arguments of both sides concluded on the 20th December. On the 23rd December a compromise petition was filed before the learned Subordinate Judge. The petition was signed by the defendants and their Pleader, and on behalf of the petitioners their Pleader signed the same. By the petition of compromise the bhuinhari title of the petitioners was admitted and acknowledged by the defendants, and the defendants were allowed to hold the disputed land as occupancy *raiya*ts under the plaintiffs on payment of rent at the rate of Rs. 3 per acre, the rent being revisable at the time of the preparation of the Record of Rights. The appeal was disposed of in terms of the compromise petition by judgment of the Court, dated the 23rd December, 1923.

The petition for review of the judgment was filed on behalf of the petitioners on the 5th June. In it it was alleged that after the arguments were over, the petitioner No. 1, who was in charge of the case on behalf of the plaintiffs, had left Ranchi for his village in order to make preparation for the Christmas festival in his charge, and he came back to Ranchi in the first week of January and learnt that the appeal was disposed of in terms of the compromise referred to above. It was alleged in the petition that the compromise petition was signed by the petitioner in his knowledge and without instructions to his Pleader and that it was prejudicial to the plaintiffs' interest.

The compromise petition was signed by the petitioners themselves, and countersigned by their Counsel Mr. Roy. On the 9th June 1923, the Court rejected the application for review holding: (1) that it was out of time, and (2) that it was not in proper form. As to the latter ground the learned Subordinate Judge observed that Mr. Roy being a Counsel (Advocate) could not move the petition unless he was instructed by a Pleader and after the latter had signed it, and that if Mr. Roy wanted to present the petition and thereby act as a Pleader, he would have filed a vakalatnama. In support of this view the learned Subordinate Judge has cited the case of Mr. B. N. Misra, an Advocate of the Court, who practises in Cuttack. I have looked into the file of the case. Mr. Misra applied for refund of some money on behalf of his client and filed a petition for that purpose under his own signature, without filing a vakalatnama. The learned Chief Justice (Sir Edward Chamier) observed that if Mr. Misra wanted to perform the functions of a Pleader he must file a vakalatnama. This view has been maintained in this Court in several cases, and thus a practice has been established of not allowing refund of money to an Advocate unless he is especially authorized and files a vakalatnama. This would be so under the provisions of the stamp law which especially require that a refund of money can only be made to a person holding a power-of-attorney, duly stamped, from the person on whose behalf the withdrawal is sought [Art. 48 (g), Sch. I of the Stamp Act]. But the Counsel in the present case did not want any refund of money on behalf of his client; he only applied for review of judgment. The petition for review in the present case was duly signed by all the petitioners, and it was moved by Counsel, Mr. Roy, who appeared for the petitioners who were also present in Court at the time. The rules as to the presentation of an application are to be found in Ch. III, page 13, of the High Court Rules, and in Ch. I, Part I, page 5, of the General Rules and Circular Orders for the subordinate Courts. Rule 4, cls. (iii) and (iv), of Ch. III of the High Court Rules say that a petition shall be signed and dated either by the petitioner or declarant or his Pleader and presented either by the petitioner or declarant or his recognized agent or his Pleader or some person appointed in writing in each case by such Pleader to present the same. The note to that rule says:

'Here and throughout these rules unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context 'Pleader' means Advocate, Vakil or Attorney.'

Therefore, a petition must be signed and presented either by the petitioner himself or an Advocate, Vakil or Attorney of this Court. In the present case the petition was signed by the petitioners themselves. They were present in Court, and it was signed and presented by Mr. Roy, Advocate, on their behalf. Therefore, if the petition were filed in this Court it would have been in order. It is, however, contended by Mr. Sambhu Saran that, as it was presented before the learned Subordinate Judge, the Advocate in question could not present it. Rule 2, cl. (3), Ch. I, of the General Rules and Circular Orders, however, states that a petition to be presented in the lower Courts may be signed by the person presenting it, and r. 3 says that if the person presenting it is not a Pleader or a mukhtiar, he shall, if so required by the Court, be identified. Therefore, a petition in the subordinate Courts may be signed and presented by a party or by his Pleader. "Pleader" has been defined in the C. P. C., s. 2, cl. (15), to mean any person entitled to appear and plead for another in Court and to include an Advocate, Vakil and Attorney of a High Court. This rule refers only to the functions of appearing and pleading, and it is said that it does not include acting.

Rule 1 of O. III of the C. P. C., says:

"Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except, where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent or by a Pleader duly appointed to act in his behalf."

Rule 4 (1) of the order says:

"The appointment of a Pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power-of-attorney to act in this behalf."

Clause (3) of r. 4 dispenses with the appointment in writing in the case of an Advocate of any High Court, and an Advocate is not required to present any document empowering him to act.

Therefore, an Advocate, unlike a Pleader, can be verbally appointed to act on behalf of his client, and when so appointed under r. 1 of O. III he can appear, plead and act. Hence Mr. Roy need not have filed any vakalatnama as his authority to present the petition of revision on behalf of the petitioners. So far as the law and the rules are concerned, there is nothing to prevent an Advocate, either in the High Court or in the subordinate Courts, from presenting an application on behalf of his client without any power of appointment or vakalatnama given to him in writing. There is nothing in the Legal Practitioners Act also against this view.

Section 7 of the Letters Patent of this Court confers upon the Court power "to approve, admit and enrol such and so many Advocates, Vakils and attorneys as to the said High Court may seem meet; and such Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys shall be and are hereby authorized to appear for the suitors of the said High Court, and to plead or to act, or to plead and act, for the said suitors, according as the said High Court may by its rules and directions determine, and subject to such rules and directions."

In s. 8 of the Letters Patent it is further declared that this Court

"shall have power to make rules from time to time for the qualification and admission of proper persons to be Advocates, Vakils or attorneys-at-law of the said High Court, and shall be empowered to remove or to suspend from practice, on reasonable cause, the said Advocates, Vakils or attorneys-at-law; and no person whatsoever but such Advocates, Vakils, or attorneys shall be allowed to...appear, plead or act on his own behalf or on behalf of a co-suitor."

Section 119 of the C. P. C., enacts that "Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to authorize any person on behalf of another to address the Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, or to examine witnesses, except where the Court shall have in the exercise of the power conferred by its Charter authorized him so to do or to interfere with the power of the High Court to make rules concerning Advocates, Vakils and Attorneys."

No rule has been framed in this Court prohibiting an Advocate from presenting an application or acting on behalf of his client.

Unders. 4 of the Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879).

"Every person now or hereafter entered as an Advocate or Vakil on the roll of any High Court under the Letters Patent constituting such Court, shall be entitled to practise in all Courts subordinate to the Court on the roll of which he is entered," etc.

Thus, if an Advocate on the roll of this High Court is entitled to sign and present an application and to act on behalf of his client in the High Court itself, by s. 4 of the Legal Practitioners Act referred to above he will be entitled to practise in all the Courts subordinate to this Court. The word "practise" in the section has been advisedly used and unless prohibited by any special rule will include the right to appear, plead and act.

Mr. Sambhu Saran has referred us to the case of Ram Taruck Barrik v. Sidhessuree Dossee (1). That case, no doubt, supports his contention, but that case relates to the practice in the Calcutta High Court under the rules framed by that Court prohibiting Advocates of the Court from acting on behalf of their clients either on the original or on the appellate side; and all the arguments advanced by Mr. Sambhu Saran were considered and fully met by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bakhtawar Singh v. Sant Lal (2). Their

Lordships in that case observed: "It does not appear to us necessary to enter upon a discussion of the practice that prevails and regulates the professional status and proceedings of Counsel in England, as it seems to us to be altogether beside the question we have to determine, namely, whether enrolled Advocates of this Court are, as such, prohibited from doing all such acts as admittedly may be done by the Vakils."

Accordingly their Lordships held that under the Letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court and its rules an Advocate can appear, plead and act.

Now, the Letters Patent of this Court and the rules framed by us are on similar lines to those of the Allahabad High Court. I am, therefore, inclined to adopt the view taken by the Full Bench of that Court and to hold that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in his view that the petition of review presented to him by Mr. Roy, Advocate, on behalf of the petitioners was not properly presented.

The first ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge rejected the application of the petitioners, however, seems to be substantial. The petition was filed much out of time. The appeal was disposed of on the 23rd December 1922, and the petitioner No. 1 came to know of it in the first week of January 1923, when he came to Ranchi to inquire about the case. The review petition should have been filed about the 23rd of March, 1923. It was, however, filed on the 5th June 1920. This enormous delay has not been explained in the petition for review presented to the Subordinate Judge.

It is a well-recognized principle that a petition filed out of time must show on the face of it the reason for delay and there must further be an express prayer for condonation of the delay under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. On the face of it the petition was time-barred and the Court below was right in holding that it was not entertainable.

Again, the petition does not impute improper conduct on the part of the Pleader who filed the compromise petition, and unless that was done the action taken by the Pleader on behalf of the petitioners could not be challenged, for under the vakalatnama the Pleader had full power to compromise the case [vide Sadho Saran Rai

(1) 13 W. R. 60.

(2) 9 A. 617; A. W. N. (1887) 153; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 848 (F. B.).

v. Anant Rai (3).] The recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sourindra Nath Mittra v. Heramba Nath Bandopadhyaya (4) may be usefully cited, though the facts of the case are not very similar to those of the present one. On principle there does not seem to be any reason for interfering with a compromise consented to by the Pleader duly authorized in this behalf, unless fraud or collusion is imputed to the Pleader. No such collusion or fraud has been pleaded in the petition. No doubt, ignorance of the compromise, want of instructions to the Pleader and possibly fraud practised by the opposite party have been vaguely stated in the petition. These are, however, not sufficient to affect the compromise filed in the present case. Again, the petitioner No. 1 says that he was looking after the case and went away on the 23rd December 1922, to make arrangements for Christmas festivities, but there were about ten other petitioners and there is no reason why the petitioners other than petitioner No. 1 could not remain in Ranchi to look after the case.

For all these reasons I dismiss the applications.

JUDGMENT.—The Probate of a Will of Bhan Mal has been granted to three of his nephews Nathu Mal, Girdhari Lal and Gurdas Mal by the District Judge of Jullundur. The application for Probate was contested by the daughter of the deceased, Musammât Prag Devi, and she presented this appeal.

The contention in the Trial Court, as here, has been that the document was undoubtedly executed by the late Bhan Mal a few days before his death but that he was in such a bad state of health that he did not know what he was doing, that the Will after registration was taken over by Girdhari Lal and is still in his possession unless he has destroyed it, that he refused to produce it because he does not wish it to be shown that the Will bears the thumb-mark, and not signature, of the late Bhan Mal, and that there are various indications to prove that the mind of Bhan Mal was dominated by his nephews and that he had not a disposing mind at the time when the Will was executed four days before his death. The learned District Judge has held that there could be no reason for Girdhari Lal to lose or suppress the Will, that the daughter has been very well treated, and that there is no evidence that Bhan Mal was under the influence of his nephews. It is true that there is no direct evidence and it is only a question of whether such influence can be inferred. The reason put forward for the possible suppression of the Will is perfectly comprehensible and if the recital in the Will be ignored, it appears that the daughter would have succeeded to the whole of her father's property, while according to the Will she receives only a portion and the nephews take the remainder.

This point of the disappearance of the Will is I think of great importance. The Sub-Registrar himself came to the house of Bhan Mal, and tells us that he was weak and comatose and that he had to wait till he woke up. He states that Bhan Mal assented to the contents and put his thumb mark upon it, i. e., on the endorsement. Th

Sub-Registrar then took the deed away to his office for necessary formalities to be observed, and made it over to Girdhari Lal, one of the nephews, when he came to fetch it. This man Girdhari Lal brought with him a receipt purporting to bear the thumb impression of Musammam Prag Devi the daughter a curious proceeding. This thumb impression has not been proved. Counsel, however, contends that this is sufficient to establish that the Will was made over by Girdhari Lal to Musammam Prag Devi, and he further contends that the Sub-Registrar's statement that he was told that the thumb impression was that of Musammam Prag Devi, but that he had not seen it put on is good evidence. This incident of handing in the previously prepared receipt is I think very highly suspicious. The reason for suppressing the Will is said to be that it bore the thumb-mark of Bhan Mal and that he would not have executed a solemn document in this way had he not been too weak to write. The witnesses as to the actual signature are two, Tulsi Ram the scribe and Mela Ram one of the witnesses. Tulsi Ram says that Bhan Mal put his thumb-mark, while Mela Ram is very positive that he signed in Urdu. The document itself shows baqalam khud Bhan Mal angutha which I take to mean his thumb-mark and not his signature, and there is the further fact that he affixed his thumb-mark to the endorsement before the Sub-Registrar, I find that Tulsi Ram is right in saying that Bhan Mal put his thumb-mark and did not sign, and I think that he is also right in saying that his reason for doing so was that he was very weak. The Will recites that Bhan Mal wishes to ensure the inheritance of his daughter and leaves to her what is called his self-acquired property and states that his reversioners will take the ancestral property. There is no presumption regarding the ancestral nature of any property, nor has it ever been pleaded in this case that any of the property was ancestral. The natural heir to receive the estate was the daughter and taking every thing into account, in spite of the evidence of the Sub-Registrar that Bhan Mal appeared to him to understand what he was doing, I find that he was in a very weak state of health, and that every thing points to the conclusion to which I come, that he was under the influence of his nephews and had not a disposing mind at the time he executed this document.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the application for Probate:

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The question in this appeal is a pure question of fact and relates to the origin of Tarkeshwar, defendant No. 1.

Sheo Prasad Tiwari had two sons, Ram Partap alias Halkhori and Maheshwar Dutt alias Duttan. Ram Pratap had two sons, Ramrup and Ramsuraj, by his wife Parbati. The plaintiff Debendra Prasad Tiwari is the son of Ramrup and his wife Hartalika. The question for decision in the suit is whether Tarkeshwar is the posthumous son of Ramsuraj and his wife Harnandan Kuer. Ram Pratap died in 1899. The plaintiff alleges that both his sons were then minors and the management of the property was assumed by Maheshwar Dutt. Even after he attained majority Ramrup was incapable of managing his estate being of weak intellect and dissolute habits. His mother then formed the idea of marrying one of her sons in the family of a man of affairs and accordingly Ramsuraj was married to Harnandan Kuer, the grand-daughter of one Nanku Pande, who is described in the plaint as "a successful tout practising in the district of Patna possessed of great tact and fully capable of understanding business and managing zemindari affairs" Nanku Pande then took up the management of the estate acting in consultation with Maheshwar Dutt.

The plaintiff alleges that Ramsuraj died on the 23rd of Bhado 1313 two years after his marriage. On the death of Ramsuraj Nanku Pande took Harnandan Kuer to his house at Machuatoli in Patna and set up Tarkeshwar who was the son of one Banke Singh, a constable by his mistress as the son of Ramsuraj and Harnandan Kuer. Maheshwar Dutt is also alleged to have had illicit connection with the mistress of Banke Singh and to have acted in collusion with Nanku Pande in this matter. In 1317 Ramrup also died. The main case is stated in paras. 17 and 18 of the plaint in these words. "To the best of the plaintiff's knowledge on enquiry no son or daughter was born to Ramsuraj Tiwari of the womb of Musammât Harnandan Kuer. When Ramsuraj Tewari died he was only 13 years old and could not possibly beget a child at that age, and it was not at all a fact that Musammât Harnandan Kuer was pregnant at the time of his death. Defendant No. 1 is not at all the son of Ramsuraj Tiwari nor did the latter beget him nor was he born of the womb of Harnandan Kuer. On the other hand he was born of the womb of Banke Singh's mistress and his father is Banke Singh resident of Mouza Bairia." The plaintiff claims a declaration that the defendant No. 1 is not the son of Ramsuraj Tiwari and has no title to the property of the family and a decree for confirmation of his possession or recovery of possession.

In the written statement various dates of the birth, marriage and death of the members of the family alleged in the plaint are stated differently. Ramrup's incapacity for affairs and dissolute character are denied and it is alleged that Tarkeshwar is the son of Ramsuraj and Harnandan Kuer born on the 8th of Kartick 1314 about a month and a half after the death of Ramsuraj. He was married in 1324 to the daughter of one Rambhawan Missir a respectable Brahmin of high family. The suit is said to have been instituted fraudulently owing to a dispute about the title to certain monies owing to the family.

The main issue in the case is Issue No. 4 "Is not defendant No. 1 the son of Ramsuraj Tiwari? Is he the son of Banke Singh as alleged by the plaintiff? The learned Subordinate Judge has found, that if Banke Singh had any son by any mistress Tarkeshwar was not that son, secondly, that Harnandan Kuer was really pregnant when her husband died, and it was in that condition that she was removed to Machuatoli, and thirdly, that considering all the circumstances he was not prepared to hold that Tarkeshwar is the son of Ramsuraj Tiwari. He, therefore, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

On these findings the learned Counsel for the appellant contended that he was entitled to a judgment. Both the main allegations in the plaint had been negatived by the first two findings and the Subordinate Judge was bound on these findings to come to the conclusion that Tarkeshwar was the son of Ramsuraj Tewari. He further relied on the documentary evidence in the case as showing that the existence of Tarkeshwar and his relationship to the family had been admitted in a long series of transactions by members of the family itself. In my opinion it is impossible to dispose of this appeal on the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge. It is true that the first two findings are in terms inconsistent with the conclusion but apparently, all that the second finding was intended to amount to was that Musammât Harnandan Kuer might have been pregnant when her husband died. The finding is based on a consideration of the evidence relating to the age of Ramsuraj and the learned Subordinate Judge has not discussed at all the direct evidence for and against the pregnancy of Harnandan Kuer. The only conclusion to which the evidence which he has discussed could lead was a finding that pregnancy was possible. On the other hand the learned Counsel for the respondent contests both the first and the second finding. It is necessary, therefore, to discuss the evidence in the case.

I shall deal first with the allegation that Tarkeshwar is the son of the constable Banke Singh and his mistress. The evidence on this point is oral evidence only and consists of the depositions of Banke Singh P. W. No. 24, Biru Gope P. W. No. 19, Ram

Khelawan P. W. No. 21, Chhedi Ram P. W. No. 17, Sanichar Koeri P. W. No. 20 and Jawahir Lal P. W. No. 18. The first comment that falls to be made on this evidence is that none of these witnesses is a person of any consideration. Banke Singh is a retired Police constable and Biru Gope is a milk-seller. The mistress of Banke Singh rented a room in his house for one rupee a month and here she bore twins one of whom is set up as the defendant Tarkeshwar Ram Khelawan who says that he used to supply drinking water to the College students, also lodged in that house. Chhedi Ram is a neighbouring tobacconist; Sanichar Koeri is a labourer, and Jawahir Lal seems to be a contractor whose father was a physician and supplied medicine to Banke Singh's family, secondly the story they tell is improbable in itself. The evidence is that Tarkeshwar was three or four months old when the negotiations for obtaining him began, but, owing to the opposition of his mother, it was not until three or four months after this that the child was made over to Nanku Pande. It is difficult to believe that a child of six or eight months old could be introduced into a house as a son of the house. Presumably negotiations were not entered into until Ramsuraj had died. Consequently a considerable period must have elapsed when there was child in the house before this child of six or eight months appeared upon the scene. Thirdly it seems unlikely that a child would have been procured for this fraudulent purpose from a gotia and that too, apparently, without any attempt at secrecy, if these witnesses are to be believed. The evidence has been placed before us and I am unable to believe it. The evidence of Banke Singh does not appear to me to be true. It is difficult to believe that if Tarkeshwar was his son he would have come to Court to ruin his prospects in life; and his evidence is open to the initial criticism that having entered into this transaction with Nanku Pande he now for no apparent reason has turned against him and exposed the whole plot. The allegation in the plaint that this mistress of Banke Singh was also mistress of Maheshwar Dutt appears to be merely scandalous no evidence whatsoever being given in support of it. It seems to me impossible to decide a question of descent affirmatively on evidence of this kind. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in holding that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the defendant Tarkeshwar is the son of Banke Singh.

The next question is whether Tarkeshwar is the son of Ramsuraj. The real question involved here is whether Harnandan Kuer was pregnant at the time of her husband's death. As a preliminary to that enquiry there was a good deal of discussion of the age of Ramsuraj. The oral evidence is conflicting and considering that most of that evidence was interested and that the witnesses were deposing 15 years after the death of Ramsuraj, it is, in my opinion, difficult to arrive at any certain conclusion on the oral evidence. Each side has been able to elicit statements from the witnesses of the other side supporting his contention. Thus the defendant contends that Ramsuraj was only four or five years younger than Ramrup while the plaintiff contends that he was about 11 years younger. Parbati, the grand mother, says in one place that the difference was four or five years though her evidence was not consistent on the point. Hartalika, the widow of Ramrup, makes the difference six or seven years. Tapeswar Kuer, a relation, makes it four or five years as does Deepnarain Tiwari a gotia. On the other hand Nanku Pande the principal defence witness makes the difference eight or nine years, while the mother of Harnandan Kuer said that Ramrup was 18 when Ramsuraj died. It is possible by combining certain of the statements to arrive at the conclusion that Ramsuraj died at the age of 13 or 14. It seems to me that evidence of this kind is most uncertain and that even statements made in cross-examination unfavourable to the witness's side are not necessarily to be relied upon. Exhibit R is a petition for registration of his name made by Ramrup Tiwari, as major for himself and his minor brother Ramsuraj on the 14th of December 1899 after the death of Rampartap. It has not been shown that Ramrup himself filed this petition. It was not shown to any of the plaintiff's witnesses and the mukhtarnama Ex. R (1) shows that it was received through Maheshwar Dutt. It is contended that if Ramrup himself signed the petition there is no reason why the mukhtarnama should have been presented to the mukhtar by his uncle. This may be explained by the consideration of the youth of Ramrup, but it looks as if Maheshwar Dutt had managed the whole of this business. Still there is no strong reason for disbelieving the statement of Ramrup's majority. It was suggested by the learned Counsel for the respondent that Maheshwar Dutt by this means would get rid of all liability to account if he managed the estate. But this is a speculation with nothing to support it. I consider that Ex. R is the best evidence on the question of age. This would show that Ramrup was at least 18 in December 1899, and if Ramsuraj was only four or five years younger, he would have been between 19 and 20 when he died. The difference may have been greater, but the general effect of the evidence seems to be, if Ex. R is accepted, that he was old enough to beget a son. But the question is not whether he could have begotten a son, but whether he did in fact beget one, and this is the real question in the case. The evidence on this point is oral but it may to some extent be tested by the attitude of the family in the matter.

By far the most important witness on this point is Parbati Kuer, the grand-mother. She says that excepting Dabendra she has got no other grand-son and that Harnandan Kuer was not pregnant at the time of her husband's death. The learned Counsel for the appellant relied upon the statement made in cross-examination by this witness, that two months after Harnandan's departure in the month of Kartick she sent a barber to her with clothes and sweetmeats and he argued this was in connection with the birth of Harnandan's son but no such conclusion was put to the witness and it is impossible to infer from her sending clothes and sweetmeats in the month of Kartick to her daughter-in-law that any son was born at that time. There can be no doubt that the evidence of Parbati is the best evidence that could be given. She has no interest in the result of the suit because she can only get maintenance in any case. There is no reason for her to make any distinction between her two sons and to give evidence in favour of one grand-son and against another if that other was in fact her grand-son. It is impossible to believe that she would have deposed in the manner if her son Ramsuraj had left his wife with child. Hartalika, the widow of Ramrup, who is also a competent witness (as the family lived together) says that Harnandan Kuer was not pregnant when her husband died. Her evidence is, however, open to the criticism that she is an interested witness and, therefore, not much reliance can be placed upon it. Tapeshwar Kuer, the daughter of Deepan Tiwari, a gotia who was on terms of close intimacy with Harnandan Kuer, and, according to her statement, her inseparable companion says that she was not pregnant when Ramsuraj died. She says that they did not say in Tewarichak that a child was born to Harnandan Kuer and that to her knowledge no one in the village had any information of the birth of a child and there was no rumour about it. The criticism made on the evidence of this witness is that her father Deepan Tiwari looks after the plaintiff's affairs. Darsani Kuer also a relation and gotia and resident of Tewarichak says that when Ramsuraj died, she went to his house and saw Harnandan Kuer and she was not pregnant. Three male gotias have also given evidence on this point—Udaiprakash Tiwari, Bajrangi Tiwari and Deepnarain Tiwari. Udaiprakash said that he was in the village when Ramsuraj died and that he never heard that he ever had a son and no one in the village knew anything about it. He also denies that he had gone to Patna to attend the mukh-dekhai ceremony of the defendant No. 1. He says that when Ramsuraj died he heard people saying that his line had ceased to exist. Bajrangi gives similar evidence. Deepnarain says that no information was sent to Tewarichak from Machuatoli that a child was born to the widow of Ramsuraj and they did not assemble at the Darzitola house to see his face. Evidence was also given by tenants of the village to the effect that they had no knowledge of any son of Ramsuraj.

For the defence, evidence has been given by Sheonandan Upadhya (D. W. No. 2) who speaks of seeing Harnandan Kuer when she was pregnant and a little later seeing Tarkeshwar when he was about one month old. He is Nanku Pande's brother-in-law and it is unlikely that Harnandan Kuer would have appeared before him in pregnant condition. Deodhari Pande (D. W. No. 8) a physician deposes that he went twice to Tewarichak once for the treatment of Harnandan Kuer and a second time for treatment of Ramsuraj. Harnandan Kuer was suffering from fever and on examining her pulse he finds that she was pregnant. This witness is not unfamiliar with the law Courts and he is a physician who seems to be attached to the family of Nanku Pande from whom he takes no fees. There does not appear to have been any occasion for his being taken to Tewarichak. He was not the family doctor nor was he a well-known physician. Evidence of this nature does not carry any conviction to my mind. Deodhari Raut (D. W. No. 11) is a servant of Nanku Pandey and wholly dependent upon him with his whole family. His wife Chitkoeri (D. W. No. 12) deposes to having been present at the birth. The other witnesses are Nanku Pande himself, Harnandan Kuer and her mother Nandakumari. Harnandan Kuer says that her mother-in-law attended the mukhdekhai ceremony at the Darzitola house, Parbati denies this and the other persons named by Harnandan Kuer as having been present were not called, nor were their name ever put to Parbati so that the plaintiff might have had an opportunity to call them. Nandakumari says that the Guru of the Tiwaris of the Tewarichak came and blessed the child. This Guru lives at Benares and would presumably have been an independent witness but he has not been called. She also says that letters used to be sent by Parbati Kuer which may be in the possession of the male members of the family, but no letters were produced. Nanku Pande says that Brahmins were fed on the barhi day and that Ramrup, Kanhauli people and others who were living close to him then were called on the occasion but of these the only one called as a witness is Debendra Prasad Sukul of Kanhauli who is a relation by marriage and who denies having attended the barhi ceremony.

The story of the removal of Harnandan Kuer from Tewarichak to her grand-father's house in Patna in the eighth month of her pregnancy is improbable in itself. There is no evidence of any independent witness who was present at any ceremony in connection with the birth of the child. The pregnancy of Harnandan Kuer must have been matter of common knowledge to the relations but not a single member of her husband's family appears to give evidence on her side. All the Gotias are on the side of the plaintiff and in a matter of this kind this seems to me a fact of the highest importance. On the other hand the evidence for the defence is that of the connections or creatures of Nanku Pande who by his own admissions was in a position to give better and more independent evidence than has been adduced. None of the neighbours in Machuatoli has come to depose although there were respectable persons living there with whom Nanku was on friendly terms. On a consideration of all the evidence and especially, the evidence of Parbati Kuer, I come to the conclusion that Harnandan Kuer was not pregnant when her husband died.

This is enough for the disposal of the case, but the main argument on behalf of the appellant was that in a long series of documents Tarkeshwar had been acknowledged as the son of Ramsuraj. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the documentary evidence. It was in the first place sought to be established that Ramrup was capable of business and did in fact take part in affairs after the death of Rampratab. The documents referred to in this connection are these: Ex. R which has been discussed above, Ex. X37 this is the certified copy of a plaint dated the 10th of March 1900 which purports to have been signed by Ramrup for self and for Ramsuraj Tewari minor. I doubt whether this document was admissible in evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge apparently followed the ruling in Shazadu Mahomed Shahaboodeen v. Daniel Wedgeberry (1). The soundness of this ruling has been questioned by Field (Law of Evidence, 7th Edition, p. 236) and Woodroffe (Law of Evidence, 7th Edition, p. 583) in their commentaries on the Evidence Act. It has not been followed on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court. I can see no ground for making a distinction between plaints and written statements nor is there any reason why the certified copy of one should be admissible in evidence while the certified copy of the other is not. Neither is a public document. In my opinion Ex. X-37 should not have been admitted in evidence. Ex. X-48 is a decree in Suit No. 80 of 1900 which merely shows that Ramrup Tewari was a major and was a party to the suit. Exhibit X-54, X-55 and X-56 were three plaints in suits of 1904 in which Ramrup Tewari sued for himself and as guardian of Ramsuraj. The plaints purport to have been signed by Ramrup in his own pen. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed the signatures purporting to be those of Ramrup in Suit Nos. 22 and 23 of 1904 and in a various vakalatnamas and petitions filed in those suits and has come to the conclusion that they are in three different hands. By comparison of some of the signatures made by Nanku Pande in Court (Ex. 16 series) and other documents he has held that some of the signatures are by Nanku Pande some by Jaldhar Lal and a third set by some one who has not been identified. I have examined these signatures and it is clear that they are at all events in two different hands, possibly three, so that it is clear that whoever made the signatures they were not all made by Ramrup Tewari and possibly none was. The inference to be drawn is that his name was being used in these documents with or without his authority. Exhibit X-62 is a plaint in a suit of 1905 filed by Ramrup. Ex. M-1 is a payment order for money awarded in compensation for land acquired by the Government to Maheshwardutt Tewari and Ramrup Tewari. Both purport to have signed by their own hands. The only comment that is to be made on this document is that whereas Maheshwardutt Tewari was identified by the manager of the Court of Wards, Ramrup was identified by an unknown person.

Evidence was given by Babu Dwarka Prasad Pathak a Vakil who acts for this family. He proved a vakalatnama (Ex. K) which showed that he got it from Ramrup. He also says that Ramrup used to come to him occasionally in connection with the cases of the family and he talked like a man of ordinary intelligence. He did not remember if he had received any instructions from him. Nanku Pande in his evidence admitted that the sradh of Ramsuraj was performed by Dultan Tiwari. Now ordinarily it was Ramrup who was entitled to perform this sradh and the fact that he did not do so lends some support to the contention that he was not entrusted with the management of affairs. There is no doubt exaggeration in the plaintiff's case about Ramrup Tewari but the evidence that he took an active part in managing the estate and in the conduct of litigation is unconvincing while the documents clearly show that his name was signed by others. It is probable, therefore, that if Nanku Pande intended when occasion offered, to create evidence of Tarkeshwar's being the son of Ramsuraj the presence of Ramrup Tiwari would not offer any serious obstacle.

I now come to the period after the death of Ramsuraj Tiwari. Exhibit P-3 is a deed of sale in favour of Maheshwar Dutt Tiwari and Tarkeshwar through the guardianship of his mother Harnandan Kuer, the widow of Ramsuraj. This is dated the 4th of February 1907 and it, in my opinion, clearly indicates that evidence was being created to support Tarkeshwar's claim. No explanation could be offered for taking this conveyance in the name of Tarkeshwar in preference to the name of Ramrup his uncle, who was still alive. Exhibit X-80 and Ex. X-81 are plaints in Suit Nos. 84 and 85 of 1908 and they are remarkable for the description of Tarkeshwar as born of the seed of Ramsuraj from the womb of Harnandan Kuer. This is an unusual expression and further supports the theory that evidence was being created. It may be noted that these documents were not put to any of the plaintiff's witnesses and this remark applies to all the important documents in this case filed on behalf of the defence except Ex. A. Two of the defendants in these suits disputed the allegation that Tarkeshwar was the son of Ramsuraj and the question was decided in favour of the plaintiffs on the evidence of Maheshwar Dutt. But it is significant that the question of the origin of Tarkeshwar was raised by strangers to the family at this early date. It is true that they did not attempt to substantiate their allegation but this allegation could not have been made if there had not in fact been some serious doubt as to Tarkeshwar's origin. Ex. R-4 is an application for registration of names filed by Ramrup on the 13th of January 1908. This document recited that about three months after the death of Ramsuraj a son named Tarkeshwar Prasad Tewari was born to him and it purports to be signed by Ramrup Tewari by his own hand. But no weight can be given to this document because the original was not produced and in view of the evidence above referred to that the name of Ramrup Tewari was used by others, there is no presumption that he actually signed this document himself. Moreover the statement that Tarkeshwar was born about three months after the death of Ramsuraj is inconsistent with the evidence in the present case that the birth took place about six weeks after. Exhibit R 8 is an application for registration on behalf of Debendra Prasad Tewari made on the 19th of February 1909 after the death of Ramrup. It recites that Parbati Kuer was the grandmother of Debendra and of Tarkeshwar and it purports to be signed on behalf of Debendra through the guardianship of his mother Hartalika by the pen of Kuber Tewari, his maternal uncle. Kuber is dead. But his brother Shivajee Tewari (P. W. No. 36) was examined by the plaintiffs and this document was not put to him. It cannot, therefore, be given much weight. Exhibit R-9 is the application on behalf of Tarkeshwar filed in 1910. This document is by Kunj Behari Lal his servant. Exhibits U-1 and U-2 are a petition for returning certain documents and an affidavit in support thereof, dated the 30th and 31st July 1908. It is asserted in these documents that Tarkeshwar is the son of Ramsuraj and the affidavit purports to have been sworn by Ramrup. The learned Subordinate Judge in discussing the signature of Ramrup on the vakalatnama in this matter (Ex. C. 3) has shown that there is no certainty that it is his. Exhibit W is a curious document. It is a petition for execution of a decree filed on the 11th of March 1909. It shows that the previous execution case was struck off in 1904. On the face of it, therefore, this application was barred by time. It alleges that Tarkeshwar was the son of Ramsuraj and the petition bears not only the signature of Jaleswar Prasad Tewari who presented it, but also of the Pleaders Akhoy Kumar and Tarkeshwar Prasad Pathak. The order sheet, Ex. X-17, shows that Tarkeshwar was substituted for Ramsuraj as decree-holder. Apparently this was the object of the application because no further steps were taken and the case was dismissed for want of prosecution. It is difficult to understand why a petition for execution which was obviously time-barred, should have been filed unless it was with the object of creating evidence.

Exhibit X-49 is the decree for the registration of Tarkeshwar's name in the Collectorate but the petition itself has not been produced, Exs. X-27, X-29a and X-31 are plaints and decrees in suit showing that Tarkeshwar was impleaded in these litigations some of which were at the instance of the other members of the family. Exhibit A is a security bond executed by Hartalika Kuer and Ramlagan Pande on the 18th June 1916, which declares the ancestry of Tarkeshwar in the same terms as the plaints of 1908 and purports to be signed by Hartalika by her own pen. Hartalika in her evidence says that she has not signed any document with the knowledge that it had the name of Tarkeshwar in it. Exhibits X-64 and X-65 are plaints in suit Nos. 83 and 84 of 1916 by Debendra and Tarkeshwar verified and signed by Harihar Lal, servant of the plaintiff. The learned Counsel for the appellant referred to an affidavit in the present suit sworn on behalf of the plaintiffs by Harihar Lal son of Khiali Lal and contends that this is the same person. Even if he is the same person, the statement in the plaint Ex 64 that Tarkeshwar is the son of Ramsuraj is only the statement of a servant and will not bind the plaintiff. But Hartalika denies that Harihar Lal was ever her servant and the defence has not proved identity. Exhibit 8 is a petition by Maheshwar Dutt and others acknowledging the receipt of decretal money. This, however, is a late document of the year 1917 and as Tarkeshwar's name had been registered it must appear in such documents as these. The same remark applies to Ex. N which is dated the 23rd September 1917. Exhibit B is a deposition of Dipan Tewari made in 1915 in which he spoke of lending money to the grandmother of Dependra and Tarkeshwar. Exs. M and M2 are receipt for compensation granted for lands, acquired by the Government. These are of 1913 one by Harnandan Kuer on behalf of Devendra. The same remark applies to these documents also as also to Exs. R 10 and R-11. Exhibit O is an account-book from 1307 to 1311 showing expenses in connection with Tarkeshwar's visits to Tewarichak. These papers came from the custody of Kunj Behari Lal and may have been fabricated, at all events they are not beyond question.

These are the principal documents that were referred to in the course of the argument. The name of Tarkeshwar was entered in the Collectorate Registers and also in the Record of Rights which was prepared between 1909 and 1911. On the other hand the documents which are evidence of actual payment of revenue do not show the names of Tarkeshwar. The plaintiff has produced about 260 land revenue chalans and only one of these shows a payment of 4 annas said to have been made by Tarkeshwar and this entry was made by Kunj Behari Lal just when he was about to leave the plaintiff's service. The defence has produced no revenue chalans. All the canal irrigation papers are in the name of the plaintiff. There is a large volume of oral evidence to the effect that Nanku Pande and Duttan Tewari managed all the affairs. This evidence is given by Hartalika, Parbati, Udaiprakash, Ramgulam Singh, Sheo Singh, Kali Singh, Bekahal Pande, Dipnarayan Tewari, Ram-

Khelawan Singh, and many others. Kunj Bihari in his evidence indicates that the ijmali papers were with Dattan Tewari. This shows he was managing the property. Reviewing these documents, as a whole, they seem to me to bear clear indications that evidence was being created on behalf of Tarkeshwar. No admission has been brought home to the plaintiff or his mother and in view of the use that has been made of Ramrup's name it is impossible to say that any admission was made by him either. It is contended for the appellant that if Tarkeshwar was not the son of Ramsuraj the fact must have been known to the members of the family and the fraud would have been exposed long ago. But it was not a simple matter, as the volume of evidence presented in the present suit shows, and gotias who have no particular interest in the matter and were not affected one way or another whether Ramsuraj left a son or not, could not be expected to embark upon an expensive litigation for no immediate object. It was not until Debendra was married that it became possible to take the matter up. The defence attributes this litigation to Debendra's father-in-law, Hira Lal Missir a Police Sub Inspector and it may be that he has brought the matter to a head. But he is the only person who has been in a position to do so and has an interest in doing so. The documents, in my opinion do not make the conclusion at which I have already arrived on a consideration of the oral evidence as to the pregnancy of Harnandan Kuer and I find nothing in these papers which convincingly establishes Tarkeshwar's ancestry as alleged by the defence.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Permission was given in this case by the learned Registrar to the appellant to have type-written copies of the papers prepared instead of the ordinary printed paper-book. The learned Registrar apparently relied upon the provisions of r. 30 in Ch. IX of the Rules of the High Court which empowers him to exempt any appellant or respondent from the operation of the whole or any part of the rules of the Chapter. Now rule 1 directs that the paper-book shall be printed in accordance with the directions therein laid down. Rule 4 provides that in every case in which an appeal has been admitted the Registrar shall cause a paper-book to be prepared in accordance with the rules of this Chapter with the proviso that in small or urgent cases where good cause has been shown the Registrar may allow any party to put in typed copies. The construction placed upon r. 30 makes the proviso to r. 4 superfluous and r. 30 must be construed as subject to rr. 1 and 4. In my opinion the learned Registrar had not authority to exempt the appellant from having a printed paper-book prepared in this case.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 4879

July 4, 1924.

Present:—Justice Sir Amberson Marten, Kt.

A. CECIL COLE—PLAINTIFF

versus

NANALAL MORAJI DAVE AND ANOTHER
—DEFENDANTS.

Construction of document—Hire-purchase agreement—Agreement to sell—Property, when passes—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 78.

Under a hire-purchase agreement, in the sense in which it is understood in England, there is no absolute sale of the chattel but only a hiring of it by a person who has the option of returning it at any time before the various instalments are paid. Under such an agreement the property in the chattel does not pass to the purchaser until the whole price has been paid. [p. 192, col 1, p. 194, col 2]

An agreement entered into between the parties provided that the plaintiff had agreed to sell to the defendant on the hire-purchase system, for a certain sum of money, a certain number of motor-lorries in consideration of payment of the price by certain instalments settled between the parties. It was also provided that in case of failure to pay any of the instalments on the due date, the previous payments would be considered null and void. The lorries were not to be considered as sold until the final payment was made. The defendant was prohibited from mortgaging or disposing of the lorries until the final instalment was paid and the plaintiff had the right to seize the lorries wherever they may be. A portion of the price was paid at the time of the execution of the agreement and delivery of the lorries was given to the defendant and they were transferred to his name in the registers kept by the Commissioner of Police. Defendant paid some of the instalments and then made default. Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to recover from the defendant the balance of the unpaid instalments together with damages alleging that the defendant was merely a hirer of the lorries and in the alternative to recover the balance of the price if it was held that the agreement was one of sale;

Held, (1) that the agreement was one of sale providing for the price to be paid by instalments and that the property in the lorries had passed to the defendant on the execution of the document. [p. 195, col. 1.] (2) that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled only to claim the balance of the purchase-money which had not been paid by the defendant. [ibid.]

FACTS.—In this case the plaintiff made over certain motor vehicles to defendant No. 1 under an agreement, the material portion of which was as follows:—

"I have to-day agreed to sell to you on the hire-purchase system for Rs. 25,000 my nine lorries and accessories together with office furniture lying at present at the garage...In case of failure to pay any of the instalments on due date previous payments will be considered null and void and the lorries are not considered as sold until the final payment has been received. The purchaser has no right to mortgage or dispose of any lorries until the final amount has been paid" [A list of instalments was then given which made up the full amount of Rs 25,000.]

The defendant did not pay all the instalments, and pledged the vehicles with defendant No. 2. The plaintiff alleged in his suit that defendant No. 1 was merely a hirer of the vehicles and had no right to pledge them, and claimed the unpaid instalments and damages. In the alternative he prayed that if the defendant No. 1 be held to be a purchaser the plaintiff should be paid the balance of the price with interest.

Mr. Davar, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. V. Desai, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—[His Lordship after giving the facts of the case proceeded:—] The first point that really arises is what is the nature of the agreement which the parties entered into. Was it a hire-purchase agreement in the sense in which it is so understood in England, viz., no absolute sale, but only a hiring of the chattel by a person who has the option of returning it at anytime before the various instalments are paid? Or, on the other hand, despite the language which the parties have used, was it really a sale having regard to what the parties in fact agreed to do? Before I turn to the actual document in this case, I wish to keep these two points of principle clearly before me, so that when I come to the document, I can show what in particular are the relevant passages to be borne in mind.

Now there are two lines of authority illustrating what I have just said. The first line of cases illustrates a hire-purchase agreement proper, viz., where the hirer of a chattel has only an option to purchase the goods and is under no obligation to purchase. That is shown in Helby v. Matthews (1). A leading case on the other side of the line is Lee v. Butler (2) where notwithstanding the fact that the parties spoke of themselves as being hirers and so on, and notwithstanding that it was expressly agreed that no property other than as tenant should vest in the hirer until the whole of the payments of rent thereby reserved should have been actually paid, the Court there held that the hirer of the goods had agreed to buy them notwithstanding the language used in the agreement.

Then if I turn to Belsize Motor Supply Company v. Cox (3) the judgment of Mr. Justice Channell states the dividing line between these two classes of cases. In that particular case the owners of a motor vehicle let it to certain hirers for twenty-four calendar months at the rate of £15 12s 2d per calendar month. On the signing of the agreement the hirers were to pay, and did pay, £ 50 on account of hire in advance, and each subsequent payment was to be made in advance on specified dates. The hirers were not to re-let, sell, or part with the vehicle without the consent in writing of the owners. But if the hirers should, on or before the expiration of the twenty-four calendar months, be desirous of purchasing the vehicle they could do so by making the amount of hire paid equal to the amount of £422 11s 6d. Then if the hirers did certain things, of which parting with the possession of the vehicle without the owners' consent in writing was one, it was made lawful for the owners and they were authorised to take possession of the vehicle and terminate the agreement. Then it appears that while the agreement was subsisting, there being a sum due and unpaid on account of hire, the hirers without the consent of the owners pledged the vehicle to a pledgee who took it in good faith and without notice of the owners' rights. Subsequently the owners on hearing of the pledge demanded the vehicle from the pledgee, who refused to restore it. At the date of this demand and refusal there was a sum of £58 9s due and unpaid on account of hire.

Mr. Justice Channell, in delivering the judgment, said (page 250*):—

"The first question is whether this case comes within the principle of Helby v. Matthews (1) or that of Lee v. Butler (2) and later cases of the same class. To decide that question I have to see whether in this agreement of December 10, 1910, the Burgess Company, the original hirers, bound themselves to buy the motor cab. The case of Lee v. Butler (2) which was not dissented from in Helby v. Matthews (1), decided that where the hirer has agreed to pay all the instalments of purchase-money that amounts to an agreement to buy, and the case comes within s. 9 of the Factors Act, 1889, or s. 25 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. In Helby v. Matthews (1) it was decided that, as the hirer had an option to return the goods, the case did not come within the sections. When those cases had been decided the case of Hull Ropes Co., v. Adams (4) came before a Divisional Court. No report of Helby v. Matthews (1) had as yet been published in the Law Reports, and the Court reserved judgment until a report should appear. Having seen the report they decided that the facts in Hull Ropes Co., v. Adams (4) did not bring the case within the decision of Helby v. Matthews (1). There is no conflict between these cases. Where the agreement contains an obligation to pay the purchase-money it is an agreement to buy. In the present case there is a positive obligation to pay twenty-four instalments of £ 15 12 s. 2 d. That amounts to £ 374-12-s. There was also an obligation to pay on the signing of the agreement the sum of £ 50 'on account of hire in advance'. If £ 374 12 s. had been the entire sum which would have been necessary to enable the hirer to say that the cab was his property, the agreement would have been an agreement to purchase within the principle of Lee v. Butler (2) but £ 374 12 s. was short of the entire purchase-money by the exact sum of £ 50 (5). If the hirers had both paid the £ 50 and all the twenty-four instalments they would have paid up

(5) Both parties ignored as being immaterial the difference between £ 424 12s. (i. e. £ 50 + £ 374 12 s.) and the figure £ 424 11s. 6d. specified as the purchase price in clause 5 of the agreement of December 10, 1910.

the full amount required to purchase the cab; but the £ 50 would have been paid as deposit on account of purchase-money in advance. The document on the face of it gives the hirers an option to purchase at any time by paying up the difference between £ 424 11 s. 6 d. and the sum already paid. That is an option which no doubt the hirers would probably exercise unless it proved valueless, but it is none the less an option when they had paid the twenty-fourth instalment to decline to proceed with the purchase, and to claim a return of the £ 50 deposit. In my view they were never bound to pay more than £ 374 12 s. They never bound themselves to pay the whole sum of £ 424 11 s. 6 d. The case, therefore, comes within the principle of Helby v. Matthews (1) and not within Lee v. Butler (2)."

Then I may mention one more case of Lewis & Sons v. Thomas (6) where the head-note runs:—

"A hirer of personal chattels under a hiring agreement which gives him an option to purchase them upon payment of all the agreed instalments of rent, but imposes upon him no obligation to do so, is not the 'true owner' of the chattels within the meaning of s. 5 of the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882."

There in effect the Court thought that the case came within Helby v. Matthews (1).

Then in India there is a case of In re Linotype and Machinery Co. and Windsor Press (7) under the Stamp Act, where the Court held that the document in that case was an agreement and not a conveyance. I do not think I need go into the details of that case.

There is one more authority in Brij Coomaree v. Salamandar Fire Insurance Company (8), where it is pointed out that the rights of parties are governed by the provisions of the Indian Contract Act, and that if they agree to do certain things, then in law certain consequences are bound to ensue. Sir Francis Maclean there says (page 823*):—

"But, if you find in a contract certain terms from which, when they exist, the Legislature says that certain consequences shall ensue, these consequences must ensue; otherwise, it is difficult to see what object there can be in codifying the law upon the question. For these reasons I think that the property in the goods was in the plaintiff and that they were covered by the policy of insurance."

Now the very expression "hire purchase agreement" is not one that originated in this country. It is clearly a form of agreement which has originated in England and has been created by those engaged in the trade of particular articles. Substantially in this country there is little or no authority on hire-purchase agreements. At any rate none has been cited to me, although there has been some reference to some unauthorised reports which I am told are not even in the Bar Library. Under these circumstances I propose to follow the distinctions adopted in the House of Lords between these two classes of authorities, and to consider whether in the suit agreement there was an obligation by the purchaser to buy. As was said by Lord Herschell in Helby v. Matthews (1) (page 477*):—

"Reliance was placed on the decision in Lee v. Butler (2), and it was said that the present case was not, in principle, distinguishable from it. There seems to me to be the broadest distinction between the two cases. There was there an agreement to buy. The purchase-money was to be paid in two instalments, but as soon as the agreement was entered into there was an absolute obligation to pay both of them, which might have been enforced by action. The person who obtained the goods could not insist upon returning them and so absolve himself from any obligation to make further payment. Unless there were a breach of contract by the party who engaged to make the payments the transaction necessarily resulted in a sale. That there was in that case an agreement to buy appears to me, as it did to the Court of Appeal, to be beyond question."

tion is to be paid as under" and a list of instalments is given which makes up the full purchase-price of Rs. 25,000. I read that document as meaning that the purchaser was bound in any event to pay the whole of this consideration of Rs. 25,000, and that it would be a breach of contract on which he could be sued if he failed to pay up any of the instalments. I do not overlook the fact that the agreement provides that "in case of failure to pay any of the instalments on due date previous payments will be considered null and void." But that may be referable to the kind of measure of damages that the parties had in mind. I cannot consider those words as implying that the purchaser had an option to return the vehicles provided he forfeited the past instalments actually paid.

Then there is a provision that "the lorries are not considered as sold until the final payment has been received." But there again one must consider what is the principle on which the dividing line in the above cases has been laid down. If then there was a sale, on the true construction of this document, I cannot read this clause as meaning that the property was not to pass notwithstanding that the purchaser definitely agreed to buy the lorries and took delivery of the lorries there and then, and agreed to pay the purchase-money by instalments. If one turns to s. 78 of the Indian Contract Act, it is clear that in such a case the property in the goods would ordinarily pass.

There is one further point that the agreement speaks of delivery of all the lorries having been given that day. That is an expression which is applicable as between a vendor and a purchaser. For a mere hirer who has taken the goods on hire, delivery perhaps is not quite the apt word to use.

Then similarly the fact that the motor lorries are to be transferred to the name of the purchaser in the motor register kept by the Commissioner of Police, is at least in keeping with the view that the defendant was to be the purchaser although the purchase-money was to be paid by instalments. At the moment I have only before me the Act itself, viz., The Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, s. 10 of which provides: "The owner of every motor vehicle shall cause it to be registered in the prescribed manner." The rules under that Act which are before me are "The Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules, 1915" which are set out in "The Motorists

Guide (India), 2nd Edition" of Mr. Giles, Head Police Office, Bombay. But I am informed by Counsel for the plaintiff that since then other rules have been issued by Government, particularly in connection with motor lorries, and that under those rules a person who plies a vehicle for hire and some other persons who are not necessarily the true owners have to be registered. If that is so, then the point that these lorries were to be transferred to the name of the defendant is not so significant as it otherwise would have been.

What has really happened here is that this is a home-drawn document, in which the parties have talked glibly about a hire-purchase agreement without really understanding what it means; and I have to make the best sense I can of it. In my opinion on its true construction it was really a sale where payment was to be made by instalments, and it comes within the principle of Lee v. Butler (2) and not within Helby v. Matthews (1). Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the property in these lorries passed to the purchaser on the execution of the document.

That being so, the relief which the vendor is entitled to is to claim the balance of the purchase-money for goods sold and delivered. It will be seen on looking at the plaint, prayer (d), that the plaintiff's claim is put in the alternative there, viz., first for unpaid instalments and also for damages, and alternatively "in the event of this Court holding that there was an agreement of sale of the said nine lorries to the first defendant by a writing dated May 21, 1923, the first defendant may be ordered to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the price, viz., Rs. 12,000, with interest thereon at nine per cent. per annum from November 1, 1923." That, in my opinion, is the relief which the plaintiff is entitled to as against defendant.

A mortgage-deed stated that the mortgage was for a period of four years and that interest would be calculated every two years:

Held, that in the absence of an express stipulation in the deed for payment of compound interest, the deed could not be construed as meaning that compound interest was to be charged after every two years [p. 196, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 27th May 1924, modifying that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Sargodha, dated the 14th August 1923.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Lala Arjun Das, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main contest between the parties in this redemption suit raged round the question of the rate of interest. The mortgage is very old one and the mortgagor was the plaintiff's ancestor Ranpat. By a registered deed dated the 24th May 1869, Ranpat mortgaged with possession his house situated in Miani, District Shahpur, for the sum of Rs. 1,100. The mortgagees were Bawa Partap Singh Pir Chanchal Nath and Har Sahai. Rs. 600 out of the mortgage-money was due to Bawa Partap Singh and the rest, i.e. Rs. 500, to the other two mortgagees jointly. The house was later on partitioned so that Bawa Partap Singh got exclusive possession of a portion of the house in proportion to the amount due to him. It is this portion which the plaintiffs sue to redeem. The rate of interest stated in the deed of mortgage is Rs. 80 per cent. per annum and the defendants plead that that was the rate agreed upon though they do not claim the full amount that would be due at that rate. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contend that the rate agreed upon was Rs. 80 per annum for whole of the mortgage-debt and that the words "fi sadi" (per cent.) in the deed were subsequently forged. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that the rate stipulated upon was Rs. 80 per annum for the whole amount.

It is urged in this second appeal that this finding was erroneous as no trace of forgery being discernable in the deed of mortgage, the rate should be taken to be what is stated therein. The parties to the transaction and the scribe and the marginal witnesses of the deed are all dead; but the circumstantial evidence which the Courts below have detailed in their judgments is so strong that it irresistably leads to the conclusion at which they have arrived. That evidence is briefly as below:—

(1) Rs. 535 was due by the mortgagor to Bawa Partap Singh mortgagee on a bond and the rate of interest stated in the bond was 10 annas per cent. per mensem. Similarly Rs. 400 was due by the mortgagor to Pir Chanchal Nath on a bond and the rate of interest payable thereon was 8 annas per cent. per mensem. These bond debts, it appears, were included in the mortgage debt and these previous dealings show conclusively that the mortgagor could borrow money on simple bond at the ordinary rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem. It is, therefore, inconceivable that on converting unsecured debts into secured debts the creditors demanded and the debtors agreed to pay interest at the unusually exorbitant rate of Rs. 80 per cent. per annum. The debtor was not an ignorant rustic but a shrewd Hindu citizen of a town who presumably could not have found it difficult to raise money on the security of his house at the ordinary market rate of interest.

(2) By a registered-deed, dated the 29th June 1871, Pir Chanchal Nath and Har Sahai sold their rights as mortgagees to one Ishar Das and received from him Rs. 500 principal and Rs. 80 on account of interest for about two years. At the rate of Rs. 80 per cent. the interest would have come to Rs. 800 for two years and if the rate had been Rs. 80 per cent. they would have taken care to realize interest at that rate. It is not likely that Pir Chanchal Nath and Har Sahai forgot that the rate was Rs. 80 per cent. This clearly indicates that to the knowledge of these mortgagees the rate was Rs. 80 per annum on the whole amount of the mortgage debt.

From the above and some other circumstances, which it is not necessary to detail here, it follows that the rate of interest agreed upon was Rs. 80 on Rs. 1,100 per annum, and not Rs. 80 per cent. Even if no forgery was committed it can be said without any hesitation that the words "fi sadi" were written by the scribe by mistake, as the rate of interest is generally given 'per cent.' and the scribes are in the habit of writing the words 'per cent.' along with the rate.

Further the defendants stated that the plaintiffs were liable to pay compound interest, but there was no stipulation in the deed for payment of compound interest. The mortgage was for a period of four years, and it was stated in the deed that interest will be calculated every two years. From this the defendants conclude that compound interest was to be charged after every two years. No such conclusion could be justified and the point is of no importance because the defendants do not demand payment of the full amount of even simple interest at the rate of Rs. 80 per cent.

The third point relates to a dispute between the two sons of Bawa Partap Singh inter se. They are co-defendants in the case and one of them states that he is entitled to the whole of the mortgage-money to the exclusion of other by virtue of the Will of Bawa Partap Singh. The learned District Judge rightly refused to give a decision on their rights of inheritance to determine which a separate suit should be brought. The appeal, therefore, fails and I dismiss it with costs.

The cross-objections were withdrawn by the respondents' Counsel, Bakhshi Tek Chand, before the commencement of the hearing of the appeal.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 41, 45—Death of minor—Guardian, whether ceases—Court's power to call for accounts—Refusal to give accounts—Fine—Progressive fine, levy of.

On the death of a ward the powers of the guardian as such do cease, and the Court may properly require him to deliver in any accounts in his possession or control. [p. 198, col. 1.]

When a ward dies, the Court should generally direct the guardian to deliver the property into Court or to deliver property to some person producing an heirship certificate. In very rare cases the latter precaution might be dispensed with, but in that case the Court would otherwise guarantee the interests of possible claimants. The possible dangers, therefore, from the misuse of the Court's powers under s. 41 (3) of the Guardians and Wards Act in the case of a deceased minor do not seem to be very serious and from their existence it should not be deduced that the Legislature intended that on the ward dying, the guardian should be completely beyond control of the Court in his dealings with the estate of the deceased into possession of which he has come under the order of the Court. [p. 197, col. 2; p. 198, col. 1.]

Where the guardian refuses to give full accounts a fine of Rs. 25 inflicted on him under s. 45, Guardians and Wards Act, is not inappropriate [p. 198, col. 1]

An order for accumulative and . . . fine can, however, be levied under s. 45, Guardians and Wards Act, only in the case of recusancy, which is something more than mere disobedience, and if it is intended to use those powers, as a general rule, it is better to fix some date on which the guardian is to comply with the order of the Court or demonstrate why he is unable to do so and that order may properly contain the penalty that if the Court's order is not complied with, fine will be inflicted on the principle of progression as laid down in the section. JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned District Judge of Hyderabad had directed the guardian to file accounts within one month and directed that if the accounts were not so filed within one month, notice was to issue under s. 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act. On the 13th of April, the District Judge being dissatisfied with the accounts of the guardian, Fatehchand, called on the guardian to render accounts and having called on him to render accounts and the guardian having failed to do so, fined him Rs. 25 with a recurring fine of Re. 1 per diem until the order was complied with. These orders have been objected to by Fatehchand on various grounds:—

It appears that there were several minors, one boy and some girls. The appointment of two guardians Fatehchand and Kalachand was made in consequence of a settlement and Fatehchand was to be the active guardian whereas Kalachand was the checking guardian. Kalachand put in an application to be relieved of his duty, but no orders have as yet been passed on that matter. There is an allegation that the family was actually joint. In that case, it was alleged by Fatehchand that at any rate on the death of the minor boy, his functions of the guardian have ceased. This position is hotly contested by Musammam Parpat Bai and it need not be decided at present.

The main point raised by Fatehchand in the present proceedings is, that the Court has no power to order the delivery of accounts or any property, on the ground that the minor boy is now dead. It is not very clear what position he imagines himself at present to possess, but the objection if it has any validity at all must be more to the form rather than to the substance of the order, because if he is still a guardian he can be dealt with under s. 45 (b) and if he has ceased to be guardian he can be dealt with under s. 45 (c). Notice, however, has gone to him under s. 41 (3) which is only applicable to the case, when the powers of the guardian of property have ceased. Now the argument of Fatehchand is that the circumstances which lead to the ceasing of the powers of the guardian are fully stated in s. 41 (c) and until it is shown that one of these three contingencies has occurred, it cannot be said his power as such has ceased. But it would seem that to suppose that after the death of a ward the person who had been a guardian continued to be a guardian would be preposterous. If there be no ward, there can be no guardian. Similarly if there be no wife, there can be no husband. It is not to be supposed that the Legislature did not foresee this difficulty or did not contemplate so common a case as that of a death of a child. Section 41 must be read in so far as possible to give effect to what may be supposed to be the reasonable intentions of the Legislature.

It cannot be denied that it would be expedient that the Court should continue to have control over the action of the ex-guardian. A guardian in some sense is the Officer of the Court and the heirs and relatives of the deceased ward might reasonably complain if the Court would not assist them to ascertain the condition of the estate and tell them how it has been dealt with during the time during which it had been under the control of the guardian. It seems to us unnecessary to suppose that the Legislature wished to guard against dangers of the Court mistaking its functions, that is the fear that the Court might, under colour of directing the guardian to deliver the property in his possession under cl. (3), go on to ascertain questions of title and settle doubtful claims. It appears to us when a ward dies, the Court should generally direct the guardian to deliver the property into Court or to deliver property to some person producing an heirship certificate. In very rare cases the latter precaution might be dispensed with, but in that case the Court would otherwise guarantee the interests of possible claimants. The possible dangers, therefore, from the misuse of the Court's powers under s. 41 (3) in the case of a deceased minor do not seem to be very serious and from their existence we are not to deduce that the Legislature intended that on the ward dying, the guardian should be completely beyond control of the Court in his dealings with the estate of the deceased into possession of which he has come under the order of the Court.

Nor is it necessary to read s. 41 in so an inconvenient way. Paragraph 2 no doubt gives list of contingencies on the happening of which the powers of the guardian cease, but they are not necessarily exhaustive and even if they are exhaustive it is arguable that (c) applies. When the ward owing to death ceases to exist he ceases also to be a minor. If the Legislature had intended to confine the operation of s. 41 (c) to the case where a ward attains majority nothing would have been easier than to have said so. Even if that be taken as a forced interpretation still it does not seem necessarily to follow that the contingencies given in cl. (2) are exhaustive. Clause (3), the clause with which we are at present concerned, says "If for any cause the powers of a guardian cease" and it is hardly disputable that when there is no ward, the power of a guardian as guardian must cease. And it would appear, therefore, that on the death of a ward, the powers of guardian as such do cease and the Court may properly require him to deliver in any accounts in his possession or under control. So far we agree with the learned District Judge and we think his order so far is proper.

Inasmuch as the guardian refused to give full accounts, we think the fine of Rs. 25 inflicted is not inappropriate.

The further order for accumulative and progressive fine seems if not without jurisdiction yet inappropriate. The fine is to be levied in the case of recusancy which is something more than mere disobedience and if it is intended to use those powers, as a general rule, it is better to fix some date on which the guardian is to comply with the orders of the Court or demonstrate why he is unable to do so and that order may properly contain the penalty that if the Court's order is not complied with, fine will be inflicted on the principle of progression as laid down in the section.

As it is, we modify the order dated the 13th April 1923 in Miscellaneous Appeal

No. 15 of 1923 by upholding the sentence of fine of Rs. 25, but by directing the District Judge now to fix a date in which the accounts are to be produced subject in default to such penalty in the case of recusancy as the District Judge may think fit.

Costs of miscellaneous appeal and revision application to be borne by the appellant. One set of costs allowed in both cases.

Order modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 10, 11—Cross-suits between principal and agent—Stay of one suit—Decision of other suit—Res judicata.

A principal filed a suit against his agent for the recovery of a certain sum of money alleged to be due to the former on certain transactions entered into by the agent on behalf of the principal. The agent also instituted a suit against the principal for a certain sum of money on similar grounds. The latter suit was stayed pending the decision of the former suit. The trial of the principal's suit was proceeded with and the suit was dismissed, the dismissal being confirmed on appeal.

Held, that the decision of the Trial Court in the principal's suit operated as res judicata in the agent's suit with regard to all matters which were in dispute in the former suit. [p. 199, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 25th July 1924, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 29th February 1924.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The firm of Saghru Mal Harcharan Das (to be described hereinafter as principals), who carried on business at Ludhiana employed Dhanpat Rai-Diwana Chand (to be described hereinafter as agents) as their agents to do business on their behalf at Karachi. The dealings between the parties led to certain disputes between them, with the result that in August 1913, the principals instituted a suit at Ludhiana for the recovery of Rs. 716-2-3 from the agents. In September 1913 the agents brought an action at Karachi against the principals claiming a sum of Rs. 3,562-8-0.

The plaint in the latter suit was returned by the Karachi Court with the direction that it should be presented to a competent Court in the Punjab. Consequently this suit too was instituted in the Ludhiana Court but was stayed under s. 10 of the C. P. C. pending the decision of the previously instituted suit.

The suit brought by the principals was, after a protracted trial, dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, and the appeal preferred against his decision was disallowed by a Division Bench of the High Court. The action brought by the agents was then taken up and the principal question for determination was whether the decision in the former suit operated as res judicata. In order to determine this question it is necessary to examine carefully the pleadings and the issues in that suit and the decision arrived at by the Courts.

Now, the claim in the former suit related to various transactions set out in Appendices A, B, C and D attached to the plaint in that case. The principals claimed, inter alia, Rs. 652-13-0 on account of the balance due to them on transactions detailed in Appendices A and B, Rs. 2,300 the total of the two items advanced by them in cash to the agents and Rs. 900 5 0 in respect of a wheat transaction mentioned in Appendix D. They also urged that the transactions set out in Appendix C were not binding upon them, and that they were wrongly debited with the losses on those transactions.

The agents while admitting the receipt of Rs. 2,300 stated that only Rs. 651-9-6 represented the balance due by them on items contained in Appendices A and B and repudiated the rest of the claim. They pleaded that the transactions in Appendix C were binding on the principals, and that they resulted in a loss amounting to Rs. 6,209-13-0. They denied their liability for the payment of any sum of money to the principals, and asserted that they were entitled to recover from the latter Rs. 3,562 8 0 for which they had instituted a suit which had been stayed under s. 10 of the C. P. C.

The Trial Judge decided that though the sums Rs. 651-9-6 on transactions recorded in Appendices A and B, and Rs. 2,300 on account of advances were due by the agents to the principals, those items were wiped out by the losses suffered by the principals on transactions detailed in Appendix C. These losses, which were found to amount to Rs. 6,209-13-0 left a balance in favour of the agents.

Now, we may say at once that there was a clear finding by the Subordinate Judge that Rs. 651-9-6 were due to the principals on transactions mentioned in Appendices A and B and this finding was not impeached by them in their appeal to the High Court. They cannot now be allowed to raise the question that they were entitled to a larger sum on those transactions. The main dispute relates to the decision on the issues relating to the transactions in Appendix C and on this issue the Trial Court decided not only that the principals were bound by those transactions but also that the losses incurred on their behalf by the agents amounted to Rs. 6,209-13-0. It is to be observed that but for these losses the principals would have been entitled to a decree for a large sum of money, and that in order to wipe out the amounts due to them on other transactions it was necessary to determine the amount payable by them on account of the aforesaid losses. It is true that in their appeal to the High Court they did not challenge the finding of the Trial Judge on the amount of the losses but confined themselves to the question whether they were bound by the transactions. A perusal of the judgment of the High Court, however, shows that the learned Judges after disposing of all the points urged by the appellants, confirmed the decree passed by the Trial Court and dismissed the appeal in toto. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the decision of the Trial Court confirmed as it was by the High Court, operates as res judicata and that the principals are now precluded from re-agitating the question of the amount of the losses incurred on their behalf by the agents.

Mr. Badri Das for the appellants also impeaches the correctness of the order of the Karachi Court returning the plaint for presentation to a Court of competent jurisdiction in the Punjab, but that order has now become final and cannot be challenged by either of the parties.

On the question of future interest on the amount due to the agents we find that they claimed interest on the sum which was alleged to be due to them at the date of the institution of the suit, and there is no reason why they should not be allowed interest at the usual rate.

The result is that we dismiss the appeals preferred by Sughru Mal-Harcharn Das with costs, and accepting the appeal preferred by Dhanpat Rai-Diwan Chand, we grant them a decree for Rs. 3,549-2-6 with interest at 6 per cent. on that sum from the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of payment. The defendants must pay the costs on that sum to the appellants in all the Courts.

Trust—Religious endowment—Person not entitled to benefit permitted to share—Trustees, duty of—Zoroastrian Temple at Rangoon—Non-Parsi Zoroastrian, whether entitled to benefit—Injunction

The Zoroastrian religion not only permits but enjoins the conversion to that religion of persons born in other religions and of non-Zoroastrian parents. [p. 202, col. 2.]

In spite of such permission, however, the Zoroastrians, ever since their advent into India, have never attempted to convert anyone into their religion. [ibid.]

The benefits of the Zoroastrian Temple at Rangoon are confined to persons who possess the double qualification of being Zoroastrians and racial Parsis, and Zoroastrians, who are not racial Parsis, have no right of entering into the Temple and may, therefore, be excluded or extruded from the Temple by the Trustees [p. 204, cols. 1 & 2.]

But it does not follow that the trustees are bound to exclude such non-Parsi Zoroastrians from the Temple. Still less does it follow that in an action to which the trustees are not parties, and in which, therefore, no indirect remedy can be claimed, a direct claim by the Parsi Zoroastrians against a non-Parsi Zoroastrian who enters the temple, as if for a tort committed by such person. [p. 204, col. 2.]

For a trespass upon temple land, the only person who can bring an action for injunction is the person in possession of the land, that is, the trustee. It may be that in India it may be convenient to allow such a suit by certain worshippers against others. But if so, it must, at any rate, be established that the juxtaposition of the two sets of persons is so repugnant to their faith as to justify at the entrance of one set into the temple the departure of the other, so that it is, as it were, trespass to the person. [p. 208, col. 1.]

When property is set apart for public or charitable uses, it will be a malversation to apply any of the funds for persons who are not objects of the trust. Those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require; and if there is a surplus, it must be left to the Courts to make a cy pres application of it. But when the subject-matter of such a trust or charity is the rendering of some convenience or service of such a nature that it will not hurt the lawful recipients if others share with them, the trustees are not bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share. They may do so; they may treat all such persons as trespassers and say, Sic volo sic jubeo, stet pro ratione voluntas. But if they choose to admit to the benefit of some park or garden established for a particular district some persons from over the border or to admit to a public library destined for a particular Municipality persons from outside, or admit to the hearing of a lecture by a University Professor persons not members of the University, this of itself furnishes no ground of complaint. If the numbers admitted are too large or the persons are disorderly or unpleasant in their habits or in any way substantially interfere with the convenience or benefit of those for whom the endowment was created, the trustees may be required to exclude them. But the mere claim of A that B shall not share in such a benefit because B is not within the terms of the foundation is not one that Courts would encourage. [p. 204, col. 2; 205, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Lord Phillimore.—The circumstances of this case are as follows:—

Sometime in 1899 a Goanese Christian named Jones with his wife arrived in Rangoon. They were in humble circumstances, and the wife applied for assistance to a Parsi of good position at Rangoon, Bomanji Cowasji, stating that she too was a Parsi. He befriended her till he went to England in 1900, and then asked his brother Sapurji Cawasji to look after her and the child to which she had just given birth, the respondent Bella. The father died, and when her mother died shortly afterwards, Sapurji, who was a defendant in this suit, but died pending the appeal, took Bella into his own house and he and his wife treated her as their own child.

When Bella was nearly 14, it was desired that the initiation ceremony into the Zoroastrian religion called Navjot should be performed for her, but the local Head Priest at Rangoon refused, chiefly because—as it appears from his evidence—he thought it would be unpopular with the Parsi community. Advantage was then taken of the temporary presence of some other priest, who performed the ceremony; and after that invitations were sent by the Head Priest to Bella to come with Sapurji and his wife to the temple on festival days. Three such invitations were sent, the High Priest said, with the expectations that they would not be accepted, but on the third occasion, being 21st March 1915, Sapurji brought her and put her within sacred precincts facing the sacred fire, and in such a position that she went through all the ceremonies like other worshippers.

This proceedings gave great offence to a number of members of the Parsi community in Rangoon, and on the 31st March, this suit was brought by three members of the Parsi community, who stated that they brought it not only on their own behalf but on behalf of a large number of members of the Parsi community at Rangoon, against Bella and against Sapurji, stating that the Temple was held on trust for the free and unrestricted use of the Parsi inhabitants in Rangoon professing the Zoroastrian faith, further stating that it was alleged that the mother of Bella was a Parsi, and that Bella had been validly converted or initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, but denying that this was so or indeed could be so, and averring that the defendants had by their acts "not only wounded the religious feelings entertained by religiously inclined Parsis, but also caused the desecration of the said sacred Temple".

In another paragraph of the plaint, they stated that only members of the Parsi community professing the Zoroastrian religion were entitled to the use of the Temple, to the access of the sacred precincts and to attend, witness or take part in any religious ceremonies held therein, and that it was never the intention of the Parsi community that the children of non-Parsi fathers should be allowed the use of the Temple. They further said that even assuming that Bella could be duly admitted into the Zoroastrian religion, and assuming that her mother was a Parsi, even then she could not be considered a Parsi or a member of the Parsi population. They prayed for a declaration that Bella was not entitled to use the Temple or to attend or to participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein and for injunctions to restrain her from entering the Temple and Sapurji from taking her there.

Sapurji, in his own name and as guardian for Bella, put in their written statement. In this it was contended that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, that the defendant Bella was entitled to attend the Temple and the ceremonies and caused no des-cretion by her presence and it was stated that her mother was a Parsi that she had been brought up from early infancy as a Parsi and in the Zoroastrian faith and that she came within the terms of the trust of the Temple.

The following issues were then settled :

"1. Whether the plaint discloses any cause of action ?

2. Whether this suit is maintainable ?

3. Who are entitled to the benefit of the Fire Temple Trust ?

4. Is the first defendant the daughter of a Parsi mother.

5. Is it possible for the first defendant, being a daughter of a non-Parsi father to be initiated (a) into the Zoroastrian Religion and (b) into the Parsi Community ?"

"6. If it was possible, whether the ceremonies adopted for the purpose were defective (the second defendant to give particulars of the ceremonies performed at the initiation of the first defendant within one week, and the plaintiffs to state within one week thereafter whether, and if so, in what respects they contend that these ceremonies were inefficacious) :

and the case was set down for a preliminary hearing on the first and second issues.

The Judge decided these points in favour of the plaintiffs ; and thereupon some oral evidence was taken before the Judge at Rangoon, and a mass of evidence covering 664 pages of the record was taken on commission at Bombay.

It appears that this was not the first occasion in modern times in which the question of the admissibility of a person who was not a racial Parsi, but who had become a convert to the Zoroastrian religion, to participate in the religious services and enter the temples of the Parsis had arisen.

In 1903 a French woman had declared that she had become a convert to the Zoroastrian religion and had married a Parsi gentleman of position at Bombay. Her claim to participate in religious worship had given rise to much excitement in the Parsi community, and seven Parsis, one of whom was the French woman's husband, had brought a suit in the High Court of Bombay against the trustees of the Parsi endowments, first making a general case of some misfeasances requiring the intervention of the Court, and, secondly, claiming a declaration that the trust deeds ought to be construed as admitting to their benefits any persons professing the Zoroastrian religion whether a racial Parsi or not.

After a prolonged litigation, this suit, except in so far as it prayed for a correction of the general misfeasances, was dismissed; and the Judges, for reasons which will have to be more minutely entered into, held that the various endowments were limited to the use of people who as well as being Zoroastrian were also racial Parsis. But the controversy had not been forgotten, and its echoes are to be heard in the evidence given on commission in the present case.

Young, J., in the preliminary judgment given in the present case, held that the plaintiffs could not sue for trespass on land or in the Temple, but that they might have a third cause of action which he described as an interference with their right to exclusive worship. He thought that they had sufficiently alleged this right and its infringement, that the right was one which had been often upheld by the Courts, and that the suit could be brought without joining the trustee or without obtaining the consent of the Advocate-General. When he came to his later decision upon the whole case, he described the injury as "an injury to the plaintiffs' individual right to worship undisturbed by the intrusion of a person not belonging to their faith," and applying his mind to the fifth and sixth issues, he held that Bella could be initiated into the Zoroastrian religion and into the Parsi community; that the ceremonies adopted for the purpose were sufficient, and that, therefore, there was no intrusion of a person not belonging to the plaintiffs' faith, and it became immaterial to decide issues Nos. 3 and 4. Accordingly he dismissed the suit.

When the matter came before the Chief Court, on appeal, the Judges, though apparently they heard one continuous argument, gave two judgments: the first in respect of the preliminary issues. In this they confirmed the actual decision of Young, J., but enlarged the plaintiffs' cause of action, saying that they might treat it as an injury to themselves, that Bella, even though she were a Zoroastrian, yet not being a Parsi, came to the Temple worship.

This made it necessary for the Judges in the Chief Court to determine the third issue, viz., who are entitled to the benefits of the Fire Temple Trust; and they held that it was a trust for a religion and not for a race. They then held in agreement with Young, J., that Bella could be and was converted or initiated into the Zoroastrian religion, and, therefore, they concurred with him in dismissing the suit.

The Judges in the Chief Court took the view that fourth issue might also have been decided in favour of Bella, i.e., that her mother was a Parsi, but that this fact was unimportant, except as leading up to her conversion or initiation. Their Lordships agree with this. In their view it is settled that as regards the racial claim, maternity is of no importance.

The appeal to their Lordships' Board has raised among other questions the actuality and validity of Bella's conversion and initiation; but on this point their Lordships see no reason for differing from the judgment of the Chief Court.

In the great controversy in the Bombay case, Dinsaw Manockji Petit v. Jamsetji Jeejebhoy (1) the two learned Judges (one of whom was himself a Parsi), came to the following conclusions thus expressed by the Parsi Judge, Davar, J., :—

"1. That the Zoroastrian religion not only permits but enjoins the conversion of a person born in another religion and of non-Zoroastrian parents.

"2. That although such conversion was permissible, the Zoroastrians, ever since their advent into India 1200 years ago, have never attempted to convert anyone into their religion.

"3. That there is not a single instance proved before the Court of a person born of both non-Zoroastrian parents ever having been admitted into the Zoroastrian religion professed by the Parsis in India."

It is true that as regards the quantum of the necessary ceremonial on initiation, Davar, J., expressed an opinion that a piece of ritual called Burushnun was an essential part; but in this matter he was travelling outside anything necessary for the case before him; and their Lordships do not find that Beaman, J., the other Judge, concurred with him as to this and they think that the evidence given in the present case warranted the decision to which the Chief Court came that this additional ceremonial was not necessary.

It follows, therefore, that the points which their Lordships have now to determine are whether the trusts of the Temple are for the benefit of all persons professing the Zoroastrian religion or limited to those who, professing that religion, are also racial Parsis in the sense in which that word is understood in the Parsi community; and, secondly, whether if Bella, not being a racial Parsi, is not a person within the benefits of the Temple Trust, this fact gives the plaintiffs any right of direct action against her and against her guardian.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiffs was the same as that of the contention of the defendants in the Bombay case, namely, that all these trusts were intended for Parsis in the limited sense, i.e. :—

"First.—The descendants of the original emigrants into India from Persia who profess the Zoroastrian religion.

"Secondly.—The descendants of the Zoroastrians in Persia who were not amongst the original emigrants, but who are of the same stock and have since that date, from time to time, come to India and have settled here, either permanently or temporarily, and who profess the Zoroastrian religion."

"Thirdly.—The children of a Parsi father by an alien mother, if such children are admitted into the religion of their fathers and profess the Zoroastrian religion."

Now the origin of the Temple, the right to worship at which is in dispute in the present case, is as follows :—

On the 24th November 1863 the Deputy-Commissioner at Rangoon, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, granted to Bajunji Cowasji and Sapurji a parcel of land in the town of Rangoon of a certain size "upon trust to build and maintain upon the said parcel of land a temple for the use of Parsi population".

It was provided that the Deputy Commissioner might nominate new trustees, and that if a Temple was not erected within a year, he might revoke the grant.

On the 14th August, 1882—probably because there had been delay in building the Temple—a re grant was made to new trustees upon trust for the same intents and purposes as the old grant, with like powers to appoint new trustees and a similar power of revocation if no temple was built within a year.

Previously on the 11th January 1859 the then Deputy Commissioner had granted to two Parsi gentlemen another piece of land upon trust to maintain it "as a cemetery and to the free use of persons of the Parsi denomination". There was a similar power given to the Deputy Commissioner to appoint new trustees and a power of revocation in case the land was applied to other uses. This grant was again renewed also on the 14th August 1882.

Some disputes having arisen as to the Temple, a suit was brought to have a new trustee appointed, and a scheme of management framed; and on the 20th March 1889 the Recorder appointed Bajunji Cowasji sole trustee and ordered a scheme to be framed.

About the same time, a similar suit had been brought in respect of the burial ground, and by an order of the same date the same person was appointed trustee and a similar order to frame a scheme was made. The scheme in respect of the Temple gave the trustee charge of the Temple and its appurtenances with duty to manage and improve as funds permitted and power to build a range of shops on part of the trust lands, borrowing money for the purpose. After re-payment of monies borrowed the rest was to be applied for the current expenses of the Fire Temple and the Parsi Burial Ground. In this way and to this extent the two properties were brought together.

When the scheme for the burial ground was to be framed, there was a serious dispute with regard to children of Parsi fathers who died without having gone through the ceremonies of initiation, and eventually the scheme was framed in the following words :—

"1. The Burial ground shall be used for burying persons who shall at his or her death be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion and no other.

"Explanation.—No one shall be taken to be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion who has not been duly invested with the Sudra and Kusti, in accordance with the rites prescribed by that religion, provided, nevertheless, that children born of fathers following the Zoroastrian religion, and brought up in that faith, and dying before the age of 14 years and three months, without having been invested with the Sudra and Kusti, may be taken to be actually professing the Zoroastrian religion, but children dying after having attained that age without having been invested with the Sudra and Kusti shall not be taken to have professed the Zoroastrian religion unless his or her investiture was prevented by unforeseen and unavoidable circumstances."

It is suggested for the defendants that this document shows that the stress of the matter was laid upon the religion and not upon the race.

One other document must be mentioned. Apparently it took a long time before the Temple or at any rate the present Temple was built, and on the 20th August 1904, Bajunji Cowasji executed a deed of declaration of trust reciting that he and his brother had built at their charge a fire temple upon the trust lands so that the same might form part of the said trusts and be for the use of the Parsi inhabitants of Rangoon, and purporting to declare for himself and his successors-in-office that he held the fire temple "for the use of the Parsi inhabitants of Rangoon free and unrestricted but subject notwithstanding to the tenets of the pure Zoroastrian religion and to the scheme prescribed by the Court."

The defendants' as their Lordships' bar contended that this was an attempt to alter the trust and as such should be rejected, but in their written statement they accepted it as a valid document. So far as it goes, it rather makes in the plaintiff's favour, but their Lordships are not disposed to attach grave importance to it.

The Chief Court—as already stated—considered that the effect of these documents was to impose a trust for the benefit of persons professing the Zoroastrian religion and no others.

Their Lordships agree with the latter part of this proposition. Parsis who cease to be Zoroastrians have, in their Lordships' view, no claim. But upon the whole and after much consideration, they think that the benefits are confined to persons who possess the double qualification of Zoroastrians and racial Parsis.

The judgment in the Bombay case travelled over much ground—indeed, in their Lordships' opinion, much unnecessary ground—but both Judges came to the conclusion that the various trusts in that case must be construed as being confined to persons who were of the Zoroastrian religion and racial Parsis. There were several trusts, and the expressions in the deeds were different; but the word Parsi never appeared in them, and the word Zoroastrian or some equivalent religious word was used. Sometimes the trusts were for the members of the Zoroastrian community of Bombay; other phrases were similar. Nevertheless, both Judges came to the conclusion that they must be read as has been already stated.

Davar, J. Thus expressed himself:—

"A Juddin (that is a Gentile) may become a Zoroastrian, but how he ever could possibly become a member of 'the Holy Zoroastrian Anjuman of Bombay' or be one of 'the members of the Zoroastrian Community of Bombay' or become one of the 'Anjuman of the Mazdiasni faith,' passes my comprehension. A Juddin converted to Zoroastrianism had never come into existence. Such a person could not possibly have been within the contemplation of the donors and founders: the possibility of such a being coming into existence would be so new and novel that if the donor ever conceived such an idea and intended to include him in his benefaction, he would certainly designate him separately and specially and not include him in the general description of the community of his then existing co-religionists and their descendants."

Beaman, J., said:—

"The question is not whether the Zoroastrian religion permits conversion, but whether, when these trusts were founded, the Founders contemplated and intended that converts should be admitted to participate in them."

In their Lordships' view the same line of reasoning applies to the present case. The Parsi community had grown up to be such a distinct body, and admissions into it from outside had been so very rare, that at the time when these grants at Rangoon were made, the Government must have intended that the Temple should be for the benefit of professing members of the Parsi community, i.e., racial Parsis or people deemed after a long lapse of ages to be racial Parsis.

But this does not exhaust the matters to be determined on the present appeal. It determines that the respondent Bella has no right of entering into the Temple and may, therefore, be excluded or extruded from the Temple by the Trustees. They can treat her as a trespasser. But it does not follow that they are bound so to treat her. Still less does it follow that in an action to which the trustees are not parties, and in which, therefore, no indirect remedy can be obtained, a direct claim can be supported as if for a tort committed by Bella or her guardian.

When property is set apart for public or charitable uses, it will be a malversation to apply any of the funds for persons who are not objects of the trust. Those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require; and if there is a surplus, it must be left to the Courts to make a cypres application of it. But when the subject-matter of such a trust or charity is the rendering of some convenience or service of such a nature that it will not hurt the lawful recipients if others share with them their Lordships are aware of no case in which it has been held, that the trustees are bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share. They may do so; they may treat all such persons as trespassers and say: Sic volo sic jubeo, stet pro ratione voluntas. But if they choose to admit to the benefit of some park or garden established for a particular district some persons from over the border or to admit to a public library destined for a particular Municipality persons from outside, or what is perhaps a nearer analogy, admit to the hearing of a lecture by a University Professor persons not members of the University, this of itself furnishes no ground of complaint. If the numbers admitted are too large or the persons are disorderly or unpleasant in their habits or in any way substantially interfere with the convenience or benefit of those for whom the endowment was created, the trustees may be required to exclude them. But the mere claim of A that B shall not share in such a benefit because B is not within the terms of the foundation is not one that Courts would encourage.

Many illustrations of this doctrine could be drawn from the history of English institutions. The great schools of Westminster, Eton and Winchester arose from small nuclei, namely, a fixed number of endowed and privileged scholars taught by appointed masters. They have become what they are because unprivileged boys in greater numbers have been allowed to benefit by the services of the appointed masters, and to use the school class-room and play-grounds.

The Statutes of the Colleges in Oxford and Cambridge make provision for the education of a fixed number of students or scholars privileged and endowed. Many, if not most, of them make no provision for the admission of other members in statu pupillari. But "commoners," so called, though their legal position is merely that of boarders, Rex v. Grundon, Exp. Davison (2) have been for several centuries admitted equally with the privileged scholars to the benefits of the colleges, particularly to the use of hall, library and chapel.

The intrusion of an unbeliever into a place of religious worship might well be a case of substantial interference with the devotions of worshippers. But the plaintiffs have failed to make out that Bella was not a Zoroastrian. They suggested indeed that her conversion was impossible, or, at any rate, that it had not been completed by due initiation; but their Lordships agree with the Judge of first instance that this suggestion was not established; while, except in the evidence of one unsatisfactory witness, there was nothing to show that Bella's presence would be thought to cause desecration, if once it was accepted that she was a Zoroastrian.

Also, if it were a question of caste and worshippers of a higher caste would be defiled by the presence of a lower caste, as in Anandrav Bhikaji Phadke v. Shankar Daji Charya (3) this would be a serious disturbance. As was said in that case:—

"This right is one which the Courts must guard, as otherwise all high-caste Hindus would hold their sanctuaries, and perform their worship, only so far as those of the lower castes chose to allow them."

But this claim is again not established. Indeed, what may be called the quasi-caste claim is not even suggested in the pleadings. It is the wounding of religious feelings and the desecration of the Temple which are put forward.

Their Lordships have now to consider the relief which the plaintiffs have sought in his suit. They have not sought for a general declaration as to the persons who are objects of the trust. They have not sought for a construction of the scheme, or for any order to be made upon the trustee, nor have they made the trustee a party. For this they would probably have required the consent of the Advocate General. They pray in the plaint "for a declaration that the defendant Bella is not entitled to the use and benefits of the Parsi Fire Temple in Dalhousie Street known as 'Captain's Agiary or Dhurraymair' or to the use and benefits of the buildings standing on the said trust land or to attend at or participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein."

Then they claim an injunction to restrain the defendant Bella from entering and the other defendant, now dead, from bringing her into the temple to attend the religious ceremonies. This is a claim for an injunction to prevent the repetition of an alleged trespass. It must, therefore, first be established that there was a trespass and one for which damages, though possibly only nominal, could be recovered. But for trespass upon land the only person to bring the action is the person in possession of the land, that is, the trustee. That a beneficiary or two or three beneficiaries of a trust for public purposes may bring a suit for trespass against an intruder is a novel principle of jurisprudence; and the case is not made stronger by the suggestion that several other beneficiaries agree with them.

It may be that in India it would be convenient in some cases to allow such a suit, and the judgment in Anandran Bhikaji Phadke v. Shonkar Daji Charya (3) may form a precedent. But, if so, the circumstances must be as powerful as in that case. It must be established that the juxtaposition of the two sets of persons is so repugnant to their habits of mind that the entrance of one set into the Temple entails the departure of the other, so that it is, as it were, trespass to the person.

As already stated, no such case has been established, and, therefore, it is not necessary to discuss the principle on which the judgment in Anandran Bhikaji Phadke v. Shankar Daji Charya (3) is founded and which was indeed accepted by the Judge of first instance in the present case. The facts do not warrant the claim, if it be a sound one, and no injunction can be granted.

With regard to costs, the learned Judge of first instance, while giving the defendants the general costs of the action, thought that both sides were to blame for the inordinate length of the Bombay commission and made the plaintiffs pay two-thirds only of the defendant's costs of the Commission.

If any costs of the action were to be given, some similar provision should be applied. But, upon the whole, their Lordships feel that the plaintiffs have failed in the greater part of their suit, and that the giving to them of a declaration is an indulgence. They were given the costs of the preliminary issues before Young, J., and the costs of so much of the appeal as related to those issues. These they keep, and the orders against them in respect of other costs in the Courts below will be discharged, and there will be no costs of this appeal. Their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty that this appeal be allowed, that the judgment of the Chief Court be varied, and that a declaration be made, namely, that Bella was not entitled, as of right, to use the temple, or to attend or to participate in any of the religious ceremonies performed therein, that except as to the costs awarded to the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance, and in the Chief Court, there be no costs in the Courts below and that there be no costs of this appeal.

Bills of Lading Act (IX of 1856), s. 3—Bill of Lading, description of goods in, whether conclusive—Exemptions clause in Bill of Lading, effect of—Port Trust, whether entitled to benefit of exemption.

The general rule based on the provisions of s. 3 of the Bills of Lading Act, to the effect that in the absence of any proof that the Bills of Lading were granted under a misrepresentation without any default on the part of the person signing them and wholly due to the fault of the shipper or the holder of such Bills of Lading, the Bills of Lading are conclusive evidence that the goods bearing particular marks as shown in the respective Bills of Lading were put on board, has no application when the Shipping Company has protected itself by insertion of a clause in the Bill of Lading that the marks and numbers though shown in the Bill of Lading are unknown to them and that they do not admit that the marks or numbers shown in the Bill of Lading are correct and when they have exempted themselves from liability against obliteration or difference of marks. [p. 207, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 3 of the Bills of Lading Act applies only in the case of the master or person signing the Bill and does not apply to the Port Trust. [p. 208, col. 1]

Even if the Port Trust be considered to be the agent of the Shipping Company, they would be equally entitled to the benefit of an exemption clause, as a wharfinger is justified or excused by the same thing as would justify or excuse the master and can, consequently, claim benefit of exemptions provided in a Bill of Lading. Revision application against the judgment and decree, of the Judge of the Small Causes Court, Karachi, dated the 31st July 1923.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Applicants.

Messrs. T. G. Elphinston and Nihalchand Tikamdas, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-applicants are holders of certain Bills of Lading of tin plates consigned from Trieste to Karachi by an Italian ship. The plaintiffs instituted this suit in the Small Causes Court, Karachi against the Shipping Company and the Karachi Port Trust for the value of 57 mild-steel plates short accounted for. Their suit was dismissed against both the defendants except in respect of the value of one mild-steel plate which was proved to have been short landed and for which they got a decree against the Shipping Company. The plaintiffs come now before us in revision. It appears from the written statement filed by the Karachi Port Trust that 2,070 plates bearing various marks were landed at Karachi of which 2,014 plates were delivered to the consignees according to the proper marks shown in their Bills of Lading. The remaining 56 plates bore marks different from those shown in the Bills of Lading of the plaintiffs. These 56 plates were tendered to the plaintiffs but were rejected.

To prove their claim against both the defendants the plaintiffs have relied on the description of the plates as given in the Bills of Lading and the provisions of s. 3 of the Bills of Lading Act and have contended that in the absence of any proof that the Bills of Lading were granted under a misrepresentation without any default on the part of the person signing them and wholly due to the fault of the shipper or the holder of such Bills of Lading, the Bills of Lading are conclusive evidence that the goods bearing particular marks as shown in the respective Bills of Lading were put on board. Ordinarily the Bills of Lading would no doubt afford such evidence against the Shipping Company, but in view of the difficulty of verifying particular marks on articles of a similar nature shipped on board, the Shipping Companies protect themselves by inserting a clause that the marks and numbers though shown in the Bill of Lading are unknown to them and that they do not admit that the marks or numbers shown in the Bills of Lading are correct. They also protect themselves against obliteration of marks.

The Bills of Lading in suit are in Italian and contain side by side English translation of the clauses providing for exemption. The original Italian clause provides for exemption of the Shipping Company "Per differenza o Mancanza di marche e Numeri." It has been translated as "for want or obliteration of marks or numbers," which is not accurate. The Bills of Lading do exempt the Company for difference in marks. The description of marks as given in the Bills of Lading is, therefore, no evidence against the Shipping Company. It was, therefore, for the plaintiffs to prove by evidence aliunde that plates bearing the particular marks were actually handed over to the Shipping Company. This they have failed to prove. Even if it be assumed that the plates bearing the particular marks were put on Board, the Shipping Company are further exempted from liability under cl. 14 of the Bill of Lading known as the "free of ships Tackle clause" which reads as follows:—

"The ship's responsibility shall cease when goods pass on deck ready to be discharged.

"As soon as the steamer arrives at the discharging place and is ready to discharge wherever she may be anchored, Consignees must be ready to take delivery of the goods as they come to hand in the holds from the ship's deck where the responsibility of the Company shall cease. Captain is authorised to discharge by day and night on Sundays and holidays without interruption and to change berth during discharge.

"And if consignees do not take delivery in due time, the Captain has faculty to land or discharge the goods in lighters or hulks at receiver's risk and expenses. In case of taking delivery from ship's deck no claims shall be admitted for loss or damage after the goods have left the ship's side without any such loss or damage being ascertained. In every other case no claim for indemnity shall be admitted, unless made in writing to the Company's agent within 24 hours from unloading of the goods."

The plaintiffs' case, therefore, fails against the Shipping Company. They cannot rely on the description given in the Bills of Lading as against the Karachi Port Trust as s. 3 of the Bills of Lading Act is limited to the master or the person signing the Bills. Even if it be assumed that the Port Trust act as the agents of the Shipping Company they will equally be entitled to take advantage of the exemption in the Bills of Lading. As pointed out by Lord Blackburn in Glyn Mills Co. v. East and West India Dock Co. (1), a wharfinger is justified or excused by the same thing as would justify or excuse the master.

The Port Trust are, however, not ordinary wharfingers or agents of the Shipping Company. They land the goods under their statutory authority as agents of both parties and a Bill of Lading are no evidence against them. Again it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the Port Trust received the particular goods. This they could have done either by proving that the Port Trust signed for the specific goods or that they wrongly delivered the specific goods belonging to them to other consignees. This they have failed to prove.

The plaintiffs' case as against them also fails. We dismiss this appeal with costs two separate sets of costs to be allowed to the two defendants.

ZAINAT BIBI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLI, r. 19—Appeal—Dismissal for default—Laches of Advocate—Mistake of clerk—Restoration.

The laches of an Advocate or the careless mistake of his clerk is not sufficient cause for restoration of an appeal dismissed for default.

Mr. San Wa, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Lutter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Applicant seeks to have his revisional application, which was dismissed for default of appearance, restored under O. XLI, r. 19.

Counsel's explanation of his failure to appear on the day fixed for hearing is that his clerk after examining the cause list for the week made a mistake and informed him that the case was fixed for hearing before the Bench on the 17th or 18th.

Counsel went to Court to argue the case on the 17th and found that it had been heard ex parte on the previous day.

An examination of the cause lists for the week in question shows that the case was on the Single Judge Board fixed for the 16th.

There was a Bench Board fixed for the 17th and 18th.

It is hard prima facie to understand how the clerk could have made the mistake, he is alleged to have done, and in any case the revision application was not a Bench matter and Counsel should have known there was something suspicious, when his clerk informed him the case was down for hearing before a Bench.

The Punjab case of Gauran v. Brij Raj Saran (1) does not lay down that the mistake of an Advocate is sufficient cause within the meaning of r. 19 of O. XLI, but a Single Judge there held that he had a discretion to restore an appeal where a case was made out even though that case did not amount to sufficient cause.

Apparently the Judge was of opinion that the case was one, where he was justified in using his inherent power of restoration.

The laches of an Advocate or the careless mistake of his clerk is not sufficient cause for restoration of an appeal dismissed for default.

I do not consider on the facts the present is a case in which good ground has been made out for the exercise of its inherent power by the Court.

The application is dismissed with costs—Advocate's fee one gold mohur.

Where a complainant has made conflicting statements with regard to the number of accused in the First Information Report and his complaint, his evidence with regard to the identification of the accused persons should be looked upon with suspicion. The fact that the First Information Report was made after considerable delay and that there is no satisfactory explanation of the delay would add to the suspicion. [p. 211, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the District Magistrate, Gurgaon, dated the 30th September 1924.

Messrs. Aziz Ahmad and Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been convicted under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code and have been awarded various sentences. They have come up in appeal, and it has been contended that they having been once discharged ought not to have been tried a second time.

The following facts will disclose the nature of the proceedings taken against the appellants :—

In the village Narainpur lived one Kan-haya Ahir, a collateral in the 6th degree of Mangtu complainant. Kanhaya died in 1918 leaving a widow and three daughters named Musammat Moharli, major, Janki minor, and Shanti minor. After the death of their father the girls lived with their mother till her death in March 1920. Musammat Moharli was married to Pem Raj accused No 1. Her minor sisters Musammat Janki and Musammat Shanti then began to live with Bhagwana and Sheo Lal Ahirs. Mangtu applied to be appointed the guardian of the girls and in spite of the opposition of Bhagwana, Sheo Lal and Ram Narain he was appointed the guardian both of persons and the property of the minors. The girls then came to live with Mangtu. On the 25th of April 1923, Musammat Moharli, the married sister of the minor girls, applied to the Senior Subordinate

Judge for the removal of Mangtu from the guardianship on the ground that he was going to marry Musammat Janki to an unsuitable person. She also asked the Court to appoint her as guardian of her sisters in the place of Mangtu. Her application was, of course, opposed by Mangtu. On the 29th of April 1923 Mangtu lodged the First Information Report at Police Station Khol, 10 miles from Narainpur, to the effect that on the evening of the 28th he and most of the men of the village of Narainpur were on their threshing floors when the appellants along with some other persons came to his house and took away the two minor girls by force. He mentioned the names of the eight accused and Umrao, Mashuq and Nathu as the persons who had been seen by witnesses at the time of the raid. As the Sub Inspector in charge of the thana was absent, the Madad Muharrir proceeded the next day to the spot to make the investigation. On the 1st of May a Head Constable took charge and on the 2nd of May the Sub-Inspector Amjad Ali was specially deputed to investigate and he carried on the investigation upto the 6th of May. On the 29th of May the Sub-Inspector Kamar-ud-din took charge of the investigation. In the meantime Mangtu put in a petition of complaint on the 15th of May 1923 in the Court of Mr. F. L. Brayne, District Magistrate, Gurgaon. In this petition he added the names of Maulia, Aftab Husain, Ijaz Hussain, Muhammad Abbas, Shabrati and Azimullah to the list of the accused persons. On the 7th of August 1923 the Police sent up a challan for proceeding against eleven persons, namely, Pem Raj, Hashmat Hussain, Muhammad Abbas, Maulia, Musammat Moharli, Bal Chand, Ikram, Gauria, Deoki, Hazari, and Nathu. The challan was presented before Mr. Brayne, District Magistrate, Gurgaon, before whom the complaint of Mangtu was pending. On the 7th of August 1923 the Court Inspector submitted a report criticising the First Information Report, Mangtu's complaint and all the witnesses produced by Mangtu during the investigation and expressed his opinion that there was no case worth trying. The Public Prosecutor also expressed his opinion to the same effect and the Superintendent of Police agreed with him. At the suggestion of the Superintendent of Police the Court Inspector on the 4th of September 1923 asked the permission of the Court to withdraw the case. The accused were accordingly discharged by the District Magistrate.

Soon after i. e., on the 11th of September 1923 the District Magistrate proceeded on the complaint of Mangtu and after taking action under s. 202 of the Cr. P. C. decided to try the eight accused. Objection was taken on behalf of the accused persons that they having already been discharged could not be tried a second time. The District Magistrate overruled this objection and proceeded with the case. It must be noted in the beginning that on account of the Police proceedings and the subsequent order of discharge the case has become very much complicated. Of the accused persons four were Syyads, one Ahir and two Baurias. With the exception of Pem Raj Ahir of Mauza Fazilpur, all the other accused persons were residents of Mauza Hussainpur, Tahsil Rewari, District Gurgaon. There are two alternative versions of the occurrence of the 28th of April 1923. The version of the prosecution has already been given. The defence version was that the girls were taken away by their sister Musammât Moharli and they had willingly accompanied her because they were badly treated by the two wives of their guardian Mangtu. The issue to be tried in the case was whether the accused persons had forcibly taken away the girls and had committed an offence under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code or whether the girls had gone away willingly with their sister Musammât Moharli and Mangtu finding that the girls had disappeared had falsely brought the charge against the accused. As already pointed out in the First Information Report the names of eleven persons were mentioned by Mangtu. When he filed his complaint he added some more names. The Police challaned the case against some of the accused and some other persons. These discrepancies in the First Information Report, in the complaint and in the challan make the case very suspicious because it appears that Mangtu and his friends were not able to make up their minds as to the persons whom they would like to prosecute. Another circumstance which makes the case suspicious is that Musammât Moharli and her minor sisters appeared before the thanedar of Farrukhnagar and stated that owing to the bad treatment by the two wives of Mangtu they had come away from his house. The statement of Musammât Moharli was taken down and also that of Musammât Janki the elder of the two minor girls. In the First Information Report by Mangtu Sheo Dat, Nathu and Hem Raj were mentioned as eye-witnesses. In his examination on the complaint he also mentioned Bala (P. W. No. 4) and Musammât Jeoni (P. W. No. 2) among the eye-witnesses. In the First Information Report no motive was alleged for the crime. In the petition of complaint, however, it was stated that the intention of the accused was to sell the girls and to take away some moveables from his house. Nathu, though mentioned as an eye-witness was not examined for the prosecution. Likewise the second wife of Mangtu, though present in the house at the time of the occurrence, was not called as a witness. Sidhu, brother of Mangtu, was also present but he too was not called. Mangtu in his deposition mentioned the name of one Sohnia as a witness, but this person also was not called as a witness for the prosecution.

According to the story for the prosecution a number of persons had arrived on the spot on hearing the hue and cry, yet no attempt appears to have been made either to follow the raiders or to report to the Police at once without losing time. What appears to have been done was that some persons were sent about to search the girls.

The question to be decided whether the occurrence, as stated by the prosecution witnesses, took place at all and whether the appellants were members of the raiding party. If the story told by Mangtu is true he ought to have known that Pem Raj, the husband of Musammât Moharli must have taken away the girls to Fazilpur. Instead of going straight to Pem Raj's house he is said to have sent men to search the girls. This indicates that he did not know how and when the girls had been taken away. The learned Magistrate instead of discussing and considering the evidence for the prosecution first took up the case set up on behalf of the accused and for reasons set forth in his judgment disbelieved the story told for the defence. Musammât Moharli has stated that she took away the girls on the night in question in the absence of Mangtu and travelled by Railway from Rewari Station to Patli from where she walked on foot. The distance between Fazilpur and Narainpur is 15 or 16 kos. It was not easy to cover this distance on foot, and I am inclined to believe that whoever might have taken the girls the journey must have been made by Railway. There is no evidence on the record to prove that accused persons had travelled that night by Railway. On the other hand there is a good deal of evidence to corroborate the story told by Musammât Moharli that the girls were taken away by her by Railway. There is also evidence on the record, as pointed out by the Magistrate himself, that Musammât Moharli had been observed in the village Narainpur for two or three days before the date of occurrence. Piare Lal compounder saw the girls at the Railway Station Rewari standing and weeping in the passengers' shed and saying that they had missed their elder sister. A Constable searched out the woman from the Booking Office. Ram Pershad (D. W. No. 3) on his way back from Farrukhnagar where he had gone to get articles for his daughter's marriage saw Musammât Moharli at a piao about 1½ kos from Farrukhnagar going with the girls. In a similar manner Ram Jas (D. W. No. 4) also saw the girls in the company of Musammât Moharli at the Piao. Mangalia (D. W. No. 18) also saw Musammât Moharli taking away her two younger sisters. Bal Ram (D. W. No. 19) met Musammât Moharli with her two sisters at a well outside Fazilpur about sunset at the end of Bisakh. Bag Mal (D. W. No. 20) met the woman with her two sisters at the Piao. Kundan (D. W. No. 21) while working in the Johar saw Moharli passing by with two younger girls. Sayyed Amir Shah (D. W. No. 28), Head Constable Railway Police, Rewari, has corroborated Piara Lal's evidence as to the presence of the two girls and Musammât Moharli at the Rewari Railway Station to whom Musammât Moharli stated that she was taking away the girls from Narainpur to Fazilpur. Piare Lal (D. W. No. 2), the compounder, and Sayyed Amir Shah (D. W. No. 28) Head Constable Railway Police, are quite independent witnesses not shown to be in any way connected with the accused. There is no reason why their evidence should not be believed. The learned Magistrate has believed this story on the ground that it was extremely unlikely that Mangtu, who was trying to arrange marriages for these girls for his own profit would have left them unguarded when he knew that his principal opponent Musammât Moharli, who had already applied to the Civil Court to stop the marriages was staying in the village. there is no evidence in support of the Magistrate's theory. According to his own story Mangtu was not present at his house on the evening in question. There are some other reasons also given by the learned Magistrate for discarding the story of Musammât Moharli but they are all conjectural. Nasir-ud din Ahmad, the Sub-Inspector of Farrukhnagar, has proved the report No. 14 dated the 30th of April 1923 in which he had taken down the statement of Musammât Moharli and the minor girl Musammât Janki as to how they had come away from Narainpur. All this evidence fully supports the story that Musammât Moharli, the only interested person in the girls, had taken them away probably with the help of some male friends whose names have not been disclosed.

The prosecution story is sought to be proved by the following witnesses:—Mangtu (P. W. No. 1) Musammât Jeoni (P. W. No. 2), Hem Raj (P. W. No. 3), Bala (P. W. No. 4), Sheo Dat (P. W. No. 5), Musammât Janki (P. W. No. 6), Ram Dat (P. W. No. 7) and Musammât Shanti (P. W. No. 8). The principal witness of course is Mangtu, but he has made such conflicting statements about his movements after the alleged occurrence that it is difficult to place explicit reliance upon his evidence. The Magistrate, while admitting that Mangtu had made conflicting statements, has expressed his opinion that they can be reconciled. He has, of course, mentioned the names of all the eight accused; but as he made conflicting statements with regard to the number of accused in the First Information Report and his complaint I am not prepared to accept his evidence with regard to the identification of the accused persons. The occurrence is said to have taken place at about 8 o'clock in the evening and the First Information Report was not lodged till the evening of the 29th. The explanation given for the delay is not convincing. Musammât Jeoni though not mentioned either in the First Information Report or in the petition of complaint, has been produced as a witness in the case. She is obviously a biased witness and she could only identify Pem Raj and Hussain alias Chunni whose names most necessarily have been uppermost in her mind, that of Pem Raj on account of his being the husband of Musammât Moharli and that of Hashmat Hussain on account of old standing enmity. Much reliance cannot be placed upon her statement. Hem Raj has mentioned all the eight accused. He is of the complainant's baradri. He gave evidence for Mangtu in a case against Hashmat Hussain accused. He also gave evidence in favour of the complainant in the guardianship case. He is evidently a partisan of the complainant. His evidence, therefore, is not of much value. Bala (P. W. No. 4) had been evidently substituted for Nathu who has not been called, as his name was neither disclosed in the First Information Report nor in the petition of complaint. The learned Government Advocate has not relied upon the evidence of this man nor has the District Magistrate. Sheo Dat (P. W. No. 5) has mentioned Hashmat Husain, Pem Raj, Ikram and Deoki, but he has stated that the raiding party consisted of 30 or 35 men. His statement was not taken down till two or three days later. The witness has evidently exaggerated the number of raiders as his statement was taken after such a long time. I am not inclined to place much reliance upon his evidence. Musammat Janki had stated on the 30th of April 1924 at Fazilpur that she had gone with her sister Musammat Moharli of her own accord to escape the bad treatment of Mangtu's wives. She is now under the influence of Mangtu and as a witness in this case has contradicted her first statement. It is not safe to place much reliance upon her evidence. The evidence of Ram Ditta does not help the prosecution much, because the fact of the presence of the girls at Fazilpur is admitted on both sides. The girl Shanti has mentioned the names of Hashmat Hussain and Pem Raj, but she being under the influence of Mangtu much weight does not attach to her evidence. Numerous discrepancies were pointed out to the learned Magistrate in the evidence for the prosecution witnesses which he has tried to explain away on various theories. I am, however, not satisfied with the explanations given by the learned Magistrate. In my opinion the learned District Magistrate has taken a one sided view in this case. The circumstances of the case were such that raised great doubts as to the correctness of the prosecution story. The Court Inspector, the Public Prosecutor and the Superintendent of Police after a careful consideration of all the evidence and circumstances of the case, had come to the conclusion that there were great doubts as to the correctness of the prosecution story. The District Magistrate himself upon the application of the Court Inspector had discharged all the accused persons. The fact that one of the Sub-Inspectors, who had carried on the investigation, was in a way related to Hashmat Hussain accused influenced the mind of the learned District Magistrate to a large extent and induced him to disregard entirely the Police proceedings. Kamar-ud-din Sub-Inspector, however, cannot be said to have been a biased officer. Nothing is alleged against the Court Inspector, the Public Prosecutor and the Superintendent of Police. In my opinion the Court Inspector was fully justified in withdrawing the case. I have grave doubts as to the correctness of the conviction in this case.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, acquit all the appellants and direct that they be forthwith released.

APPEAL FROM THE BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Privy Council—Practice—Criminal by Governor-General to transfer of evidence—Adequacy of Judge's charge to Jury—Interference, when permissible

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in dealing with petitions for special leave to appeal against sentences pronounced in the Criminal Courts of the various dominions of His Majesty will not act as a Court of Criminal Appeal and will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done.

It is in the power of the Governor General of India, if he thinks that in the state of public feeling a fair trial cannot be obtained in the place where an offence would ordinarily be tried, to order that the trial be held elsewhere.

Where, however, the Governor-General refuses to make such an order, the refusal cannot be held to amount to a violation of the principles of natural justice so as to enable their Lordships of the Privy Council to interfere with the result of the trial.

Questions as to the sufficiency of evidence or the adequacy of the Judge's charge to the Jury cannot come within the ambit of the rule laid down as to the disregard of the forms of legal process or violation of the principles of natural justice.

Messrs. John Simon, G. R. Lowndes, J. M. Parikh and R. R. Pillai, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Dunne and K. Brown, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Dunedin.—Their Lordships have repeatedly announced that in dealing with petitions for special leave to appeal against sentences pronounced in the Criminal Courts of the various Dominions of the King, they will not act as a Court of Criminal Appeal and will not, to use the words of Lord Watson in In re Dillet (1) advise His Majesty to “review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings, unless it is shown that, by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done.”

In the present case the first point urged by the petitioners is that there had been such copious and prejudicial newspaper comment on the crime committed that a fair trial by a Jury was impossible in Bombay.

It is in the power of the Governor-General of India if he thinks that in the state of public feeling a fair trial could not be obtained in the place where the offence would ordinarily be tried, to order that the trial be held elsewhere. An application was made to him to so order and was refused. To ask the Board to declare that such a refusal of the Governor-General, who had all the advantages of being in the country and of judging of the real state of public feeling, amounted to a violation of the principles of natural justice is nothing less than preposterous, and their Lordships cannot too strongly qualify the impropriety and uselessness of such a demand.

As regards the other grounds in the case of the first six petitioners, they are all questions as to the sufficiency of evidence—fit for consideration by a Court of Criminal Appeal, but falling far short of the definite dictum quoted.

The case of the remaining petitioner which at first sight might seem different, is, when more closely looked at, just the same. He was not present at the scene of the assault and murder and consequently the offence of which he was found guilty was abetment of murder. The point that was sought to be urged by his Counsel was that the charge of the learned Judge did not adequately bring home to the Jury that abetment of murder could not be properly inferred from a conspiracy to kidnap unless the natural result of the attempt to kidnap was murder. The learned Judge in the course of his charge used these words after explaining s. 111 of the Penal Code:—

“I merely emphasise once more that the crucial point as regards the applicability of that section is whether that which is done was a probable consequence of the abetment; was it a probable consequence of the conspiracy into which accused No. 9 had entered that Bawla would be murdered on the night of January the 12th? Unless you can so find, that charge of murder cannot be established.”

And he specially left it to them to say whether after finding conspiracy they “could go the length of saying that the probable consequence of the conspiracy was the murder of Bawla and the attempted murder of Lieutenant Sæger.” If this were a Court of Criminal Appeal it would be difficult indeed to say that this advice to the Jury was not adequate to the situation. Still, it would be a question for a Court of Criminal Appeal. Here the moment that adequacy is raised in reference to such advice the case of the petitioners is gone; for who could possibly say that the adequacy or otherwise could amount to a “disregard of the forms of process or violation of the principles of natural justice”? The averment fails, just as the averments in the other cases failed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to refuse the prayer of all the petitioners.

The intent to cause the person abducted to be secretly and wrongfully confined is an essential element of an offence under s. 365 of the Penal Code.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—Musammam Siftan is a sister of Akbar Ali and Abdul Rahman petitioners and a cousin of Nur petitioner. It has been found by the learned Sessions Judge that Musammam Siftan was divorced by her former husband Ghulam Kadir. She was living in the house of her aunt, and it appears that she proposed to marry one Bakhsh. This marriage was not acceptable to the petitioners. They, therefore, went to the house in which Musammam Siftan was living and carried off Musammam Siftan against her will and kept her in confinement. On these findings, the petitioners have been convicted under s. 365, Indian Penal Code. That section makes punishable the offence of abduction with intent to cause the person abducted to be secretly and wrongfully confined. There is no doubt that on the findings of the learned Sessions Judge Musammam Siftan was wrongfully confined, but it is contended by the learned Counsel for the petitioners that under the circumstances it could not be held that Musammam Siftan was secretly confined. In this contention of the learned Counsel I agree. There is nothing to show that the whereabouts of Musammam Siftan were concealed by her brothers and the cousin from the other relations or from the person interested in Musammam Siftan. The offence of the petitioners, therefore, amounts to one of wrongful confinement. Accepting the petition I alter the conviction to one under s. 342 and reduce the sentence of imprisonment to that already undergone.

The sentence of fine will be set aside.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—I think these cases have been very properly brought before the Court, so that the two Pleadings, Mr. K. M. and Mr. U. G. may have the opportunity of explaining to the Court the circumstances relating to their imprisonment on the charges that were made against them, and I think they have now stated very fully, and I am prepared to say very fairly, the facts of their respective cases. They both disclaim and disavow any intention at all of either disobeying the District Magistrate's orders, or of in any way paralysing the administration of justice. They express regret that in the one case the sending out of a telegram to the press; and in the other case the refusal to sign a statement before the Magistrate have been understood to show a spirit of disaffection or an intention either to disobey the orders of the duly constituted authorities or in any way to paralyse the administration of justice. I think that we can accept their statements as being accurate and accept their expressions of regret as being genuine and, under the circumstances I think that we can quite properly order the sanad to be issued to these two Pleaders.

In both cases our attention was also called to a minor offence of having engaged themselves in another profession while they were still Pleaders. It appears that they had not renewed their sanads when they took up their respective occupations on the press. It appears also that the work was done mainly without any sort of remuneration a matter which can without difficulty be overlooked.

In these circumstances, the sanads will be issued.

Coutts-Trotter, J.—I am of the same opinion. All the concern that I have had in this or in any of these cases is to make it as plain as any language of mine can make it that, while this Court will not interfere with or have regard to any man's political opinions or opinions on public questions, it is impossible to allow a person, who proclaims or practices what is called the doctrine of "Civil disobedience", to ask to be part of the machinery of the Courts which exist for the very purpose of the thwarting of civil disobedience and the enforcement of civil obedience. He may be a perfectly honourable man; he may act from conscientious motives; he may in conceivable circumstances be a patriot. It may be imagined that he should not be punished or even prosecuted for holding or expressing these opinions. All our business is to say that, however, admirable a person he may be, he cannot consistently with his professions, ask to be considered and to be adopted as part of the machinery of this Court for enforcement of law and order. But I am satisfied now, I confess I was not before from their last statements, that the intention of these gentlemen is to give an assurance to this Court, which I hold the Court is entitled to demand, that they are not and do not in the future intend to be, exponents of the doctrine of civil disobedience.

For these reasons, I agree with my Lord that sanads may be properly issued to them.

Krishnan, J.—I also agree with the opinion of the learned Chief Justice and that of my learned brother Coutts Trotter that in these two cases we should not withhold the sanad. I do not think it necessary, after what fell from the Chief Justice with which I entirely agree, that I need say anything more.

I agree to the order proposed.

Schwabe, C. J.—I should like to add that I agree entirely with what has just fallen from my learned brother Coutts Trotter.

The complainant had mortgaged some land to the accused. The accused claimed that the mortgage was with possession while the complainant said it was not. One day the complainant found the accused ploughing the land, remonstrated with him, and was assaulted. The Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced him to a fine under s. 323, Penal Code.

Held, that the dispute between the parties being of a civil nature, the Magistrate should have exercised a better discretion and the complainant to seek his remedy from a Civil Court [p. 216, col. 2].

Petition for revision of an order of the District Magistrate at Rohtak, dated the 9th March 1925, in favour of that of the Tahsildar Magistrate, Second Class, Jhajjar, District Rohtak, dated the 5th February 1925.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners before me have been convicted under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code and have been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15 each. The facts giving rise to the prosecution are as follows:—

The complainant mortgaged some land to the petitioner Tulsi for Rs. 250 for a term of two years. On the 7th September 1924, the complainant brought a case against the petitioners charging them with the same offence with which he has charged them in the present case. That complaint was dismissed after enquiry under s. 203 of the Cr. P. C. On the 19th September 1924, this offence is alleged to have been committed. He made a report at the Bahadur Garh thana that Tulsi and Munshi had beaten him with slaps and fists. In that report he did not mention the names of Sudhan and Ram Singh. The complainant was directed to file a formal complaint in Court. Thereupon the complaint was instituted under s. 323, Indian Penal Code.

Two witnesses were produced in support of the prosecution and both of them were closely related to the complainant. The real dispute between the parties was whether the alleged mortgage was with possession and the mortgagors were entitled to plough the land mortgaged. Tulsi was found ploughing the land and the complainant remonstrated with him, when the alleged assault was made. The case for the complainant was that the mortgage was without possession and Tulsi and the co-accused had wrongfully taken possession of the mortgaged land. The patwari has stated that the complainant himself had reported to him that the mortgage was with possession and he had consequently made a report recommending the mutation of the mortgagees' name. The complainant was cross-examined on the point. His statement has been read to me which goes to show that the mortgage was intended to be one with possession. The mutation report was also made on that hypothesis and although mutation has not yet been sanctioned it appears that the mortgage was with possession. Under these circumstances if the mortgagee had taken possession the complainant had no business to interfere with it.

From the facts disclosed it appears that the mortgagee and his companions used force in the exercise of their right of private defence. Having regard to the history of the dispute between the parties it appears that the matter was very much exaggerated by the complainant. Over and above all that has been said above the dispute between the parties appears primarily to be one of civil nature, and the Magistrate would have exercised a better discretion if he had directed the complainant to seek his remedy from a Civil Court. The case against the petitioners appears to be of a doubtful nature. I, therefore, give the benefit of the doubt to the petitioners and, accepting the petition for revision, set aside their convictions and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge Palna and Bogra, dated the 23rd April 1921, affirming that of the Deputy Magistrate, Sirajgunj, dated the 4th March 1924.

FACTS.—The accused in this case came armed with lathis and attacked the complainant who was ploughing his field. The latter made for a house, where he was caught. He was then taken to, and confined in, another house. The accused were given separate sentences for rioting and wrongful confinement.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is a Rule granted by two of my learned brothers calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioners Salimuddy Pramanik, Gani Pramanik and Kazam Pramanik under s. 342 read with s. 149 should not be set aside on the 7th ground stated in the petition.

The 7th ground was that the order of separate sentence passed on the petitioners was illegal.

The learned Vakil has stated that he cannot argue that the conviction should be set aside; and he has confined his argument to the question whether the imposition of separate sentence under s. 342 read with s. 149 was illegal. We are of opinion that it was, by reason of the provisions of s. 71, Indian Penal Code.

Consequently, the Rule should be made absolute and the sentence of three weeks' rigorous imprisonment under s. 342/149 must be set aside.

We draw the attention of the lower Court to the case of Alim Sheikh v. Shahazada (1) and also to the case of Keamuddi Karikar v. Emperor (2).

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 148, 302—Rioting—Deadly weapons—Death caused by blows—Offence.

Accused, five in number, assembled at a canal water-head to divert water by force and armed themselves with deadly weapons to strike and vanquish anybody who should stand in their way and prevent them from accomplishing their purpose. The party of the deceased remonstrated with the accused whereupon the accused assaulted them with their weapons and caused the death of the deceased.

Held, (1) that the accused constituted an unlawful assembly and became guilty of rioting when they used their weapons in pursuance of their common object; [p 218, col. 1]

(2) that as every one of the accused knew that the weapons were likely to be used with deadly effect, they were all responsible for the fatal injury inflicted on the deceased. [p. 218, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 18th May 1925.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B, and Mr. Bal Mokand Vaid, for the Appellants.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The two brothers Hari Singh and Indar Singh and their uncle Sher Singh have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Ferozepore of the murder of one Jaimal Singh Jat and along with two others, namely, Sawal and Ganesha, they have further been convicted of rioting under s. 148, Indian Penal Code. All five have filed a joint appeal through Mr. Moti Sagar and the case is also before us under s. 374, Cr. P. C., for confirmation of the capital sentence passed upon Hari Singh.

The first three appellants are Kumhars, i. e., potters by caste but are by avocation. Of the remaining two, Sawal is a Bagri Jat, and Ganesha a Bania. They are all residents of the village Mithri, District Ferozepore. All these appellants set up alibis, but produced no evidence whatsoever and thus left the prosecution evidence quite un rebutted. Their Counsel could do no better than to urge that the prosecution evidence was unreliable, and he advanced the argument that the appellants could not be held guilty of rioting because they fought in defence of their right to use the water of which they were already in possession and further contended that the charge of murder was not established against any one of the appellants who have been held guilty of that offence. But he could refer to no material on the record in support of any of the questions of fact or law that he raised and argued before us, and as will presently be shown he failed to make out any of his points.

The account of the fatal event given by the eye-witnesses may be summarised thus:—On the 13th October 1924 at about rotiwela (noon) Dayal Singh (P. W. No. 7) with his 18 years old son Har Chand Singh (P. W. No. 8) was directing the irrigation of his field No. 313 about 5 bighas in area when the flow of water ceased all of a sudden and he heard a shout from Hari Singh who was at the water-head about half a mile away to the following effect:—“We have diverted your water, come and do what you like about it” Dayal Singh proceeded to the water-head accompanied by his son Har Chand Singh who was empty handed but Dayal Singh carried a kahi with which he had been regulating the irrigation Bhaggu Singh (P. W. No. 10) with his Siri Wayaman and brother-in-law Saudagar followed Dayal Singh and Har Chand Singh from a neighbouring field to see what would happen. As Dayal Singh got to the water-head he found the water diverted into Hari Singh's cotton field. All the five appellants were standing there armed with chhavis. Dayal Singh asked them why they had diverted his water. Hari Singh replied “we have stopped your water. We do not care whether it is your turn or not. Take it if you can.”

Dayal Singh proceeded to re-open his channel whereupon Ganesha struck him on the head with a chhavi and next Sawal struck him with a chhavi. At this stage Jaimal Singh brother of Dayal Singh, who had come up from his field near there, interfered on behalf of his brother and shouted to the appellants not to strike his brother. Thereupon Hari Singh struck Jaimal Singh on the head with his chhavi and then Indar Singh inflicted a chhavi blow on his head. Jaimal Singh dropped down and as he did so Sher Singh struck him on his left arm with a chhavi.

The above version was given in the First Information Report and was supported by all the eye-witnesses who appeared in the witness-box, and the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that it was substantially true. Further, there was the evidence that it was Dayal Singh's turn to the use of the water and that the appellants had not even a shadow of a claim to take the water at that stage. The appellants made no attempt to refute even this point. Their Counsel in the Court below contended himself with urging:—

(1) that the eye-witnesses were unworthy of credit because they were all connected with each other and Sahib Singh lambardar (P. W. No. 13);

(2) that there was an unnecessary delay in making the First Information Report;

(3) that an inference unfavourable to the prosecution should be drawn from their failure to produce two of the eye witnesses, namely, Karam Singh and Wayaman; and

(4) that the prosecution story was inherently improbable.

The learned Sessions Judge in his judgment considered all these contentions and overruled them for reasons which appear to us to be unanswerable and which we do not consider it necessary to repeat here. But he accepted one contention, viz., that the attack on Jaimal Singh was not made in pursuance of the common object of the unlawful assembly and that, therefore, only those members of the assembly who actually made the assault upon Jaimal Singh were responsible for it and not the rest. There is no appeal from his order acquitting Sawal and Ganesha of the charge of murder and, therefore, we need not express any opinion with regard to the validity or otherwise of this conclusion of the learned Sessions Judge, but we agree with him that the prosecution version is substantially true and that the defence have entirely failed to show that that evidence was unworthy of belief. From the facts thus established by the prosecution it follows that the five appellants had assembled at the water-head to take water by force and had armed themselves with deadly weapons to strike and vanquish anybody who should stand in their way and prevent them from accomplishing their purpose. This being so, these five men constituted an unlawful assembly and became guilty of rioting when they used their deadly weapons in pursuance of their common object. Further, as every one of them knew that these weapons were likely to be used with deadly effect, they were all responsible if any one of them inflicted a fatal injury.

The mainstay of the defence was a judgment of a Division Bench of this High Court reported as Baga Singh v. Emperor (1) which was relied upon and referred to before the Sessions Judge and again before us; but that was quite a converse of the present case. The distinguishing features are that there in the first place the water was diverted in the bona fide belief that the turn of the man who had been taking the water had expired. Secondly, it was next the turn of the man who diverted the water, and thirdly, it was the latter who was attacked first and had received injuries before he shot his assailant and killed him. In the present case Dayal Singh was entitled to irrigate the whole of his fields of 5 bighas but he had hardly irrigated 2 bighas when the water was diverted. Thus it was wrongfully diverted before time and by a person who had no right to take the water at that stage, as the turns of several others intervened between his turn and that of Dayal Singh.

It is clear from what has been stated above that the appellants at first made a preparation for an attack and subsequently resorted to force to carry out their wrongful purpose. The common object of the assembly undoubtedly was to defend by use of violence their act of diverting the water which was a wrongful act. The amount of violence that they all intended to use or knew would likely be used is to be inferred from the nature of the weapons with which they came armed. As they all knew that the weapons would be used and that if used mortal injuries would very likely be inflicted, every one of them who joined the assembly with that guilty knowledge was liable to be held responsible for the use of those weapons by any of them. The argument that the appellants were not the aggressors because having already taken possession of the water they were entitled to resist by force any attempt to dispossess them thereof is obviously fallacious, because having no right to take the water at that time their act of diverting it was wrongful and quite unjustified and the rightful person was entitled to recover what he had lost by a wrongful act. Further there is nothing to show that the appellants had any reason to apprehend any injury at the hands of Dayal Singh, nor is there anything to indicate that Dayal Singh and his brother made any show of criminal force. It was, therefore, a very wanton attack that the appellants made to restrain Dayal Singh from diverting the water to his field, and to chastise his brother for raising a voice on his behalf. We, therefore, come to the conclusion that Hari Singh, Indar Singh and Sher Singh have rightly been held guilty of the murder of Jaimal Singh.

We may here refer to another contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants which, it appears, had not been raised in the Court below. The prosecution evidence was that Hari Singh and Indar Singh inflicted one chhavi blow each on the head of the deceased, but the medical witness after describing two injuries on the head stated that both were practically the result of a single blow. On strength of this opinion of the medical witness the learned Counsel contended that the deceased received only one chhavi blow on the head, that it could not be said which of the two appellants Hari Singh and Indar Singh dealt that blow, and that, therefore, neither of them could be held responsible for it. We have already held that all the appellants who were armed with chhavis and attacked the deceased were responsible for his death and this contention, therefore, falls to the ground, but we may point out with regard to it that the Police Officer who arrived at the spot and examined the body of the deceased found two wounds on his head and noted their lengths in the inquest report as well as in the statement of injuries which he prepared on the spot. The medical witness also did not positively state that there was only one injury on the head and we are unable to understand what he meant by saying that the two injuries were practically the result of a single blow.

As regards the capital sentence, we are of opinion that Hari Singh who was evidently the ring leader well deserves it, and that the lesser punishment would not meet the ends of justice in his case. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal of all the convicts and confirm the sentence of death.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 104 OF 1925.

June 12, 1925.

*Present:—*Justice Sir B. K. Mullick, Kt., and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

SIBAN RAI—PETITIONER

versus

BHAGWAT DASS AND ANOTHER—

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 439-- Acquittal—Revision—Interference by High Court.

Per Mullick, J.—The power of interference in revision with orders of acquittal should be most sparingly exercised and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, for instance, where an order of acquittal has been made without trial and under an error of law. The High Court will not in any case interfere in revision with an order of acquittal on the ground that the inferences drawn by the lower Court from evidence are erroneous. [p 220, cols 1 & 2.]

The Legislature does not intend that a private party shall secure by an application in revision a right which is reserved for the Crown only. The High Court has the right to interfere in revision with orders of acquittal, but will only do so in very exceptional cases, for instance, where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial. [p 220, col. 2.]

Per Macpherson, J.—The High Court will, in exercising its power of revision against an order of acquittal under s 439 of the Cr. P. C., observe the limitations which established practice has imposed upon appeals under s 417 of the Code. But though in practice the broad rule of guidance that the Court will only interfere in revision with an acquittal, at least in a case where there has been a trial, sparingly and only where interference is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, may be accepted, no general rule can be laid down beyond this that the Court will interfere where the circumstances require it. [p. 221, col 2.]

Application against an order of the District Magistrate, District of Samastipur, dated the 6th January 1925, setting aside that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Samastipur, dated the 17th November 1924.

Sir Ali Imam and Mr. S. A. Sami, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—In this case the Second Class Magistrate of Samastipur, found that Mahanth Ganga Das had title and possession in an asthal at Waini and that the accused Bhagwat Das and Narain Das had forcibly dispossessed him and committed criminal house trespass in a building appertaining to the asthal. He, therefore, convicted the accused under s. 448 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced them to a fine of Rs. 50 each.

In appeal the District Magistrate of Darbhanga found that the story of forcible dispossession was false and that Bhagwat Das and Narain Das were in possession and that they had successfully resisted an attempt by Sibani Rai, the servant of Ganga Das, to forcibly evict them from the asthal. He found that the accused had no right to stay in the asthal against the will of Ganga Das; but at the same time the case of Ganga Das being false in material particulars, he acquitted the accused.

An application in revision is now made before us to set aside the acquittal, and the question arises whether this Court should interfere.

Ganga Das made an application to the Local Government requesting it to lodge an appeal under s. 417 of the Cr. P. C., but the Local Government refused on the ground that the case was not one of sufficient public importance.

In now asking us to interfere in revision the petitioner relies upon the following cases of the Calcutta High Court; Bazu v. Raika Singh (1), Harai Chandra Nama v. Osmanali (2), Nabin Chandra Chakrabutty v. Rajendra Nath Banerjee (3). In these cases a re-hearing was ordered by the High Court on the ground that there had not been a sufficient trial in the Court below; the decisions were based on the special facts of each case, but it was not till Fauzdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri (4) that any attempt was made to define the principles upon which the High Court will interfere in revision. That case was noticed with approval by this Court in Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (5) and by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Narayana Mudaliar (6) and I think it is now settled that the power of interference in revision should be most sparingly exercised and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice.

The rule, of course, does not apply to cases where there has been no trial. For instance in Jitan Dusadh v. Domoo Sahoo (7) this Court set aside an acquittal in revision because an acquittal had been entered without trial and under an error of law. In that case the complainant having died the Magistrate refused permission to the complainant's son to proceed with the case and acquitted the accused and the District Magistrate moved the High Court in revision. On the other hand, in Rajkishore Dubey v. Ram Pratap (8) a Division Bench (Mullick and Macpherson, JJ.) of this Court declined to interfere even though there was a clear error in the lower Appellate Court's judgment. We have not been shown any case in which a High Court has interfered in revision on the ground that the inferences drawn from evidence were erroneous.

In my opinion the Legislature does not intend that the private party shall secure by an application in revision a right which is reserved for the Crown only. The High Court has the right to interfere but will only do so in very exceptional cases, which it may be stated generally are cases in which there has been a denial of the right of fair trial and which attract the operation of s. 107 of the Government of India Act. Nor does it intend that the High Court will interfere in revision to correct an error when another remedy exists.

In England where any member of the public may set the Criminal Law in motion, there is no procedure at all for setting aside an acquittal. In France, where the law permits in most criminal cases a private injured party to intervene as a partie civile, the right of appeal against an acquittal is accorded only to the Crown. Neither system permits a private prosecutor to control the proceedings if the Crown objects.

Nor is the private prosecutor's control any greater under the Indian Law though he is entitled in certain cases to compound with the offender: see Jamuna Kanth Jha v. Rudra Kumar Jha (9).

I am still therefore of the opinion which I expressed in Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (5) that in cognizable cases the private prosecutor has no position at all and that if the Crown, which is the custodian of the public peace, decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object that he has not taken his full toll of private vengeance. These observations were made with reference to a private party's power to get an acquittal set aside in a criminal case which had been conducted by a Public Prosecutor; but if it were necessary here I would be prepared to hold that they apply with equal force to acquittals in all cases. The Crown and not the complainant is always the party: see Queen-Empress v. Murarji Gokuldas (10) and Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (11).

If that view is correct, then the circumstance that in the present case Mahanth Ganga Das, in spite of delivery of possession by the Civil Court, is being deprived by the judgment debtor of the enjoyment of his rights, is no ground for our interference in revision. There has been no denial of the right of fair trial. The District Magistrate has considered the evidence and if he has come to a wrong conclusion, it certainly cannot be said that there has been no fair trial. He has found that the complainant's story that the accused came with a mob and drove out Ganga Das's servants was false and that Bhagwat Das was in possession and that it was the complainant who attempted to forcibly eject him. If the true facts had been put by the complainant before the Court, I have no doubt that he would have succeeded and if Bhagwat Das persists in occupying the land and house which formed the subject-matter of the Civil Court decree against him, the Criminal Courts are still open to him. The present application is misconceived and is dismissed.

Macpherson, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

In my opinion the application must fail on the simple ground that it is not even possible to say that the acquittal by the Appellate Court (which rightly found that the case which petitioner set out to prove was false) was not in the circumstances warranted. If an appeal had been preferred by the Local Government under s. 417, it would have failed for the same reason.

The question whether a private person has any locus standi to move the High Court against an acquittal, and if so in what circumstances has, however, been argued at length and claims an expression of opinion.

I agree with the Government Advocate when he concedes that the High Court possesses the power to set aside an acquittal under s. 439 on being moved by a private person. But I am unable to accept his contention that that power is either in law or under the practice of the Courts in India, definitely restricted to cases where as in Jitan Dusadh v. Domoo Sahoo (7) there has been no trial, or where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial. All that can be said to be established is that in that class of cases at least the Court will in a proper case set aside an acquittal at the instance of a private party. No doubt the High Court will in exercising its power of revision under s. 439 observe the limitations which established practice has imposed upon appeals under s. 417. But though in practice the broad rule of guidance that the Court will only interfere in revision with an acquittal, at least in a case where there has been a trial, sparingly and only where interference is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chaudhuri (4) may be accepted, it appears dangerous to go further. I was a party to the decisions in Rajkishore Dubey v. Ram Partap (8) and Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (5) decided on successive days but my considered opinion is to be found in the subsequent decision in Ganga Singh v. Rambhajan Singh (12) where after referring to the cases above cited, I said—

"But it is not possible nor would it be expedient to lay down a general principle. The Court will interfere where the circumstances require it."

In particular I am not prepared to subscribe to the view that in every case of a prosecution for a cognizable offence the private prosecutor in India has no position at all in the litigation. It might possibly be contended that at least where the prosecution has in fact been a public or as it is designated, a Police prosecution, the private prosecutor has no position at any stage. I doubt whether even such a contention is tenable, though of course the Court acting in revision would in such a case enquire earnestly why the Crown has not appealed. But in any event the criterion cannot be whether the Police could under the law arrest without warrant for the offence under trial irrespective of whether they did so and initiated a public prosecution under the Cr. P. C., it is open to the private prosecutor to initiate criminal proceedings by complaint without the intervention of the Police and where that has been done, and the prosecution has not been taken over by the Crown, a private prosecutor cannot, in my judgment, be said to be without position in the litigation even if the offence is cognizable. The majority of prosecutions for criminal trespass and house trespass which are cognizable offences are private. I cannot hold that either principle or authority supports the view that an application under s. 439 against an acquittal is not maintainable in a private prosecution where the offence charged is cognizable.

Again too much stress may easily be laid upon the remedy available under s. 417 even in Police cases. An appeal against acquittal is a special weapon in its armoury which a Local Government judiciously reserves for exceptional occasions, and which is only used after most anxious consideration and in cases which are themselves of great public importance or in which a principle is involved. It cannot be expected that Government will dull the edge of that salutary provision by utilising it freely in cases which though of importance to individual subjects, are of no or of little general interest. Actually, therefore, a remedy under s. 417 is practically non-existent in the less heinous cases whether they are private or public prosecutions. Yet where justice fails in this country, it undeniably does so at least as much by erroneous acquittal as by erroneous conviction.

In my judgment it is neither necessary nor expedient to lay down or even suggest any limitations in this regard beyond the practice of the High Court in appeal under s. 417 and the principles which guide the Court in receiving and determining under s. 439 applications for the exercise of their powers of revision in respect of convictions. I would adhere to the view expressed by Jenkins, C. J., in Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri (4) read in the light of the observations of the same Judge in Emperor v. Bankatram Lachiram (13) and Mahomed

Ali v. Emperor (14) as to the spirit which should guide the Courts in the exercise of their discretionary powers in revision. The result may in practice not differ greatly from that which would be obtained by laying down and following detailed rules. Doubtless the Court will only interfere in revision with an acquittal in an exceptional case. But the supreme consideration is that the Court should exercise its discretion untrammelled in each case as it arises.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 491 OF 1925.

LACHHMAN SINGH—ACCTSED—

APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Death caused by attack with sharp-edged weapon—Offence

In the course of an altercation accused suddenly struck the deceased with a sharp-edged weapon causing two wounds of a penetrating nature, one of which completely perforated the heart and the other penetrating the abdomen divided the intestines, from the effect of which the deceased died at once.

Held, that having regard to the nature of the wounds inflicted the accused must be deemed to have intended to cause death or at least such bodily injury as was likely to cause death and was, therefore, guilty of murder.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated the 15th April 1925.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Lachhman Singh has been sentenced to transportation for life for the murder of Sajjan Singh on the evening of the 25th September 1924.

In continuation of an altercation which had taken place earlier in the day between the mother of the appellant and the wife of the deceased the two men were struggling in front of their houses when Lachhman Singh suddenly struck the deceased with a weapon which has not been recovered and which is variously described as a spear head and a sickle. Sajjan Singh collapsed and died at once whilst Lachhman Singh ran off to his house where he was shortly afterwards arrested with blood stains on his clothes and his person by the village notables to whom he is said to have confessed his guilt.

The medical evidence shows that the person of the deceased bore two wounds of a penetrating nature one of which completely perforated the heart; the other penetrating the abdomen on the left side had divided the intestines. Death was due to shock and hæmorrhage.

The eye-witnesses in the case are Musamat Basant Kaur, Musammatt Naraini, Musammatt Rukman and Musammatt Tabo, who all were in the neighbourhood and were likely to have seen any fight that took place in the open space before their houses. We believe their statements implicitly.

The appellant pleaded not guilty but produced no defence. He denied all knowledge of the occurrence and did not take the plea of self defence. Even, therefore, if the deceased was the stronger man of the two he was unarmed and the appellant was under no apprehension of receiving grievous hurt in the course of the struggle. The fight was an ordinary one arising out of a very trivial dispute and the appellant stabbed to death an unarmed man. He himself bore no mark of injury upon his person. Having regard to the nature of the wounds inflicted it is impossible for us to avoid the conclusion that his intention was, if not to cause death, at least to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. We consider that offences of this type are becoming far too common and that the sentence passed upon the appellant is not excessive.

We dismiss the appeal.

The right to perform the pūja of an idol or to have a share of the offerings made to the idol cannot be said to be a right of user of land, as provided in s. 145, Cr. P. C. Therefore a dispute relating to such a right does not come within that section.

Guiram Ghoshal v. Lal Behary Das, 6 Ind. Cas. 182; 37 C. 578, 14 C. W. N. 611; 12 C. L. J. 22, 11 Cr. L. J. 292, referred to.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This is a Reference by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hooghly recommending that an order passed under s. 147 of the Cr. P. C., should be set aside.

The dispute between the parties was with regard to the performance of the pūja of an idol. There was no dispute as regards the temple or any land belonging to the idol. The whole question in controversy is whether the right claimed by the first party is a right of user of any land, as explained in s. 145 sub-s. (2) of the Cr. P. C. The right is alleged to be a right to go into the temple and to perform the pūja and to take a portion of the offerings made to the idol.

The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that this right is not included within the words "right of user of any land." He refers to a decision of this Court in the case of Guiram Ghoshal v. Lal Behary Das (1), in support of his conclusion.

It is contended on behalf of the first party that that decision proceeded upon the ground that the expression "land" was not defined in s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., as it then stood, and as now it has been especially enacted that it includes a "building" under the newly added sub-s. (2) of s. 145, the authority of that case is no longer in force. However, that may be, it seems to me that the right to perform the pūja of an idol, or to have a share of the offerings made to the idol, cannot be said to be a right of user of any land, as explained in s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., and, therefore, the present dispute cannot be considered to be one coming under the provisions of that section.

On this ground I would accept the Reference, and set aside the order of the Magistrate in favour of the first party.

If there is such a dispute between the parties which the Magistrate considers may lead to any breach of the peace, he may take such steps as he considers necessary under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C.

The order for payment of costs is set aside, and the costs, if paid, will be refunded.

One of the Constables deputed to keep order at a wrestling match interfered with the wrestling, whereupon several members of the audience set upon the members of the Police force present, hustled them and tore their uniforms.

Held, (1) that the assailants of the Constables were guilty of offences under ss. 147 and 332/149, Penal Code;

(2) that, in the circumstances of the case, severe sentences were not called for.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut.

Sir Charles Ross Alston, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. Waliullah (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision on behalf of six persons, who have been convicted under s. 147 read with ss. 149 and 332 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, and they have been further directed to execute bonds with sureties under s. 106 of the Cr. P. C., to keep the peace.

On the 12th January, 1925, there was a wrestling match between Hashmat of Jalalabad and Inna of Kairana in the Ohharian fair at Kairana. This wrestling match, it appears, was under the patronage of the Municipal Board and the Municipality had invited Policemen to keep peace and order in the fair. The wrestling match was a very evenly contested one and, according to the evidence of the Vice-Chairman, five minutes more were allowed to the wrestlers to finish the wrestling; but it appears that one Qazim Husain Constable, who was a backer of Hashmat, interfered with the wrestling. Thereafter there was a sort of scuffle and the net result was that some of the Policemen were hustled and their uniform torn. It is very difficult in a case like this, where the backers of the wrestlers were grappled on the throat, to resist rushing the arena when a Constable who was backer of one of the wrestlers was interfering; but that, however, will not permit the crowd or such of the members of the assembly present there to hustle the Police who were there for the purpose of maintaining law and order. Having given my careful consideration to all that Sir Charles Ross Alston had to say in support of his case and the agreement of the Assistant Government Advocate, I am of opinion that the whole of the incident was a very trivial affair; but the accused were, no doubt, technically guilty of the offence with which they were charged. I realise that the duty of controlling a crowd at these wrestling matches is a very serious duty and anybody interfering therewith must be punished. But under the circumstances of this case I am of opinion that the period of imprisonment already served by the petitioners is a sufficient punishment. I reduce the sentence to that already undergone. I maintain the sentences of fine. I do not think it is in this case necessary to bind the accused under s. 106 of the Cr. P. C., to keep the peace. I set aside the order directing the accused to execute bonds under that section.

Section 73 of the Contract Act does not necessarily exclude . . . of the rule laid down in Bain v. . . . . . at normally apart from deliberate carelessness or known want of title by a vendor, a purchaser cannot recover damages for loss of his bargain under a contract for the sale of real estate, apart from costs of investigating the title. The question must be answered on the facts and circumstances of each case whether that rule would apply to that particular case [p 229, col 2]

In an ordinary contract for the purchase and sale of land in which the vendor contracts to make out a marketable title, the usual result would be, if without any default on the part of the vendor he was unable to make out a marketable title, that the bargain would be off and the vendor would have to pay the purchaser's costs of the agreement and of the inspection of the title-deeds. But if the conduct of the vendor in committing the breach shows that he has been guilty of any default of a wilful nature, then the damages would be calculated on a higher scale, and the measure of damages would be the difference between the contract price and the market price of the property at the date of the breach. Per Fawcett, J.—It is not the profit which would have arisen to the plaintiffs, which is to be taken into account, but the market price of the property on the date of the breach [p 231, col. 2.]

The discretion which a Court has under s 73, Contract Act, cannot properly be restricted by any Judge-made rule that every case of a particular kind must be dealt with in a particular manner. [p 232, col. 1.]

The circumstances of each case have to be considered in deciding what is reasonable and proper compensation for the damage, caused by a breach of contract under s 73 of the Contract Act and the Court is not bound in every case to award damages on the basis of a difference between the price at the date of the contract and the market price at the date of the breach. [p. 232, col. 2.]

In a case where the plaintiff has no very outstanding circumstances to support his claim to damages on a higher scale, the fact of the contract being made under conditions similar to those obtaining in England is a factor which can reasonably be taken into account. [p. 233, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Ag. C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiffs for recovery of the deposit money, and for damages in respect of a contract entered into between them and the deceased Raja Bahadur Narsinggirji with reference to certain immoveable property in Bombay which has been described as "Watson's Annexe." The contract was entered into on January 12, 1920. There was no formal contract between the parties, but it is evidenced by the two letters written on January 12, 1920, to the parties by their common broker (Exs. A2 and 1). The price of this property was fixed at Rs. 18,00,000 (eighteen lacs). The plaintiffs paid Rs. 1,00,000 as earnest money on January 13.

The plaintiffs' case is that Raja Bahadur Narsinggirji broke the contract on November 20, 1920, the final date by which performance of the contract was insisted upon on their behalf. It appears that the plaintiffs entered into a contract for the sale of this very property with another person for twenty-three lacs of rupees within a fortnight from the date of the agreement in question. The plaintiffs ultimately claimed the return of the deposit money and damages to the extent of five lacs of rupees by way of loss which they suffered on account of their having been unable to carry out their contract with their purchaser.

The defendant denied having broken the contract, and in effect contended that he had a good title to the property which he was always ready and willing to convey to the plaintiffs, and that the difficulty which arose in consequence of a suit filed by one Dr. Billimoria, who was in possession of this property as a lessee from him, was one for which he was not in any sense responsible. He made a counter claim for the specific performance of the contract in his favour, and contended that the plaintiffs had forfeited the deposit money.

On these pleadings the necessary issues were raised, and the evidence adduced principally consisted of the correspondence between the parties. The oral evidence in the case is not of much importance, so far as the . . . issues in the case are concerned.

On a consideration of the facts disclosed in the correspondence and of the oral evidence the learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was a representation by the defendant to plaintiffs that Dr. Billimoria was in occupation under a lease which was shortly to expire, and that the plaintiffs agreed to buy the property on the faith of such representation. He also found that the plaintiffs were justified in rescinding the contract on November 20, 1920, and that the defendant had committed a breach of the contract. On these findings the learned Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the return of one lac of rupees paid as earnest money, and for costs incidental to the investigation of the title in reference to this contract. As regards damages the learned Judge made a reference to the Commissioner for inquiry as to the amount of damages. He did not decide any question as to the basis upon which damages were to be assessed in the case. The learned Judge thought that there was a good deal to be said in favour of the rule laid down in Bain v. Fothergill (1) that normally, apart from deliberate carelessness or known want of title by a vendor, a purchaser cannot recover damages for loss of his bargain under a contract for the sale of real estate, apart from costs of investigating the title. But he held that the rule in India was different from that laid down in Bain v. Fothergill (1) and made this reference to the Commissioner for the determination of damages.

The legal representative of the original defendant, Raja Narsinggirji, who died during the pendency of the suit, has appealed from this judgment. In appeal the claim for specific performance has not been pressed, and nothing remains to be said with reference to that part of the defendant's claim.

Principally two points have been raised in support of the appeal. First, it is argued that the lower Court is wrong in directing a return of the deposit money. It is contended that the plaintiffs had really kept the contract open up to the end of October 1920; that they knew perfectly well since June 1920 that Dr. Billimoria had filed a suit against the defendant to enforce specific performance of an agreement to lease this very property for a further period of six years; that that suit between Dr. Billimoria and the defendant was pending; and that with full knowledge of that fact they kept the contract alive with a view to secure if possible the profit which they were likely to make on account of their contract with S. R. Bomanji. It is further urged that when they gave notice on November 8 that they would treat the contract as cancelled if it was not performed by November 20, and when they made time of the essence of the contract they were not justified in doing so and the notice was not reasonable under the circumstances. The contention is that the defendant was trying his best to have the suit of Dr. Billimoria expedited, and it was not under his control to get the decision of the suit on or before any particular date. It is urged that if the notice is not reasonable under the circumstances, the plaintiffs have no right to recover this earnest money. The second point relates to the question of damages.

I shall first deal with the question as to the right of the plaintiffs to recover the earnest money. In connection with this point, it is necessary to remember at the start that this property which formed the subject-matter of the agreement between the parties was a lease-hold property. The terms of the lease are to be found in Ex. D in the case. The land was leased out by trustees of the Port of Bombay for fifty years from January 1, 1886, and at the date of this contract, i. e., in January 1920 nearly thirty-three years had elapsed, and the lease was still to run for about seventeen years. As regards the buildings put up by the lessee on this land, unless the lease was renewed, under the terms of the lease the lessee had only a right to remove the building at the termination of the lease. That was the nature of the property for which the plaintiffs had agreed to pay eighteen lacs of rupees. On January 12, 1920, the contract was entered into through a firm of brokers who were not familiar with transactions in land and immoveable property. We find that after Narsinggirji made the offer on December 30, 1919, two letters were written by the brokers on January 12, 1920, one to the plaintiffs and the other to the deceased defendant Narsinggirji. The letter to the plaintiffs was in these terms:— "We have this day bought by your order and for your account from Raja Bahadur Narsinggirji Gyangirji Watson's Annexe Building situated at Apollo Bunder, Fort, Bombay, admeasuring about 7,400 square yards of Bombay Port Trust Land (the present Port Trust lease is to run for about sixteen years further) for Rs. 18,00,000. Title deeds to be marketable. The purchaser is to pay Rs. 1,00,000, as earnest money. Legal charges to be paid half by you and half by the seller. The sale to be completed within six months from the date of this contract."

We find substantially the same terms in the letter to the defendant. On January 13, the earnest money, Rs. one lac, was paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant. It appears that on January 22, the plaintiffs agreed to sell this very property for twenty-three lacs of rupees to S. R. Bomanji, and the letter refers to the payment of Rs. 50,000 by way of earnest money to the plaintiffs.

Before the end of January it came to be known that Dr. Billimoria, who was in possession of this property under a lease, which was to expire shortly, was putting forward a claim to a further lease of this property for six years against the defendant. This fact came to be known to the plaintiffs by a letter of January 29, written by the Solicitors of Dr. Billimoria to the plaintiffs. The defendants wrote to the broker on January 30, saying that it was a misrepresentation to say that the present lessee was entitled to a new lease. That must have been communicated to the plaintiffs.

It may be mentioned that in Dr. Billimoria's suit a consent decree was passed according to which Dr. Billimoria was to vacate the premises on or before February 23, 1923. The allegation of Dr. Billimoria as to his right to have a further lease for six years from Narasinggirji was not investigated. In the first place there was his claim for specific performance of this agreement for a further lease, and, secondly, the defendant had to meet the possible plea of the tenant in possession based on the provisions of the Rent Act (Bom. Act II of 1918). In that state this consent decree was obtained on February 24, 1921.

The present suit was filed on August 3, 1921. I have stated the correspondence between the parties at some length, as the facts appearing in the correspondence have a bearing upon both the points arising in the appeal. With regard to the question of the right of the plaintiffs to claim the earnest money, it depends upon the view which the Court takes of the letters of August 12 and of November 8 written by the plaintiffs' Solicitors to the defendant's Solicitors. It is quite true that on August 12 they did not in terms make time of the essence of the contract. Apparently they were not unwilling to keep the contract alive then, if by any chance the contract could be completed by November 1, as that was the date fixed by the plaintiffs with reference to the fulfilment of their agreement with S. R. Bomanji. But they intimated in clear terms in that letter that if the sale was not completed by that time, they would lose the benefit of their contract with S. R. Bomanji, and that they would claim the difference of rupees five lacs by way of damages. The suit of Dr. Billimoria which had really created a difficulty in the way of the fulfilment of this contract was then pending. It appears that the summons of the suit was served on the defendant on June 10, and the written statement was filed on August 5. Apparently in accordance with the suggestion made by the defendant's Solicitors the plaintiffs' Solicitors had called for the title-deeds after April 12. Nothing appears to have been done, and the plaintiffs were waiting for the completion of the contract by November 1. There was practically no correspondence from August 16 to October 28, 1920. At any rate on November 8, 1920, the plaintiffs' Solicitors definitely intimated to the defendant's Solicitors that they could not possibly wait beyond November 20. It is true that if by any chance the contract could be fulfilled by that date they were anxious to see it fulfilled as that would put them in a position to fulfil their contract with their purchaser. But the terms of the letter of November 8 are very clear, and the whole question is whether on November 8 the plaintiffs were justified in making time of the essence of the contract, and whether the notice given by them is reasonable under the circumstances. It is urged on behalf of the defendant that it is not a reasonable notice because it was not within their power to get the suit disposed of before that date. In fact they made some effort after November 20 to expedite the hearing of that suit, and as a result of that effort apparently the hearing was expedited. Ultimately a consent decree was obtained in February 1921.

The question as between the plaintiffs and the defendant is whether the plaintiffs were bound to wait until the disposal of the suit. That really is the contention of the defendant. According to the defendant the plaintiffs having elected in August 1920 to keep the contract alive, they could not ask him on November 8 to complete the contract within twelve days from that date. As between the plaintiffs and the defendant the original agreement was to fulfil the contract within six months. That period expired on June 12, and thereafter having regard to the nature of the property it is clear that the plaintiffs could not be expected to wait for any indefinite length of time. It is true that as between the plaintiffs and the defendant the contract which the plaintiffs had entered into with S. R. Bomanji is not material. Leaving alone that contract, it is clear that the plaintiffs themselves were entitled, without any reference to the particular reason for their doing so, to insist upon the fulfilment of the contract within a reasonable time. After June 1920 they were in a position to make time of the essence of the contract in view of the difficulty about getting immediate vacant possession. On August 12 they intimated fairly clearly to the defendant that they would insist upon the fulfilment of the contract by November 1. It is quite true that they did not state that they were making time of the essence of the contract; and that letter cannot be taken as notice making time of the essence of the contract. But in fact a definite intimation was given thereby that they would insist on the fulfilment of the contract by November 1. I do not take that as election on the part of the plaintiffs that they were going to wait until the disposal of the suit, whatever time the suit may take. It only indicates a desire to wait up to November 1. In fixing November 1, it seems to me, that the plaintiffs gave the defendant sufficient time in view of the pendency of Dr. Billimoria's claim; but when it became evident that they could not allow the contract to remain outstanding any longer without risk to themselves, they made it clear on November 8 that at the most they would wait up to November 20. It seems to me that they were justified in doing so, and the time they gave was under the circumstances reasonable.

The dispute between the vendor and his sub-lessee was a matter with which the plaintiffs were not directly concerned. If the defendant wanted to have the benefit of this contract, it was his duty to see the disputes between him and his vendee settled in such a manner as to put him in a position to fulfil his part of the contract. Having regard to the nature of the property the plaintiffs were perfectly justified in insisting upon the fulfilment of the contract by November 1, and when they realised that the contract was not fulfilled by November 1, they made it perfectly clear to the defendant that they could not wait in any case beyond November 20. That is a position which, it seems to me, they were justified in taking up. The time given was reasonable. They could have no control over the proceedings in the suit between Dr. Billimoria and the defendant, and the result in that case shows that the defendant could not have completed this contract in any reasonable time. It is in view of the result in that suit that possibly the claim for specific performance is not pressed by the defendant now. But whatever the reason may be for not pressing the claim for specific performance, I am satisfied that the view taken by the lower Court as to the return of the deposit money to the plaintiffs is right. I do not think under the circumstances that the defendant could forfeit this money for his own benefit.

The next question in the case relates to damages. As regards the measure of damages in a case of this kind, the test to be applied is not easy to lay down. No doubt s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act would apply to this contract, as it would apply to any other contract. Under s. 73 the plaintiffs would be entitled to claim, any loss or damage caused to them, which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach, or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result from the breach of it.

The question that we have to consider is whether the rule of English Law laid down in Bain v. Fothergill (1) is necessarily excluded by the terms of s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act. I am assuming for the moment that the rule might otherwise apply to the facts in this case. I shall deal separately with the question as to whether in the present case the breach on the part of the defendant could be said to be due to wilful default on his part, or on account of some difficulty in the way of making out a title for which he cannot be held justly responsible. The question is whether under the circumstances the plaintiffs are entitled only to the return of the deposit money, and all the costs of the investigation of title, or whether they are entitled to damages on the footing of the difference between the contract price and the market value of the property on the date of the breach.

The decisions on this point have been somewhat conflicting. I may mention that in Pitamber Sundarji v. Cassibai (2) the view taken by Mr. Justice Scott was that the English rule on this point would apply here. In Nagardas Saubhagadas v. Ahmed Khan (3) there are observations of Farran, C. J., to the effect that the Legislature has not prescribed a different measure of damages in the case of contracts dealing with land from that laid down in the case of contracts relating to commodities. That was the decision of a Division Bench on the Appellate Side of this Court; and on the facts of that case it was not essential to decide the question as to whether the application of the English rule was necessarily excluded in India in virtue of the provisions of s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act. Then Macleod, C.J., considered this question in Ranchhod Bhawan v. Manmohandas Ramji (4) and held that s. 73 imposed no exception on the ordinary law as to damages whatever the subject matter of the contract, and in effect he held that the English rule would not apply in India unless it could be shown that the parties to the contract expressly or impliedly contracted that this should not render the vendor liable in damages. In Hasan Premji v. Jerbai, O. C. J. Appeal No. 41 of 1920, decided by Macleod, C.J., and Shah, J., on December 17, 1920, (Unrep.), the question came up for consideration on the Original Side before the Court of Appeal, and it was dealt with as follows:

¶ "Therefore, it must follow that the defendants have committed a breach of their agreement, and under s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act, they would be liable to damages. What the measure of damages would be must depend entirely on a contract of this description on the facts of this case. In an ordinary contract for the purchase and sale of land in which the defendant contracts to make out a marketable title, the usual result would be if without any default on the part of the vendor he was unable to make out a marketable title, that the bargain would be off and the vendor would have to pay the purchaser's costs of the agreement and of the inspection of the title-deeds. But if the conduct of the vendor in committing the breach shows that he has been guilty of any default of a wilful nature, then the damages would be calculated on a higher scale, and the measure of damages would be the difference between the contract price and the market price of the property at the date of the breach. In any event, the defendants would have to pay the costs of the plaintiff up to the time they found they could not complete the bargain."

In that case it was held on the facts that the defendants had been guilty of wilful default, and accordingly the order directing an inquiry as to the amount of damages on the footing of the difference between the contract price and the market price was upheld. The same Bench had occasion to consider the same point again in Vallabhdas Tulsi Das v. Nagar Juthabidas Juthabai (5) when Macleod, C. J., observed as follows page 1223*):—

"It is, therefore, a case of a vendor contracting to sell property to which he knew that his title was defective; and the only question at issue is whether he should pay damages calculated according to the ordinary rule in the case of a breach of contract, or whether he is only bound to pay the purchaser's costs of the agreement and of the investigation of title. I do not wish to exclude the possibility of there being cases in which it may be found there was an implied contract that in the event of the title proving to be defective without any default of the vendor, he should not be liable to pay damages according to the ordinary rule."

In that particular case the Court found that it was a case in which the defendant should be held liable in damages on the footing of wilful default.

The question now is whether the application of the English rule is necessarily excluded in all cases, and whether there should be a reference to the Commissioner to determine the amount of damages on the basis of the difference between the contract price and the market value of the property on the date of the breach. On a careful perusal of the judgments in Bain v. Forthergill (1) which affirmed the rule in Flureau v. Thornhill (6), and the terms of s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act, it seems to me that the application of the rule is not necessarily excluded. The question must be answered on the facts and circumstances of each case whether that rule would apply to that particular case. That is the view which was taken practically in the unreported judgment in Hasan Premji v. Jerbai, O. C. J. Appeal No. 41 of 1920, decided by Macleod, C. J., and Shah, J., on December 17, 1924 (Unrep.)] and in Vallabhdas Tulsi Das v. Nagardas Juthabai (5). On the present state of the authorities that is the view which I am still inclined to take. I am aware of the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Nabinchandra Saha Pramanick v. Krishna Barana Dasee (7) and by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Adikesavan Naidu v. Gurunatha Chetti (8). I have referred in detail to the opinions which have been expressed on different occasions in this Court. As I read the judgment of the Chief Justice in the case of Vallabhdas Tulsi Das v. Nagardas Juthabai (5) it seems to me that in a proper case the rule in Bain v. Forthergill (1) can be and may be applied in India. It is possible that it may become necessary hereafter to have this question of recurring importance considered and decided by a Full Bench. But having regard to the circumstances of this case, it seems to me that under the present state of the authorities the application of the English rule is not excluded. I, therefore, proceed to consider whether on the facts of this case that rule could be properly applied.

As regards the facts it is clear that from the beginning the defendant's position was that the representation of Dr. Billimoria that he was entitled to a lease for a further period of six years was false, and that he was otherwise in a position to fulfil the contract. If the allegation of Dr. Billimoria had been dealt with in the suit filed by him on its merits, we would have been in a better position to know what the real fact was. But there were conflicting considerations in that suit. On the one hand, there was the plea of Dr. Billimoria that there was an agreement to give him a lease for a further period of six years. Even if that allegation was not proved, the defendant had to face a further plea on account of the provisions of the Rent Act. If Dr. Billimoria could not be evicted from the premises, he would not be in a position to give vacant possession of the property in fulfilment of his contract with the plaintiffs. Under the circumstances the parties compromised the matter, and in February 1921, the compromise arrived at was that Dr. Billimoria was to vacate the premises by February 28, 1923. That compromise does not indicate how far the allegation as to the contract between him and the defendant for a further lease was true. Narsinggirji died before the suit came on for hearing.

On the present record, therefore, my view is that the defendant's contention, that it is the improper claim on the part of Dr. Billimoria that has really come in the way of his fulfilling his contract with the plaintiffs, cannot be rejected. There is nothing on the record to show that the defendant was otherwise not in a position to fulfil the contract or that he was unwilling to fulfil the contract. In fact before any investigation of the title took place, the plaintiffs also realised that the contract could not be put through unless this difficulty which arose in consequence of the claim by Dr. Billimoria was removed. That difficulty could not be removed within the time fixed by the plaintiffs and, therefore, the contract could not be fulfilled. Then we should have regard to the informal manner in which the terms of the contract are evidenced in this case. The usual agreement which we find in such cases between the parties was not executed. The terms are evidenced by the two letters which are written by the broker, and it is sufficiently indicated in these letters that the defendant agreed to deduce a marketable title though the expression used in the letter is very inapt. In fact a marketable title could not be deduced by the defendant under the circumstances which I have indicated. There is nothing in the circumstances of the case nor in the terms of the contract, to show that the plaintiffs were not alive to the reasonable possibility, which exists in such cases, of the vendor being unable to make a good title without any default on his part. It appears to me that this case falls clearly within the rule of Flureau v. Thornhill (6) as explained and affirmed by the House of Lords in Bain v. Forthergill (1).

I am, therefore, of opinion that under the circumstances of this case it is not necessary to make any reference to the Commissioner for any inquiry into the quantum of damages. The plaintiffs will get damages by way of costs incidental to the investigation of title. This would, in my opinion, meet the justice of the case. I would, therefore, affirm the decree appealed from so far as it relates to the return of the earnest money, the dismissal of the counter-claim, and the cost of the investigation of title. But I would set aside the decree so far as it relates to the reference to the Commissioner for inquiry into the question of damages, and dismiss the rest of the plaintiffs' claim for damages.

(7) 9 Ind. Cas. 523; 38 C. 453; 15 C. W. N. 420.

(8) 39 Ind. Cas. 358; 40 M. 338; 32 M. L. J. 180; (1917) M. W. N. 171; 5 L. W. 425; 22 M. L. T. 300.

Taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, including the fact that the plaintiffs' claim for damages on the higher scale has been disallowed, we direct that the plaintiffs should get their costs in the lower Court from the defendant, and that each party should bear his own costs of appeal.

Fawcett, J.—I agree that there was a breach of contract on the part of the defendant on November 20, 1920. I think, however, that the breach is not so much due to a failure to show a marketable title, as a failure to show a title, subject only to a lease expiring on March 1, 1920, and not to any longer or other lease. On the oral evidence that was adduced, and accepted by the learned Judge in the Court below, there was a representation by the original defendant that the only lease to which the property was subject was one expiring on March 1, 1920, and the learned Judge has held that that was a material representation, and the plaintiffs were justified in rescinding the contract. That finding is not disputed before us, and the difficulty that really prevented the performance of the contract in this case was the failure of the defendant to pass the property, subject only to this particular lease, there being in fact a claim by Dr. Billimoria that he was entitled to a longer lease. This claim was not a negligible one, for in May 1920 he brought a suit asking that the defendant should be ordered specifically to perform the agreement to lease the property for six years, and also that he should be restrained by an injunction from selling or completing the sale of the premises to the plaintiffs, except subject to the six years' lease that he had set up. The original date fixed for performance was in August 1920, and I agree with the learned Chief Justice that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiffs were entitled on November 8, 1920, to give notice to the defendant that they did. I also agree that in the circumstances there was a reasonable time fixed in the notice for the defendant to remove the hitch about this claim of Dr. Billimoria. It is no doubt true that there would be great difficulties in getting the suit decided before November 20, 1920. But there were other ways of removing the impediment, such as an amicable settlement; and it is quite clear that the law in a case of this kind is that the intending purchaser is not bound to wait indefinitely until a claim has been got rid of in the ordinary course of litigation. The defendant had due notice from the plaintiffs to get rid of this claim, and I do not accept the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant that they misled the defendant and so were disentitled to give their notice of November 8, 1920.

The next question is as to the alleged right of the defendant to retain the deposit made by the plaintiffs. On this point, it seems to me clear that there being, as I have held, a breach of the contract on the part of the defendant, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover their deposit, and no facts are shown which make it inequitable that the plaintiffs should so recover it, or make it equitable that the defendant should retain it. The difficulty that arose was not in any way due to any default on the part of the plaintiffs, and so far as there was any conduct conducive to Dr. Billimoria's claim, it must have arisen on the part of the defendant rather than on the part of the plaintiffs.

Next as to the question of damages. The plaintiffs claimed the sum of five lacs, being the difference of the price at which they had agreed to purchase from the defendant and the price at which they had entered into a contract to sell to S. R. Bomanji. But that claim can be disposed of very shortly by a reference to illustration (o) to s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act, which shows that it is not the profit which would have arisen to the plaintiff, which is to be taken into account, but the market price of the property on the date of the breach. At the same time, as ruled in Engell v. Fitch (9) the profit which the plaintiffs could have made on a re-sale, if uncontradicted by other evidence, is evidence, of the latter value.

The main question is whether in the circumstances of this case the plaintiffs should be allowed damages under what may be called the ordinary rule of the difference between the price which they agreed to pay the defendant and the market price on the date of the breach, namely, November 20, 1920. That is not a definite rule which is laid down in the text of s. 73, and it is not the law, as I understand it, that in every case where a contract of this kind has been broken the party who suffers from the breach is entitled to get compensation in that particular manner. There can be exceptions, and the illustrations to s. 73 merely lay down what is expressed in s. 51 (3) of the English Sale of Goods Act, viz., that the measure of damages in such a case is prima facie to be ascertained in that manner. Each case, in my opinion, depends upon its own particular circumstances, and I agree with the opening remark of the Chief Justice Sir Norman Macleod in the passage quoted in Vallabhdas Tulsi Das v. Nagar Das Juthabai (5) from his judgment in another case [Hasan Premji v. Jerbai, O. C. J. Appeal No. 41 of 1920, decided by Macleod, C. J., and Shah J., on December 17, 1920 (Unrep.) that "what the measure of damages would be must depend entirely in a contract of this description on the facts of each case." He then goes on to say that:—

"In an ordinary contract for the purchase and sale of land in which the defendant contracts to make out a marketable title, the usual result would be, if without any default on the part of the vendor, he was unable to make out a marketable title, that the bargain would be off and the vendor would have to pay the purchaser's costs of the agreement and of the inspection of the title-deeds."

That is practically applying the rule adopted in England in the leading case of Bain v. Fothergill (1) and if the Chief Justice intended to go back on his previous decision in Ranchhod Bhawan v. Manmohandas Ramji (4). I should certainly feel great difficulty in following it. The view taken in Ranchhod Bhawan v. Manmohandas Ramji (4) has been followed in the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, as already mentioned in my learned brother's judgment, as well as in the Lahore High Court in Jai Kishen Das v. Arya Priti Nidhi Sabha (10) and in my opinion the discretion which a Court has under s. 73 cannot properly be restricted by any Judge-made rule that every case of a particular kind must be dealt with in a particular manner, such as the rule laid down in Bain

v. Fothergill (1). I think each case depends upon its own facts, and I may, for instance, refer to a case which I had before me last year, viz., Shamsuddin Tajbhai v. Dahyabhai (11). The plaintiff there sued for damages for breach of contract to sell immoveable property, and though I held that the defendant had been deliberately trying to get out of his agreement and, therefore, was guilty of conduct which would presumably come under the head of "wilful default" on his part, yet in the circumstances of the case, namely, certain delay on the part of the plaintiff, I thought the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any damages other than the taxed costs of and incidental to the agreement for sale, plus the forfeiture of the defendant's earnest money. In my opinion no hard and fast rule can be laid down in these cases, and if it were necessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether the rule laid down in Bain v. Fothergill (1) should be applied as an invariable rule of law, then I agree with my learned brother that it would be desirable to have a reference about it to a Full Bench. But I think we agree that the circumstances of each case have to be considered in deciding what is reasonable and proper compensation for the damage caused by a breach of contract under s. 73 of the Indian Contract Act; that the Court is not bound in every case to award damages on the basis of a difference between the price at the date of the contract and the market price at the date of the breach; and that the rule laid down in Bain v. Fothergill (1) is not necessarily excluded and can be properly applied if the circumstances justify it.

In this particular case, the circumstances are somewhat peculiar. The contract was entered into at a time when the Rent Act was in force in Bombay, and when undoubtedly there were difficulties in the way of an owner obtaining possession of land which had been leased to a tenant. These difficulties were within the knowledge of both the parties to this suit. The case is thus a very different one from that of Engell v. Fitch (9) which was another case where the trouble arose on account of a failure to get vacant possession. The vendors were mortgagees who sold with vacant possession, and it was held that they had deliberately failed to eject the mortgagor, and therefore, there had been a "wilful default" on their part which took the case out of the rule in Bain v. Fothergill, (1). But this cannot apply in the present case where the defendant would, quite apart from the question whether he had or had not given to Dr. Billimoria a fresh lease of the premises, not necessarily get vacant possession by August 1920, even although Dr. Billimoria's lease expired on March 1, 1920. I bear in mind the remark of the learned Judge that the same difficulties would not have confronted the plaintiffs, who could, he says, have alleged that they wanted the land for their own occupation or for building operations. But they could hardly have alleged that they wanted it for their own occupation in view of the admission that they had bought it for a syndicate, and as regards building operations, it has to be shown under the Rent Act that the property is reasonably required for such operations. It is not by any means certain that the plaintiffs would have got an order for delivery of possession by Dr. Billimoria, if he had contested the matter, within any specific period of time, and these peculiar difficulties can, I think, be fairly taken into consideration in regard to the question of damages.

Another circumstance which I think may be taken into consideration in this case is the fact that this was a contract in Bombay, where conveyancing work and negotiations in regard to purchase and sale of property are carried on in a very similar manner to that followed in England. The House of Lords have laid down, for reasons connected with conveyancing difficulties, that the rule in Bain v. Fothergill (1) is a reasonable one to apply in certain circumstances, and, therefore, in a case where the plaintiff has no very outstanding circumstances to support his claim to damages on a higher scale, the fact of the contract being made under conditions similar to those obtaining in England is, I think, a factor which can reasonably be taken into account.

Then there is the further fact that the suit brought by Dr. Billimoria was compromised, and that in the circumstances it is impossible to say with certainty that his claim was due to some conduct of the defendant which should enhance the damages otherwise awardable. It seems to me that, having regard to the special circumstances of the case, the difficulty which arose was not entirely due to defendant's conduct, but can also be reasonably ascribed to the difficulties of the kind that I have mentioned, and that substantial justice is done by putting the parties back in the position from which they originally started, that is to say, that the plaintiffs should merely recover their deposit and get their costs of investigating the title.

I, therefore, agree with the decree proposed by my learned brother.

Mistake of fact—Money paid, when can be recovered—Mistake between payer and third person, effect of

Where money is paid under a mistake of fact intentionally, without reference to the truth or falsehood of the fact, the plaintiff meaning to waive all enquiry into it, and that the person receiving shall have the money at all events, whether the fact be true or false, the latter is entitled to retain it, but if it is paid under the impression of the truth of a fact which is untrue, it may ordinarily be recovered back, however careless the party paying may have been in omitting to use due diligence to enquire into the fact. The mistake must, however, be one as between the person paying and the person receiving the money and as to some fact affecting the right of the payee to receive the money. [p. 234, col. 2; p. 235, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of this Court on the Original Side in Civil Regular No 610 of 1922.

Mr. Clifton, for the Appellants.

Mr. Young, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises is founded on money had and received to plaintiffs' use. In the plaint originally filed there was an allegation of negligence on the part of the defendant Bank. Defendant demanded the particulars of the alleged negligence. The plaintiff was unable to supply them, and the Court ordered that this paragraph be struck out, plaintiff reserving permission to file a plea of negligence if, after inspecting documents, he was in a position to do so. Eleven days later an amended plaint was filed and all allegations of negligence were omitted.

There is no dispute as to the facts. The plaintiff firm carries on business in Penang under the style of Ghee Seng & Co. They have a branch in Rangoon under the style of Ghee Seng Chan & Co. On the 16th July 1922, plaintiff firm in Penang received a telegram purporting to come from their Rangoon branch. It ran as follows:—"Rupees bought pay Mercantile five thousand. Advice follow letter Ghee Seng Chan." On receipt of this telegram, plaintiff assumed it came from his Rangoon branch and went to the Mercantile Bank and, showing them the telegram, desired to pay in five thousand dollars. The Bank declined to receive the money saying that they had had no instructions to do so. On the 18th of July, the Mercantile Bank received a telegram "Receive five thousand Ghee Seng & Co., China and Southern Bank." Thereupon they informed plaintiff that they had now received advice and plaintiff paid them five thousand dollars. He was given a receipt in the ordinary printed form that the Bank uses, and, in that, it is stated "For the credit of China and Southern Bank, Rangoon." It appears that one Gaw Keong Pho went to the defendant Bank and offered to sell them 5,000 dollars. He told them that he was the travelling agent of Gee Seng & Co of Penang. They asked if he had a power-of-attorney or any documents to prove this. He said he had not. They then enquired how he would pay them 5,000 dollars and he said that Gee Seng & Co. would pay the Mercantile Bank. They then instructed the Mercantile Bank to receive the money. After receiving advice from the Mercantile Bank that the money had been paid in, they paid Gaw Keong Pho the equivalent in Rupees. Subsequently plaintiffs enquired from their Rangoon branch and found that they had not sent this telegram. Gaw Keong Pho was searched for, but had, of course, disappeared. It is obvious that he committed a fraud upon the defendant Bank and upon the plaintiffs.

The learned Judge in the Court below treated the case as being one raising the question as to which of two innocent parties was to suffer by this fraud. He held that plaintiffs had not done or omitted to do anything that they ought to have done which made the success of the fraud more easy, but that the defendant Bank had not made enquiries and had so conducted to the fraud, and he, therefore, held that plaintiff was entitled to recover his money back and that the defendant Bank was bound to restore it. He further held that even apart from that the money was paid to the Mercantile Bank by the plaintiff for his own use, and that the defendant Bank had received that money on account of the plaintiff firm and, through no fault of the plaintiff, had paid it away wrongly to someone else.

The appeal has been argued before us solely on the question as to whether this was money paid by mistake, and reliance is placed on the case of Kelly v. Solari (1). In that case Parke, J., said: "If, indeed, the money is intentionally paid, without reference to the truth or falsehood of the fact, the plaintiff meaning to waive all inquiry into it, and that the person receiving shall have the money at all events, whether the fact be true or false, the latter is certainly entitled to retain it; but if it is paid under the impression of the truth of a fact which is untrue, it may, generally speaking, be recovered back, however careless the party paying may have been, in omitting to use due diligence to inquire into the fact. In such a case the receiver was not entitled to it, nor intended to have it."

We were also referred to the dictum of Williams, J., in Townsend v. Crowdy (2): "No doubt, at one time the rule that money paid under a mistake of fact might be recovered back, was subject to the limitation that it must be shown that the party seeking to recover it back had been guilty of no laches. But, since the case of Kelly v. Solari (1) it has been established that it is not enough that the party had the means of learning the truth if he had chosen to make inquiry. The only limitation now is, that he must not waive all inquiry." Now, it cannot be said in this case that plaintiff intended to waive all inquiry or intended that defendant Bank was to receive the money at all events, and, if the rule stopped there, plaintiff would be entitled to a decision in his favour. However, there is a further fact to be weighed in deciding these cases, and that is, the mistake must be one as between the person paying and the person receiving the money and as to some fact affecting the right of the payee to receive the money.

In Chambers v. Miller (3), this principle is dealt with by Erle, C. J. It was a case in which a person presented a cheque for payment at a Bank. The cashier paid the money but, while the plaintiff was counting the money, he discovered that their client's account was overdrawn and demanded the money back. On plaintiff's refusing, the money was taken forcibly from him and a suit was brought for assault and trespass for taking the money by force, and it was urged that plaintiff was entitled to recover it. Erle, C. J., said: "It is true that there was a mistake in cashing the cheque at all, but that was a mistake as between the defendants and their customer. As between the plaintiff and the defendants there was no mistake at all; the plaintiff asked the defendants to cash the cheque, and they did so. But then the defendants say that by reason of this mistake they had a right to revoke the transaction; but it is clear to me that the money having once passed, it is, notwithstanding a mistake of this kind, a perfectly good payment and irrevocable. As to the case of Kelly v. Solari (1) and others of that class which have been cited, there the money was paid to a party who had no right to it whatever, and the mistake was between the parties themselves as to the money being due. Here the money was due, and as between the defendants and the plaintiff there was no manner of mistake whatsoever, and I am quite clear that, under these circumstances, the defendants could never have recovered back the money."

Williams, J., in his judgment said: "It may be that, if he had been aware of all the facts of which he afterwards became aware he would not have paid the money, but you cannot recover back money because you have paid it in ignorance of some fact, which had you known it, would have influenced you not to pay it; that fact being one with which the payee has nothing to do."

The fact in this case is the fact that the telegram received by plaintiff on the 16th of July was a false telegram and did not come from his Rangoon branch. Plaintiff was asked, "for what purpose did you pay the money in;" and his answer was, "I paid the money in because on the 16th I received a telegram saying, 'Rupees bought by Gee Seng Chan'." Again he was asked, "When you paid the money into the Mercantile Bank, did you give any instructions?" And he replied, "No, because I paid it in, in accordance with the instructions I received by telegram." It is no doubt true that believing that this telegram came from his Rangoon branch he paid in the money believing that the equivalent in rupees would be paid to his Rangoon branch. But the mistake of fact, on which he relies, was not a mistake as between him and the defendant Bank who received the money. The defendant Bank had nothing whatever to do with the fact that that telegram was a false telegram. The Bank was merely conducting an ordinary banking transaction with a stranger. All that they were concerned with was that they should get the dollars. They were told that plaintiff would pay the money in; they instructed the Mercantile Bank to collect the money; the plaintiff did pay the money in, and they thereupon carried through an ordinary business transaction. Under these circumstances, the rule laid down in Kelly v. Solari (1) does not apply. The money was not had and received to the plaintiffs' use and, in our opinion, the decision of the Court below was wrong, and must be reversed. The appeal will be accepted and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jhang, at Sargoda, dated the 23rd February 1925.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Certain creditors applied to have Narmal Das adjudicated an insolvent and this was done by the District Judge of Jhang on 8th January 1923. At the foot of the order on the English record there is an addition signed by the District Judge but not dated to the effect that Narmal Das should apply within two years for his discharge. I have consulted the vernacular record, however, and it is only a translation of the order proper and not of the undated addition. Proceedings went on before the District Judge and certain objections were urged before him. In the middle of these objections without notice to any one on the subject the District Judge who had succeeded the first District Judge noticed that the two years had expired in January 1925 and he therefore, passed an order annulling the adjudication as Narmal Das had not applied for his discharge within two years. This order is dated the 23rd February 1925, and it was further ordered that the Receiver should distribute the money in his hands amongst those creditors who had proved their debts and return the rest of the insolvent's property to him. Against this order two creditors have appealed.

A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay at the instance of the creditors as the property of the insolvent had vested in the Receiver and that he, therefore, was the only person aggrieved by the order annulling the adjudication especially as the ordinary rights of the creditors revived by the order of annulment. Narmal Das, however, was adjudicated an insolvent at the instance of the creditors and they are obviously the aggrieved parties. For this reason alone the creditors have a right of appeal. In this view of the case it is not necessary to decide whether a creditor must be an aggrieved party before he has the right of appeal as to which different views seem to have been taken by this High Court and the Allahabad High Court: vide Ishar Das v. Ladha Ram (1) and Shikri Prasad v. Aziz Ali (2). I overrule the preliminary objection.

In the appeal it was argued that it is clear from two records that the addendum at the foot of the signed and dated order was not written at the time the order was made. It seems to me that this view must prevail. It is true that it is laid down in s. 114 of the Evidence Act that the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed, but it is clear from a comparison of the two records that the addendum was not written when the order of adjudication was made. It is not clear when it was added. This may have been the next day or a week later or at any other subsequent time. But in any case it cannot be held to be a part of the order as no proper steps were ever taken by the Judge to review it after notice to the parties. It follows that this addendum cannot be considered and that no time was stated in the order within which the insolvent had to apply for his discharge although such time should have been stated.

As no such time was stated the order under appeal cannot be sustained. Of course, it would still be possible for the debtor to apply for his discharge under s. 41 of the Act which provides that he may apply at any time after the order of adjudication and shall apply within the period specified by the Court. Further, as he was never directed by the order to apply within two years s. 43 of the Act does not apply and the adjudication cannot be annulled for the reason given.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent insolvent that as a time was not fixed within which he was to apply for his discharge as ordered by s. 27 of the Act the order was defective, and it must be held that he was not adjudicated an insolvent in accordance with law. This consequence, however, does not follow. A wrong order when passed becomes final unless set aside in accordance with law.

No other point was argued before me. For the reasons given I accept the appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge under appeal. He is directed to proceed with the insolvency proceedings according to law. There will be no costs of this appeal as the insolvent does not seem to be to blame for what has happened.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur dated the 3rd July 1924.

The suit out of which this appeal arises and which has been dismissed by the Court below relates to certain zaminidari shares in villages mentioned in list B attached to the plaint. The plaintiffs claim the recovery of possession of 2/11 share in that property. This property originally belonged to one Ganga Bakhsh Singh. Ganga Bakhsh Singh died childless and on his death the estate devolved on his widow, Musammat Bindra, who entered into the possession of the estate after having obtained mutation of names in place of her husband from the Revenue Courts. Musammat Bindra died, as is proved by the evidence in the record, on or about the 30th of March 1917. The plaintiffs' case is that on her death the reversion opened to one Mannu Singh, now deceased, husband of Musammat Ram Kunwar, plaintiff No. 4 and on Sumer Singh, plaintiff No. 3, to the extent of 2/11th share in that estate. Munnu Singh executed a deed of gift in respect of half of his 1/11th share on the 22nd November 1921 in favour of Baldeo Singh son of Bahadur Singh plaintiff No. 1 and Sumer Singh executed another deed of gift on the 4th of March 1921 in favour of Baldeo Singh son of Kunwar Singh, plaintiff No. 2 in respect of one-half of his 1/11th share. The chief contesting defendant to the suit is Musammat Gulaba, now respondent in this appeal. The case set forth in the plaint was that Musammat Gulaba was in unlawful possession of the estate in suit. The title to that estate was claimed by the plaintiffs under the rules of inheritance of the Law of Mitakshara.

The defence to this suit was that Musammat Bindra entered into the possession of her husband's estate not as a Hindu widow with limited interest but under a custom governing the succession to the estate of Ganga Bakhsh Singh and under that custom she had absolute proprietary rights in the inheritance which devolved upon her from her husband Ganga Bakhsh, that in the exercise of her proprietary powers Musammat Bindra made a Will in favour of Musammat Gulaba on the 25th of February 1917 in respect of the entire estate which had devolved on Musammat Bindra by right of succession from her husband and that by the terms of that Will Musammat Gulaba acquired absolute proprietary interest in the property in suit.

The Trial Court has found that the custom under which Musammat Bindra acquired full proprietary rights in the estate of her husband was proved. It has also found that the Will of the 25th of February 1917 said to have been executed by Musammât Bindra in favour of Musammât Gulaba was also proved.

In the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court both these findings of the Trial Court were impugned. At the hearing of the appeal, however, the learned Counsel for the appellants expressly accepted the correctness of the finding as to the custom. The arguments were consequently limited to the question of the genuineness and validity of the Will of the 25th February 1917.

The attack on the Will was made on the following lines. Musammât Bindra was a pardanashin lady of an advanced age of 70 or 75 years. There was no motive for a Will of the nature now propounded by the defendant; the Will has the effect of ignoring the claims of natural heirs both of her own estate and of the estate of her husband. The testator was surrounded by Musammât Gulaba, her daughters and her son-in-law Pirthipal Singh. No relations either of Musammât Bindra or of her husband Ganga Bakhsh Singh were consulted in the matter of the Will. The attesting witnesses and the scribe were all strangers; Musammât Bindra had been ill and was about the time of the execution of the propounded Will attacked with paralysis which had made her speechless and more or less devoid of her senses.

These lines of attack we have carefully examined with reference to the evidence on the record and find that each one of them is amply and conclusively replied by the merits of the case. All along the arguments addressed to us on the side of the appellants we could never reach to a certainty as to whether the arguments were intended to attack the genuineness of the Will of the 25th February 1917 or whether they were intended to establish the case that the Will was the result of the exercise of undue influence on the part of the attesting witnesses, Pirthipal Singh, Musammât Gulaba and other persons surrounding the testator Musammât Bindra. In this estate of the arguments we think it advisable to deal with this matter in both aspects.

The law on the subject is perfectly clear. In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Motibai Hormusjee Kanga v. Jamsatjee Hormusjee Kanga (1) Mr. Ameer Ali made the following observations:—"In this connection it may be useful to refer to the observations of Lord Westbury in the case of Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopaulchunder Chuckerbutty (2) 'in matters of this description' (he was dealing with a charge of fraud in connection with a sale in execution of a decree) 'it is essential to take care that the decision of the Court rests not upon suspicion, but upon legal grounds, established by legal testimony.' It is quite clear that the onus of establishing capacity lay on the petitioner. It is also clear that if the caveator impugned the Will on the ground that it was obtained by the exercise of undue influence, excessive persuasion or moral coercion, it lay upon him to establish that ..... A man may act foolishly and even heartlessly; if he acts with full comprehension of what he is doing, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of his volition."

The Will in question was written by Ram Dayal. He has given evidence in the case and deposes to circumstances in which he came to write this particular Will. Ram Dayal was admittedly in the service of Pirthipal Singh since the year 1916. This Pirthipal Singh, as we have already said, is one of the sons-in-law of Musammât Gulaba. It seems to us to be perfectly natural and consistent with the probabilities of the case that Ram Dayal should be at the house of Musammât Bindra where Pirthipal Singh himself was staying at the time when the Will was executed. Ram Dayal's testimony is that he wrote out this Will at the desire of Musammât Bindra and that Musammât Bindra affixed her thumb mark on the Will. The next witness in support of the execution of the Will of the 25th of February 1917 is Thakur Madho Singh. He has attested the Will in question and his evidence is that he was sent for from his house by Musammât Bindra. Madho Singh is a gentleman of position and respectability. Ganga Bakhsh Singh was his maternal uncle. During his childhood he lived for the most part of the time at Ganga Bakhsh's house. He swears to his own signature as an attesting witness and also to the thumb mark made by the testator Musammât Bindra on the Will in question. The next witness is Thakur Sardar Singh. He is also a relation. He says that the daughter of the brother of the widow of Ganga Bakhsh was married to his brother D. S. Singh. He was sent for by the Thakurain, that is Musammât Bindra. He saw the execution of the Will and in token of it he attested it. He also swears to the thumb impression on the Will as that of Musammât Bindra. Then comes Thakur Ratan Singh. He also gives evidence in support of the Will. He is also an attesting witness to it, is a zemindar paying Rs. 600 revenue and is a relation of the family of Ganga Bakhsh Singh. Ganga Bakhsh Singh's grandfather was Mardan Singh and Mardan Singh's son was married to the grandfather of Ratan Singh, the witness. He was also sent for by Musammât Bindra and at her desire attested the Will and swears also to the thumb mark of Musammât Bindra. Finally we have the evidence of one Veshunu Dass Mahant of Husainpur who was acting as a pujari at the thakurdwara founded by Ganga Bakhsh Singh. He was also sent for by the lady, saw the execution of the Will and affixed his own signature to it as an attesting witness. He also saw the Thakurain making her thumb impression of this Will. These witnesses, one and all, fully, in our judgment, prove the execution of the Will propounded by the defendant by Musammât Gulaba. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the document before us is the Will which Musammât Bindra executed.

We fully realise the importance of the fact that Musammât Bindra was a parda-nashin lady. We also realise that she was a woman of advanced age. We think, therefore, in view of these circumstances, our duty is to see that the physical act of the execution of this Will by Musammât Bindra accompanied her mind and desire in the matter. The testimony of the witnesses to which we have referred in the preceding paragraph of this judgment is positive on the fact that the Thakurain was 'quite alright' when the Will was executed and she was in possession of her senses. Every one of these witnesses says that the desire to execute the Will in question arose with the Thakurain herself and she communicated her desire in the presence of the witnesses to Ram Dayal with a request that he might prepare a Will of the nature she wanted. Ram Dayal accordingly made a draft. This draft after having been prepared was read out to the lady and the witnesses unanimously emphasise the fact that it was also explained to her. The evidence does not stop here. A fair copy was then made and this copy, which is the original Ex. A-1 before us, was again read and explained to the lady and that in token of her consent she said it was 'quite alright'. To use the language of Mr. Ameer Ali in the case already referred to

"It is to be remarked that the Will itself is simple and short, and not requiring any great mental strain on the part of a sick man to grasp its meaning." We should not be understood to mean that Musammât Bindra was sick in any sense of the word at the time of the execution of this Will. To the question of her alleged illness we will address ourselves later. The Will before us recites the motive for the making of it and then gives all the property of the testator to the devisee Musammât Gulaba. There is no more in this Will. The words used are of the simplest nature. The idea is most rudimentary. Taking into consideration, therefore, the simple nature of the Will, the evidence as to the fact that the lady was in the possession of her mental faculties, that she was "quite alright," that the draft and the fair copy were both read and explained to the lady and that the Will before us expresses her testamentary intentions we have no hesitation in holding that the lady executed the document in question intelligently and with a complete comprehension of its contents and effects.

There is no evidence on the side of those who impeach this Will as to the exercise of any undue influence by anybody in the matter of the execution of this Will. In the course of the arguments reliance was placed on some of the circumstances to which we have made reference at the outset of this judgment in support of the case of undue influence. Now what are the facts? Musammât Gulaba is the widow of Thakur Sheo Singh. Thakur Sheo Singh was the younger brother of Thakur Ganga Bakhsh Singh. The testimony of the witnesses to which we have referred already is clear, reliable and unanimous on the point that Musammât Bindra and Musammât Gulaba lived all along jointly and were on good terms with each other. Musammât Gulaba was about 12 years younger than Musammât Bindra. The former served the latter in her widowhood gave her comfort and above all gave her the joy of companionship. Ganga Bakhsh Singh as we know had no child at all. Sheo Singh had four daughters. These daughters grew up in the house and must naturally have been the object of love and affection to the old lady Musammât Bindra. Indeed the motive impelling the execution of the Will in question is set forth in clear, simple and effective language in the Will itself and that is that the Will was being made in recognition of the long services which Musammât Gulabâ had rendered to the testator Musammât Bindra. The other side of the picture is, according to the same evidence, that Musammât Bindra was not on good terms with the collaterals of her husband. Indeed the evidence leaves no room for doubt on the question that there was never love lost between Musammât Bindra and the collaterals of her husband. There were occasions when points of actual quarrel were reached but apart from that the entire body of these collaterals, which were large in number, stood on the footing of absolute strangers to the lady. In this state of things it was but natural that Musammât Bindra should desire to leave her property to one who was nearest and dearest to her. The Will is, therefore, in our judgment wholly natural. The defendants' case that the idea of making the Will of the nature which the Thakurain eventually made originated with the Thakurain herself is supported by the defendants' witness Thakur Anrudh Singh, a man of a very respectable position. We desire to quote a portion of his evidence. "I went many times to the widow of Thakur Ganga Bakhsh Singh and the widow of Sheo Singh. They used to treat me with great consideration. The two women used to live in one house. They had their business and mess joint. They were on very cordial terms..... When I had advised her not to make the endowment and to let the property go to the reversioners she had told that she would not let them take the property but she would make the transfer to her deorani." By the expression deorani was admittedly meant the widow of Sheo Singh, that is, Musammât Gulabâ. This intention on the part of Musammât Bindra came into birth so long ago as 15 or 16 years preceding the date of the evidence of Thakur Anrudh Singh. A very commonly prevailing superstition intervened and the intention came to be embodied in the document before us long after.

The evidence as to the Thakurain's illness produced on the side of the propounders of the Will is, in our judgment, equally clear and reliable. Indeed it is supported in a measure by the evidence produced on the side of the appellants. Besides the evidence of the attesting witnesses and the scribe, Anant Ram states that he practised as a physician and that about six years ago he treated the Thakurain and Ganga Bakhsh Singh. She had fever for three days and then she was attacked by paralysis. She died four days after the attack. Before the attack of paralysis she was in her perfect senses. The attack of paralysis came on while she was in fever. The appellants' witness Badri admits in his cross-examination that Musammât Bindra was treated by Anant Ram amongst others. To the same effect is the evidence of the plaintiffs' witness Sardar Singh. He said in cross-examination that Anant Ram Vaidya had seen the lady twice when she was ill. It is quite clear, therefore, that the lady had an attack of paralysis only three or four days before her death. The Will as we have found was executed on the 25th of February 1917 and according to the evidence of defendants' witness Ram Dayal, Musammât Bindra lived for a month or one and a half month after the execution of the Will and she was in good health up till three or seven days before her death. A somewhat clear idea is obtained of the precise period of Musammât Bindra's death from the evidence of Sardar Singh, D. W. No. 5. He says that he saw Musammât Bindra on the day following the attack of paralysis and it was the sixth or seventh day of the latter part of the month of Chait. She died the third day of the attack of paralysis and on the morning following the last visit of the witness to her. According to this evidence Musammât Bindra died on or about the 30th of March 1917. The result is that in agreement with the findings of the Court below we hold that the Will of the 25th February 1917 was executed by Musammât Bindra intelligently and with a sound disposing mind.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Plaintiff sued for possession of a house by right of pre-emption on the ground that his house adjoined the house in suit and had a common entrance with it from the street. The vendee whose house was also contiguous to the house in suit, denied that the plaintiff had a superior right and pleaded that he had a right of way through the compound of the house in suit. It was found that the vendee was not a joint owner of the compound in which the plaintiff's house and the house in suit were situated, and that he had no right of way over the compound as his use of it had only been permissive. The lower Appellate Court, however, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the defendant's house as well as the plaintiff's had a common entrance with the house in suit from the street and that, therefore, they had equal rights of pre-emption.

Held, (1) that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on a ground which had not been raised by the defendant in his pleadings,

(2) that, in any case, on the findings it could not be said that the defendant's house had an entrance through the compound in which the plaintiff's house and the house in suit were situated;

(3) that, therefore, the plaintiff's suit must succeed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 26th January 1925, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 7th December 1924.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. A. Ghani, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a house by right of pre-emption on the ground that his house adjoined the house in suit and had a common entrance with it from the street. The contesting defendant, whose house was also contiguous to the house in suit, denied that the plaintiff had a superior right and pleaded that he had a right of way through the compound of the house in suit.

The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree, finding that his house and the house in suit had a common entrance from the street and that the plaintiff had, therefore, a superior claim under the 4th clause of s. 16 of the Pre-emption Act, but the District Judge has reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, finding that the defendant's house as well as the plaintiff's has a common entrance with the house in suit from the street, and that, therefore, the parties have equal rights. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal.

The defendant did not plead either in the Trial Court or in his grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court that his house and the house in suit had a common entrance, and the lower Appellate Court was wrong in deciding the case on a point which had not been raised. Moreover the defendant is not a joint owner of the compound in which the plaintiff's house and the house in suit are, and the District Judge has found as a fact, that he has no right of way over the compound as his use of it has been only permissive. There is, therefore, no entrance to the defendant's house through that compound.

It is contended for the defendant that the plaintiff's house and the house in suit have not got a common entrance, but the Trial Court's finding on the point was not contested in the lower Appellate Court.

I accept the appeal, reverse the lower Appellate Court's decree, and restore the decree of the Trial Court. The respondent Mahmud will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

The mere absence of a formal order of the appointment of a person as the guardian ad litem of a minor is no ground for holding that the minor was not represented at all in the suit. [p. 243, col. 1.]

The negligence of a guardian to support the case of a minor, the absence of anything to show that he was appointed, will not enable the minor to avoid the operation of the decree passed therein. [p. 244, col. 1.]

The mere omission of a guardian to appear in a suit or execution proceedings does not necessarily amount to gross negligence on the part of the guardian. [p. 244, col. 2.]

A suit by a person for a declaration that an order dismissing an application filed by his guardian to release his share of the property attached in execution as he was discharged by the decree is null and void, because his guardian was grossly negligent in protecting his interests in execution proceedings, is in reality a suit to set aside the auction-sale held subsequent to the dismissal of the application and is barred under s. 47 of the C. Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 23rd April 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 9 of 1924.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and M. D. Khandekar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Sadasheo brought the connected suit against the defendant-respondent Karim in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge No. 2, Nagpur, under the following circumstances. The defendant had sued the plaintiff and his brother Balaji in the Court of the Small Causes, Nagpur, and obtained a decree for Rs. 969-1-9. The claim against the plaintiff was dismissed on the ground that he was no party to the contract on which the suit was based. In execution of the decree Karim attached a house and a shop which were the joint property of Balaji and the plaintiff. At this time the plaintiff was a minor and some four applications on his behalf were presented by Balaji for release of the plaintiff's share in the properties attached. The first of these applications was dismissed in default on 29th September 1914: cf. Ex. P-4. The second such application was dismissed for want of prosecution, as the objector had failed to pay process-fees: cf. Ex. P-6, dated 4th December 1914. The third application was presented after the attached property had been sold and purchased by the defendant, and was dismissed as not lying on 26th February 1915: cf. Ex. P-9. The fourth application was similarly dismissed on 30th July 1915: cf. Exs. P-10 and P-12. In the case of the latter application a detailed order was passed, recounting the previous history of the plaintiff's attempt to upset the sale, and the merits of the case were considered to some extent. Still, a fifth application was made under O. XXI, r. 10, C. P. C., by the plaintiff's sister Musammatt Saraswati Bai on his behalf: cf. Ex. P-14, and it was dismissed on 27th August 1915 on the ground that Sadasheo could not come in as a stranger under the provision of law quoted. It is these orders which the present plaintiff is attempting to upset in the present case. In para. 12 of the plaint he asks that these orders should be set aside and that a declaratory decree should issue to the effect that they are null and void against him.

The plaintiff's next attempt to attack the sale was by means of a declaratory suit to the effect that he was the owner of the half share in the property sold. This suit failed both in the first Court and in the Court of the District Judge on appeal. On second appeal to this Court permission was given to him to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one. Prior, however, to the withdrawal, the plaintiff had once more filed an application in the Executing Court under s. 47, C. P. C., the basis therefor being that he had attained majority in 1917, that the applications presented on his behalf were dismissed in default or otherwise, and that the execution proceedings under s. 47, C. P. C., should be re-opened. This application also failed and the connected appeal was also dismissed.

The various pleas raised on behalf of the defendant are sufficiently clear from the judgments of the two lower Courts. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the suit should have been filed within one year from the date of his attaining majority on 28th September 1917, Art. 11 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act being considered to apply. The Subordinate Judge also held that on the merits in the execution proceedings the plaintiff would have had a good case and that the failure of the various applications was due to gross negligence on the part of his brother or sister who represented him.

The Additional District Judge dismissed the appeal mainly on the ground that limitation was governed not by Art. 11 but by Art. 12, First Schedule of the Limitation Act. The lower Appellate Court upheld the findings of the Subordinate Judge as to the property being ancestral and it also held that there had been gross negligence on the part of the plaintiff's guardian. The Additional District Judge further held that in any event the case was not one where in the exercise of his judicial discretion he should grant a declaratory decree. In his opinion the plaintiff could not recover possession from the execution purchase.

except by setting aside the sale within the period allowed by Art. 12 of the Limitation Act, for which suit ought to have been brought within a year from the date of the plaintiff attaining majority. From this point of view also the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief claimed and in this connection also he relied on the decision in Abdul Karim v. Islamunnissa Bibi (1). The plaintiff's appeal was accordingly dismissed and he has now come up to this Court on second appeal.

It has been strongly urged before me that the present suit is not one for setting aside the execution sale. Reference has been made to the futile attempt made by the plaintiff in 1920 to enable the proceedings under s. 47, C. P. C., being reopened afresh and it has been urged that the real object of this suit was to have set aside the five orders, already specified, which were then held to be standing against the plaintiff and to bar his right to any relief. As regards the application (Ex. P-14) it has been urged that Musammam Saraswati Bai was not the plaintiff's guardian ad litem: cf. Kisni v. Chulaji Teli (2) while as regards the previous four applications, in which the plaintiff was represented by his brother, it was urged that Balaji had never been appointed as guardian ad litem formally by the Court. Reliance has been placed in this connection on the decision in Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (3). The incidents of that case were, however, very different. Therein it was held (cf. page 140* thereof) that the uncle not only did not effectively defend the interests of the plaintiff, but had acted dishonestly and improperly in bringing in his nephew into a suit with which he had no concern whatever, and had entirely neglected his duty towards his nephew. The mere want of a formal order appointing Balaji as the plaintiff's guardian ad litem in the previous proceedings is no reason per se for holding that he was not represented at all: cf. Walian v. Bank Behari Pershad Singh (4).

It has been urged, however, that in any event the findings of both the lower Courts that there had been gross negligence on the part of the plaintiff's guardian Balaji, assuming him to be such, was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the plaintiff had not, as a matter of fact, been represented in the execution proceedings. The decision in Rashid un-Nissa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (5) is not peculiarly apposite in this connection. In that suit the minor had been represented by a married woman, her sister, who was not the natural and proper guardian. Here Balaji was the natural and proper guardian, whereas in the case quoted the person who acted as guardian was expressly disqualified under law from so acting. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Partab Singh v. Bhabuti Singh (6) is even more inapposite. There it was found that the so called guardian had been introduced in the suit expressly to further the interests of the respondent and very naturally, therefore, their Lordships were forced to the conclusion that there had been no proper representation of the appellants. The decision in Pasumarti Payidanna v. Ganti Lakshminarasamma (7) is also of no help whatever in the present case. In that suit the minor had been impleaded as a major and this fact was known at least to the two other defendants. It obviously followed, therefore, that the minor had to be held to have been wholly unrepresented in the suit in question. Even, therefore, assuming that there had been gross negligence on the part of Balaji in the representation of the minor, it seems to me utterly impossible to predicate that the plaintiff was not represented at all in the execution proceedings.

The various decisions quoted are really based on the fact that therein there was no representation of the minor. Here there was representation, although there the representation may have been faulty and indifferent. In Imam Din v. Puran Chand (8) Scott-Smith, J., held that where a decree has been made against a minor duly represented by his guardian and the minor attaining his majority seeks to set aside that decree by a separate suit, he can only succeed on proof of fraud or collusion on the part of his guardian. If the guardian merely neglected to support the case of the minor and there is nothing to show that he did so deliberately, that circumstance alone would not entitle the minor to avoid the operation of the decree. In the present case there is not the slightest reason for supposing that Balaji deliberately neglected the interests of the minor. There may have been negligence which entailed, for example, one application being dismissed in default and another being similarly dealt with because of the failure to pay Court-fees. Moreover, in the present case so far as the orders, dated 30th July 1915 and 27th August 1915, are concerned, it is extremely difficult to see how there can be any question of negligence. The connected applications were obviously fought out elaborately on either side, and in this connection it is regrettable that both the lower Courts have been extremely vague in their findings as to the negligence. There may have been negligence in respect of the applications dealt with in the orders, dated 29th September 1914 and 4th December 1914 (Exs. P-4 and P-6), but I utterly fail to see how there has been any negligence in respect of three later applications. Taking the applications as a whole it seems to me utterly impossible to come to the conclusion that the plaintiff-appellant was not represented in the proceedings in question. In my opinion, therefore, s. 47, C. P. C., clearly applies in the circumstances of the case, and the orders Exs. P-9, P-12 and P-14, dated 26th February 1915, 30th July 1915 and 27th August 1915, clearly bar and lock the door of the plaintiff's chance of success in the present suit. Indeed, from another point of view also the present suit was an utterly hopeless one.

It has been quite seriously suggested in the course of arguments on behalf of the appellants that the questions I am concerned with here do not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The decisions in Tallapragada Sundarappa v. Boorugapalli Sreeramulu (9) and Biharsingh v. Newalsingh (10) have been referred to in this connection. In the former case the questions raised in the later suit were held to be such as could not have been tried in execution, and the same was also true of the local case just quoted. The decisions already quoted in Imam, Din v. Puran Chand (8) and Rashid-un-Nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (5), can, of course, give the appellant no help in this connection in view of my finding that he cannot be described as having been unrepresented in the execution proceedings. The decision in Chunduru Ponniyya v. Rajam Viranna (11) relates to the question whether a person who has been impleaded as a minor defendant in a suit can institute a fresh suit to set aside the previous decree on the ground of gross negligence, apart from fraud or collusion. In this matter there is some diversity of opinion between several Indian High Courts, but as I have already shown, it is impossible to say in the present case, that there was gross negligence in respect of each of the five applications, which is the object of this suit to impeach. Moreover, even in this Madras case [Chunduru Ponniyya v. Rajam Viranna (11)] it was pointed out that mere omission of a guardian to appear at the trial does not necessarily amount to gross negligence. If this were true of a mere non-appearance in the suit, it would possibly be even more true of a mere omission to appear in execution proceedings. The decision in Sellappa Goundan v. Masa Naiken (12) is wholly inapposite, for therein the guardian of the minor was found to have had an interest adverse to him. It, therefore, seems to me to be clear that the present suit is barred by s. 47 of the C. P. C.

The question of limitation has been argued at some length before me. It has been urged that the lower Appellate Court was incorrect in applying Art. 12 thereto. It has been pointed out on behalf of the appellant that Art. 12 only applies if the sale is valid till it is set aside: cf. Khiairajmal v. Daim (13), and that it has no application to a case like the present where the appellant alleges that the execution proceedings were ultra vires and void: cf. Jwala Sahai v. Masiat Khan (14) and Nazar Ali v. Kedar Nath (15). For reasons already given, however, it is impossible for me to hold that the appellant was not at all represented in the previous execution proceedings. Therefore, no question of these proceedings being ab initio void arises. Even, therefore, had the decision as to whether the plaintiff's suit could succeed or not depended on the mere question of limitation, I should have seen no reason for differing from the finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on this point.

There is, however, a further ground on which the present suit must be pronounced an utterly hopeless one, which was inevitably bound to fail. Even if the plaintiff could have got over the bars, which have been found to exist against him, both under s. 47 of the C. P. C., and that of limitation, it would obviously have been improper for any Court to have exercised its discretion in the direction of giving him the declaratory decree which he seeks in the present case. It is impossible to take seriously the suggestion made on behalf of the appellant that the present suit is not one for setting aside a sale. If that is not the sole and primary object of the suit, then it is a meaningless one. The remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council at pages 351* and 352* of the decision in Malkarjun v. Narhari (16) are peculiarly pertinent in this connection and have full application in the present case. What we have to decide in this case is what is the real nature of the suit. Most obviously the reply is that the real object of the suit is to set aside the execution sale, although a faint attempt is made to obscure this fact by merely asking a relief that the five orders we are concerned with should merely be declared to be null and void against the plaintiff. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Sharoop Dass Mondal v. J. P. Roy Chowdhry (17) remarked as follows at page 567† thereof:—

"As a general principle, in construing this Act of the Legislature we ought not to regard a case as coming under Art. 120, unless clearly satisfied that it does not come under one of the many articles dealing with specific cases. Further, if there be two articles which may cover the case, the one, however, more general and the other more particular or specific, as a principle of construction the more particular and specific article ought to be regarded as the one governing the case."

I fully concur, therefore, with the findings of the Additional District Judge in paras 10 and 11 of his judgment.

From any and every point of view, therefore, the present suit was bound to fail. The appeal is accordingly dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondent's costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

Article 143 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act only applies to suits to enforce reliefs claimable by reason of forfeiture or of breach of condition under a contract and can only apply to suits brought against parties who have incurred that forfeiture or committed the breach. [p. 216, col. 1]

Where, however, a person holding under a lease containing conditions of forfeiture has assigned his right to another person, a suit by the lessor against the assignee for recovery of property by reason of forfeiture or breach of conditions in the lease is not governed by Art. 143. The proper Article applicable is 144 or 142, as the case may be. [ibid.]

Where an assignee from a lessee sues the lessor for renewal of the lease and fails, it is not open to him in a subsequent suit by the lessor to plead title by adverse possession. Such a plea ought to have been set up in the prior suit. [p. 216, col. 2, p. 217, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, in A. S. No. 9 of 1920 (A. S. No. 1008 of 1920 on the file of the District Court of South Malabar) preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, in O. S. No. 26 of 1918.

Mr. K. Kutti Krishna Menon, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Sivarama Menon and P. S. Narayanasami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant-plaintiff demised the suit property to Krishnan Nayar and Kunju Nayar on Adimayavana right on 7th April 1908. In 1900, the lessees assigned their right to the first defendant and the father of the second defendant. The lease contains a provision that on the expiry of every 12 years a renewal fee of Rs. 125 shall be paid by the lessee and further documents exchanged between the parties. Accordingly the assignees brought a suit in 1913 for renewal of the Adimayavana lease and for the acceptance of the renewal fee. It was then held that the Adimayavana lease being inalienable, the plaintiffs in that suit could not obtain a valid assignment and, therefore, their suit was dismissed. The plaintiff now brings the present suit in 1918 to recover possession of the suit properties from the assignees and their representatives. The facts are all recited in the plaint and the first prayer in the plaint is "that a decree may be passed directing the defendants to surrender the schedule items to the plaintiff by virtue of the Kaichit of 1073 described in para. 2 and on the strength of title, as the Adimayavana right has ceased." Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation, because Art. 143 is applicable. That Article provides for a suit in which the plaintiff has become entitled to possession of immoveable property by reason of forfeiture or breach of condition. Had this suit been brought by the plaintiff against the lessees, Krishna Nayar and Kunju Nayar, the suit would undoubtedly have come under Art. 143, but as I understand that Article, it only applies to suits to enforce relief claimable by reason of forfeiture or of breach of condition under a contract and can only apply to suits brought against parties who have incurred that forfeiture or committed the breach. In the present case the defendants are not parties to the lease-deed and have not themselves incurred any forfeiture, or broken any condition in a contract between them and the plaintiff. It seems to me, therefore, that Art. 143 is clearly inapplicable. In fact when the plea of limitation was first raised in the defendants' written statement, Art. 144 was relied on and that or Art. 142 is the Article which is applicable.

The contention is raised for the respondents that they are taken by surprise by this plea that Art. 143 is not applicable, but inasmuch as the defendants did not plead this Article in bar in the first Court and both in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court and in the grounds of appeal to this Court, the point has been taken that Art. 143 is not applicable; and inasmuch as it was not in the first place the contention of the defendants that Art. 142 is applicable, this plea of being taken by surprise cannot be upheld.

The question then remains whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by Art. 144, in which case the period of 12 years begins when the possession of the defendants becomes adverse to the plaintiff. The defendants got into possession by virtue of their assignment from the original lessees, and the lessees were entitled to let anybody into possession during the terms of their tenancy which enured for at least 12 years. During that period of 12 years from 1898, the possession of the defendants under the lessees was under the lessees who held under the plaintiff. There can, therefore, be no question of the possession of the defendants being adverse to the plaintiff from the date of their assignment. It could only become adverse after the 12 years' lease had expired and the legal origin of their possession had changed. In that view this suit is within time.

It is then contended that Art. 142 will apply and the plaintiff must prove that he has been dispossessed of the property within 12 years of the suit. During the 12 years subsequent to 1898 the property was in the possession of the defendants with the permission of the plaintiff's tenants and, therefore, it cannot be said that the plaintiff was dispossessed, for his tenants were entitled to possession and could allow defendants to enter into possession. It is suggested that the defendants by reason of the assignment in 1900 prescribed for an Adimayavana tenure as against the original lessees and also plaintiff. If that were so, their title had become complete before the suit of 1913 was filed. Inasmuch as that suit was based on the allegation that the defendants were the Adimayavana tenants of the plaintiff, the plea that they had obtained such a right by adverse possession should have been pleaded. Not having taken such a plea in that suit, the defendants are precluded under Expt. IV to s. 11, C. P. C. from raising it now.

The plaintiff's suit seems to have been very inefficiently conducted in the lower Courts and a large number of issues have been framed which seem to be quite irrelevant, in view of the fact that the plaintiff does not claim by reason of any forfeiture incurred by the defendants. It is, however, argued that there are other points in the case which should be determined and, therefore, I think it is advisable to refer the appeal back to the lower Appellate Court for decision on the other point which it considered unnecessary to decide and any other points that legally arise. The view of the case set out here does not seem to have been pleaded definitely in the lower Courts and, therefore, I think that the respondents are entitled to a further hearing.

I may also add that the plaintiff relies on the breach of another condition in the Adimayavana lease, namely, that no renewal fee was paid on the expiry of the 12 years' time and consequently he is entitled to recover possession of the property on that ground.

I, therefore, set aside the decree and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for further hearing and for decision in the light of the above remarks on the other point or points which were not determined before. It is suggested for the respondents that additional evidence should be taken, but the respondents' Vakil has been unable to point out in what respect evidence can now be admitted which should not have been adduced in the Trial Court as the case was understood there. I leave it to the discretion of the lower Appellate Court to decide whether any additional evidence is necessary. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded to the appellant.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 10th May 1924, confirming that of the Munsif, Haveli, Lucknow, dated the 31st May 1923.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Daya Kishan Seth, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants against the defendants-respondents for possession of two plots of land No. 400, measuring 8 biswas and No. 444 measuring 16 biswas 15 biswas situate in village Sarawan Farindpur, District Lucknow.

The facts of the case are that one Baryar, the grandfather of the plaintiffs-appellants got a decree for 'kabzadari' rights in respect of these plots from the Settlement Court on the 29th of May, 1889 that the plaintiffs claiming to be the heirs of the said Baryar, alleged that they are entitled to those plots, that the defendant has been in wrongful possession over them for a long time and that when they asked him to deliver possession to them he refused to do so on the ground that he was a mortgagee of the land. The plaintiffs further claimed that they should be allowed to redeem in case the mortgage was established. The defendant denied the plaintiffs' title and contended that he had purchased the plots at a Court-sale and had become owner of 'kabzadari' rights by adverse possession. He also denied the mortgage set up by the plaintiffs.

The Trial Court, the Munsif of Haveli, Lucknow, in having arrived at the findings that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the mortgage set up by them and that the defendant had established his adverse possession, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

On appeal the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, has confirmed those findings and dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal.

The plaintiffs have now come to this Court in second appeal and the contention raised by the learned Pleader on their behalf is two-fold. Firstly, that Baryar, the grandfather of the plaintiffs, had acquired occupancy rights through the Settlement Court and that the plaintiffs, as his grandsons, are now entitled to those rights. Secondly, that the defendant being in possession as mortgagee cannot plead adverse possession in his favour in regard to occupancy rights and that, therefore, the plaintiffs be decreed possession of the land on condition of their paying to the defendant, the mortgage money. The case originally came before one of us sitting singly and it has now been put up before us on a reference by him to a Bench.

As to the first point it appears to us to be clear that the rights conferred by the Settlement decree, dated the 29th May 1869, a copy of which is on the record and is marked Ex. 1 are the occupancy rights as contemplated by s. 5 of the Oudh Rent Act (Act XIX of 1868), which was the Act then in force. The Settlement Officer has clearly stated in his judgment that the ancestors of Baryar were owners of the village within the period provided in the said section, and that they lost the village owing to the taluqdar having forcibly made it a part of his estate. The said officer also allowed Baryar a deduction of 12 per cent. from his rental. There can under the circumstances be no room for doubt that the intention of the Settlement Officer was to confer on the ancestor of the appellants, occupancy rights as stated in s. 5 of the said Act. The said rights being heritable the appellants would be entitled to them.

As to the second point, we might state that the mortgage set up by the appellants has not been proved. This being a finding of fact we cannot interfere with it in second appeal.

It, therefore, remains a matter hidden in obscurity as to how the defendant came in possession of the land in dispute. It may have been that Baryar was ejected from his holding and the taluqdar recognized the respondent as the occupancy tenant of the land. In the khazra of the last settlement of the District prepared in 1304 Fasli the defendant is shown as the 'kabzadar' of one plot and as the purchaser of the other, and this record has been continuously kept up since then. We have been informed during the course of arguments that no sale-deed had been executed by Baryar in favour of the defendant, but that he purchased those rights at an auction sale. It is, therefore, clear that the defendant does not hold the land under Baryar or the plaintiffs. If the alleged mortgage in favour of the defendant had been established, it appears to us, in that case it should not have been possible for the defendant to have successfully set up an adverse title to himself, but the finding of the Courts below on this point is against the appellants. If Baryar, the ancestor of the plaintiffs, lost possession long ago and they have not been in possession at any time during the course of 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, they, in our opinion, cannot be allowed to recover the land in dispute from the defendant on the mere allegation that at one time it was the property of their grandfather.

An argument is put forward before us to the effect that the occupancy rights cannot be lost by adverse possession for more than 12 years and in support of it reliance is placed on a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Madhav-rao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (1), which relates to 'watan' lands usually found in the Bombay Presidency. Their Lordships observed in that judgment that it was somewhat difficult to see how a title with regard to 'watan' land could be created by adverse possession for more than 12 years when the alienation of such land was prohibited in the interest of the State. We have given our best consideration to this point and it appears to us that the tenure of the 'watan' lands is quite different from the tenure of the occupancy lands. Under the Bombay Act (Act III of 1874) 'watan' lands are lands held or assigned for the purpose of providing remuneration for the performance of the duties appertaining to a hereditary office, such office meaning an office held hereditarily for the performance of duties connected with the administration or collection of the public revenue or with the village Police, or with other similar matters. Under these circumstances it would be impossible to allow rights in 'watan lands' to be capable of being acquired by adverse possession; to do so would mean conferring a hereditary office, rights and the privileges attached to it by means of adverse possession. We, therefore, are of opinion that the principle enunciated in the said ruling is inapplicable to the facts of the present case.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed by the Courts below, and we hereby dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where a Hindu father is adjudicated an insolvent and the sons apply to the Court objecting to the sale of the immovable properties advertised by the Receiver on the ground that they were divided and that their share ought not to be sold, the Court ought not to allow the insolvent's interest in the property to be sold leaving it to future litigation to determine the rights of parties.

The Official Receiver has the power under the Provincial Insolvency Act to sell the shares of the sons to a Hindu insolvent unless the sons make out that their shares are not bound to liquidate the debt contracted by their father. The Court, therefore, ought to inquire and decide on the rights of parties.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Godavari at Rajahmundry, dated the 28th October 1924 and made in I. A. No. 524 of 1924 in I. P. No. 30 of 1923.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. Appa Row, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants are the sons of the insolvent. They applied to the lower Court for stay of sale advertised to be held on 29th August 1924 by the Official Receiver of Godavari on the ground that they were divided from the insolvent and that their shares should not be sold. The learned Judge has not considered the question whether the shares of the appellants are liable to satisfy the debts of the insolvent. He has allowed the Official Receiver to sell the insolvent's interest in the property leaving it to future litigation to determine the rights of the parties. We consider in a case like this it is not proper that the insolvent's property should be sold when there is a cloud on the title which could be removed by a proper proceeding under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. We, therefore, set aside the order and direct the District Judge to restore the application to file and treat it as an application under s. 4 of the Act and dispose of it according to law. The Official Receiver has the power under the Act to sell the shares of the sons of the insolvent and it would be for the sons to make out that their shares are not bound to liquidate the debt contracted by their father.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

Broadway, J.—A joint Hindu family carrying on business under the style of Ishar Das-Dharam Chand in Amritsar and elsewhere, was assessed to income-tax by the Income Tax Officer on the 25th of March 1923. It was found, after what appears to have been a very full enquiry, that the income of this business, liable to taxation amounted to over a lac. The assessee then undertook to pay tax on a round sum of one lac. This offer was accepted by the Income Tax Officer and the assessment was made accordingly. The firm then petitioned the Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax. The Assistant Commissioner, after going thoroughly into the points raised, upheld the assessment of the Income Tax Officer. Thereupon Messrs. Ishar Das-Dharam Chand moved the Income Tax Commissioner under s. 66 (2) of the Income Tax Act and raised the following points:—

(1) That the rejection of the statement of accounts submitted by the petitioner is opposed to law.

(2) That the assessing authorities were not justified in applying a flat rate of 5 per cent. to determine the assessable income.

(3) That the refusal to allow a loss of Rs. 25,000 incurred in Bombay as a business deduction was illegal.

(4) That the petitioners being members of an undivided family were entitled to a reduction of Rs. 75,000 for purposes of super-tax. It was asked that these questions of law be referred to the High Court. The Income Tax Commissioner allowed the prayer as to the reduction of Rs. 74,000, for purposes of super-tax, but declined to refer the case to this Court on the ground that no questions of law were involved.

The petitioners then came up to this Court under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act and asked this Court to take the action provided for by that sub-section in connection with the deduction of Rs. 25,000 referred to in the third ground mentioned above. This Court not being satisfied with the correctness of the Commissioner's decision required him to state the case and to refer it. The Income Tax Commissioner thereupon stated the case. He pointed out that the direction of this Court did not confine the statement of the case to the only point raised before the Court and, therefore, he stated the case relating to the three points, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, raised before him. Before us the case has been argued on behalf of the petitioners by Mr. Badri Das, while the learned Government Advocate has addressed us on behalf of the Commissioner.

Mr. Badri Das has addressed us on two points only. He has urged (1) that the application of a flat rate was without any material on the record and was, therefore, erroneous and illegal, and (2) that a sum of Rs. 25,000 should have been deducted from the total income and treated as a loss. The second point is the point which was taken in the petition to this Court.

It appears that the petitioners have got a branch of their business at Bombay. There they stood surety for another firm. That firm became insolvent with the result that the petitioners had to pay the sum of Rs. 2,500. It has been held by the Income Tax Officer that the loan for which the petitioners stood surety had nothing whatever to do with the petitioners' business. The petitioners stood surety in order to do friends of theirs a kindness. It is unfortunate that they have been called upon to pay up for their friends, but inasmuch as this standing of surety was not in the course of the petitioners' business, it cannot be said that the loss was incurred in connection with the petitioners' business. The refusal to allow this amount to be deducted from the total assessable income was, therefore, perfectly correct.

As to the first point the learned Government Advocate urged, firstly, that inasmuch as the only point raised before this Court by the petitioners was that relating to the deduction of Rs. 25,000 the statement of the case in so far as it related to any other points was unnecessary. In the alternative he contended that the decision on that point was one of fact and that the application of a flat rate was justified. The language of s. 66 (3) is wide and it is not easy to say whether it was the intention of the Legislature that this Court should confine itself to the points raised before it, or whether the raising of one point in the application to the Court would necessitate the statement of all the points raised before the Commissioner although not pressed in the application to this Court. Under s. 66 (3) an assessee may apply to the Commissioner "requiring him to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of such order, and the Commissioner shall, within one month of the receipt of such application, draw up a statement of the case and refer it with his own opinion thereon to the High Court." If the Commissioner refuses to do this on the ground that no question of law arises the assessee may under s. 66 (3) apply to the High Court and the High Court, if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the Commissioner's decision, may require the Commissioner to state the case and to refer it, and, on receipt of any such requisition, the Commissioner shall state and refer the case accordingly.

It seems to me that the application under s. 66 (2) to the Commissioner should state the questions of law which the petitioner desires to be referred to the High Court and I am also inclined to the view that the application under s. 66 (3) should also specify the question or questions of law which the applicant considers ought to have been referred to the High Court by the Commissioner. In the present case three points were taken before the Commissioner in the application under s. 66 (2). One question alone was raised in the application to this Court under s. 66 (3), and it seems to me that had the Commissioner confined his reference to the point raised before this Court objection could not have been taken to his action. As he has, however, stated the case on the other question I think it necessary to dispose of it.

In this connection an examination of the proceedings shows that the enquiry was not a cursory or a summary one. The Income Tax Officer called for the accounts and after an examination of them, as well as of an auditor's report based on them came to the conclusion that they were not reliable. This undoubtedly is pure question of fact. The Income Tax Officer then after a consideration of the dealings accepted the turnover as shown by the petitioners and came to the conclusion that a flat rate of 5 per cent. was a reasonable amount to fix. His finding that a profit had been made is also a question of fact and the assessment based on a 5 per cent. flat rate cannot be regarded as unreasonable. Further, in the present case it will be seen that the petitioners themselves offered to pay on one lac, and I would, therefore, hold that the conclusions arrived at by the Income Tax Officer are correct and would dismiss this application with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner stood surety in a sum of Rs. 4,000 for the respondent who undertook to re-pay to a minor his share of an estate in case the Court declared that the minor had been validly adopted. The petitioner subsequently applied to be released from his obligation under the bonds and that the bonds should be cancelled. The District Judge has held that he cannot be released from his obligations unless and until he finds some one else willing to offer security.

It is now contended that it is not the petitioner's duty to find another security but it is the respondent's duty either to pay up the whole amount for which the security is given or to produce some other security. This ignores the contract entered into by the petitioner that he would be responsible until a certain specified time for any loss that might be incurred by the minor during that period and that contract cannot be set aside at the mere wish of the petitioner. It is possible that he may have some remedy against the respondent if he can prove the misconduct alleged, but he has contracted both with the respondent, and with the Court that he will carry out a certain promise, namely, to pay Rs. 4,000 if default is committed by the respondent. It is not for him to say that he will or will not discharge this obligation and, therefore, I think that the District Judge was right in dismissing his application. I may refer in this connection to a case reported in Bai Somi v. Chokshi Ishvardas Mangaldas (1) which supports my view.

Lala Shaukat Rai, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Niaz Ali, for Mr. M. Obedullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table explains the relationship of the various persons concerned in this case:—

It is common ground that the land which is the subject-matter of controversy in this suit, was the ancestral property of Chiragh, an Arain of the village of Nattar in the Lahore District and that on his death his daughter Musammat Talia Bibi succeeded to the estate in preference to his brother Amir. On Musammat Talia Bibi's death the property was inherited by her son Muhammad Din. Muhammad Din has died, and the question for determination is whether his half sister Musammat Mehtab Bibi is entitled to succeed to the property as against Amir, the brother of Chiragh who was the original owner thereof.

It will be observed that neither of the parents of Musammat Mehtab Bibi had any connection with the land. The question is not whether among the Arain there is a custom allowing a half sister to succeed to the estate of her half brother, but whether the property, which has been allowed to pass out of the possession of the male heirs of the original proprietor into the possession of a daughter's son, should not revert to the heirs of the last owner before the diversion. The rule enunciated by the Full Bench in Sita Ram v. Raja Ram (1) is to the effect that on the lineal descendants of the person in whose favour a diversion had been made dying out the land reverts to the male heirs of the last owner before the diversion and not to those of the person who received the land from him. In view of this ruling, which has been repeatedly affirmed in subsequent judgments, we have no hesitation in holding that Musammat Mehtab Bibi has absolutely no title to the property.

We accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the judgment of the Single Bench, dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—Causes of action, different—Buddhist Law, Burmese—Adoption—Kittima and Appathitta forms—Claim based on kittima adoption, failure of—Appathitta adoption, whether can be allowed to be set up.

A plaintiff must be confined to the case that he sets up in his pleadings, or to a case which is consistent with those pleadings. [p. 254, col 1]

Amendment of pleadings is a matter for the discretion of the Court and that discretion must be exercised with regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case [ibid.]

The causes of action on which a person can claim to be a kittima or an appathitta son are widely different, and different considerations govern the question of these two distinct forms of adoption [p. 254, col 2]

Where a plaintiff comes into a Court on the basis of a kittima adoption and fails to prove the case set up by him, he cannot be allowed to amend his plaint so as to base his claim on an appathitta adoption. [ibid.]

First appeal against a decree of the Original Side of this Court, in Civil Regular No. 423 of 1923.

Mr. Kyaw Din, for the Appellant.

Mr. Higinbotham, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued claiming to be the kittima adopted son of U Myat San and Daw Lay. He prayed that the estate be administered under the orders of the Court. On three occasions in the plaint, he set out the fact of a kittima adoption. There was no alternative prayer made as an appathitta son. The defendants also relied on a kittima adoption.

Two issues were drawn, namely:—

(i) Was the plaintiff the kittima son of U Myat San and Daw Lay, or Daw Lay alone?

and,

(ii) If the first issue is decided in the affirmative, was the first defendant the kittima daughter of U Myat San and Daw Lay, and were the second and third defendants kittima son and daughter respectively of Daw Lay?

The learned Judge in the Court below held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the kittima adoption and, therefore, did not consider it necessary to decide the second issue.

In this appeal, it is admitted that it is impossible to contest the finding of the Court below that the plaintiff was not the kittima son he claimed to be; but it is sought to obtain leave to amend the plaint by inserting an alternative claim as an appathitta son, and we have heard Counsel, in the first instance, on the question whether such an amendment can be allowed at this stage.

We have been referred to a number of authorities on the matter.

In the case of Maung Aing v. Ma Kin (1), the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma expressed an opinion that such a procedure was questionable. It was not, however, necessary in that case to decide the point.

In Ma Sa Yi v. Ma Me Gale (2) Mr. Justice Birks did not decide the point, because, even if the plaintiff established her position as an appathitta daughter, she was not entitled to any share. Mr. Justice Fox laid down in that case that the plaintiff made no alternative claim upon the basis of her being an appathitta daughter, and that, consequently, he did not think it necessary to consider what her rights to share in the inheritance possibly might be, if she had made such a claim. The Court was clearly opposed to allowing any amendment.

In the case of Maung Tha So v. Maung Lu Pe (3), the late Sir Maung Kin definitely held that a plaintiff who sued as a kittima son, but made no alternative claim as an appathitta, cannot be allowed to make the alternative claim for a first time in appeal.

That decision was followed by a Bench of the late Chief Court in the case of Shwe Kin v. Maung Sin (4). In that case the appellant's Counsel, who appeared at the hearing of the appeal, asked to be allowed to make a claim as the children of an appathitta daughter; and the learned Judge, after referring to the case last cited, said that he had no reason to change his views on that point. Mr. Justice Rigg must be presumed to have concurred in this view.

We were next referred to a Single Judge judgment by Lenthaigne, J., in Maung Gye v. Maung Aung Pya (5), in which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to the estate as a cousin and the nearest surviving relation of one Ma Pu. The defendant, who was a more distant relation, contended that he was the kittima adopted son of Ma Pu. The learned Judge said:

(3) 41 Ind. Cas. 749; 11 Bur. L. T. 246.

"The learned District Judge, has, however, overlooked the fact that Maung Gyi is a defendant, and that in that case it is not a question of altering the cause of action in the suit. The cause of action of the plaintiff-respondent remains the same whether the defence is based on a claim to a kittima adoption or to an appathitta adoption and the question which the Court has to decide is whether the plaintiff is entitled to relief against the defendant. Even on the admissions of the plaintiff in his evidence in this case, it is apparent that the plaintiff had in effect recognized Maung Gyi as an heir of Ma Pu after her death and had consented to Maung Gyi incurring all the funeral expenses and mortgaging the house if necessary for that purpose. It is clear, therefore, that it would be most inequitable to allow the plaintiff to take the whole estate and to deprive the defendant of his right as heir which is shown to have been recognized even on the admissions of the plaintiff in addition to depriving the defendant of all rights to re-imbursement of the funeral expenses, etc."

He draws a distinction between the case of a plaintiff being allowed, at the last moment, to amend his plaint, and a defendant being allowed to amend his written statement. He also found that there were special circumstances in that case, which made it equitable to allow the amendment prayed for. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present one.

It has been often laid down that the plaintiff must be confined to the case that he sets up in his pleadings, or to a case which is consistent with those pleadings. While the right of amendment has been largely increased in the new Code—and amendment is now much more freely granted—it remains a matter for discretion, and that discretion must be exercised with regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case.

In this case, the plaintiff deliberately chose to take his stand on the allegation that he was the kittima adopted son. He made no effort to set up any other claim, and he claimed to be entitled to the whole of the estate. Having gone to trial on that issue, and there being no question raised of an appathitta adoption, the cross-examination of the witnesses for the plaintiff and examination of the witnesses for the defendants were confined to that claim.

Moreover, it is established—and admitted—that there were no special circumstances in that case whatsoever; and, if we were to allow an amendment, and remand the case to the Court of first instance, we should practically be ordering a new suit to be commenced afresh and tried from the beginning.

There is ample authority for holding that the causes of action, on which the claims to be a kittima or an appathitta son are based, are widely different. Different considerations govern the question of these two distinct forms of adoption. We should not only be allowing the plaintiff, who has deliberately chosen his line of attack to alter his claim to one of a different character, but we should be allowing him to do so as a last hope, when he has entirely failed to establish the case with which he came to Court.

In our opinion, therefore, we should not permit the plaintiff to amend his pleadings now.

This appeal, therefore, fails; the decree of the Court below will be confirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 4, 5—Composite decree for sale of mortgaged property and realisation of decree from person and property of judgment-debtor—Absolute decree, whether necessary—Execution—Objection not taken, effect of—Application for sale, effect of.

A preliminary decree under r. 4 of O. XXXIV of the C. P. C. for the sale of mortgaged property cannot be executed unless made absolute under r. 5 of the Order. Rule 5, however, does not apply to a decree which does not conform to the provisions of r. 4 of O. XXXIV. [p. 255, col. 2.]

A decree directing that if the decretal amount is not paid within a certain period, the decree shall be realised by the sale of the hypothecated property and.

in case that is not sufficient, from the person and property of the debtor, is not a preliminary decree for sale under r. 4 of O. XXXIV, C. P. C., and is capable of execution. [p. 255, col. 2.]

Even though a relief may not have been granted by the decree, yet if in execution proceedings a Court holds that a party is entitled to such relief under the decree, it is not open to the parties afterwards to contend that no such relief has been awarded and the matter is res judicata [p. 256, cols. 1 & 2.]

After a preliminary decree for sale has been passed, an application by the decree-holder for sale of the property may be taken to be an application for an order absolute for sale. [p. 256, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 31st March 1921, reversing that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala, dated the 15th June 1920.

Mr. Shamair Chand and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lalas Jagan Nath and Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this second appeal from an order in appeal of the learned District Judge, Ambala, relating to an objection to the execution of a decree, the questions that arise for determination are :—

(1) Was the decree in question a simple money-decree or a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, C. P. C., for sale of the property mortgaged?

(2) If it was a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, and was as such incapable of execution unless made absolute under O. XXXIV, r. 5, was the judgment-debtor precluded from taking the objection that it could not be executed because he had not taken that objection on the previous applications for execution?

(3) As the judgment-debtor took no objection to the application of the decree-holder for sale of the property mortgaged, and as sale thereof was ordered, was the application thus granted tantamount to an application for an order absolute for sale?

As regards (1) there can be no manner of doubt that neither did the plaintiffs ask for a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, nor did the Trial Court (Sub-Judge, Ambala) pass a preliminary decree in terms of O. XXXIV, r. 4, C. P. C. As pointed out by the learned District Judge the plaintiffs' prayer in the plaint was for a decree for the money claimed with a lien on the property hypothecated (ba kafalatti-jaedad-i-marhuma) and against the other property and person of the defendant. There was no prayer in the plaint for sale of the land mortgaged. The defendant did not deny the claim, but wanted to pay the debt by instalments. The Sub-Judge did not allow instalments and ordered as below :—

"I allow the defendant six months in which to pay the decree; failing which the decree shall be realised in the first instance by the sale of hypothecated property. If that is not found sufficient, the decree shall be realised from the person and the property of the debtor."

The decree that was drawn up was in the terms of the above order on a form prescribed for simple money-decrees. Evidently this decree was not merely a preliminary decree for sale of mortgaged property, but it was what is called a composite decree, i. e., a decree for sale of the property mortgaged as well as against the person and other property of the mortgagor. The question is what rules of procedure apply to the execution of a decree of this description. It has been repeatedly held that s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, for which O. XXXIV, r. 5, has been substituted does not apply to a consent-decree in a suit for sale of the property mortgaged because such decree could not be drawn up in accordance with s. 88 of that Act or O. XXXIV, r. 5, C. P. C. The same principle applies by analogy to a composite decree of the kind passed in the present case, and it may safely be affirmed that O. XXXIV, r. 5, cannot apply to it as it does not conform to O. XXXIV, r. 4.

It may be remarked here in passing that the Madras High Court held in Kommachi Kather v. Pakker (1) and again in Abdulla Sahib v. Oosman Sahib (2) that decree of the kind in question is a simple money-decree, but that the Calcutta High Court took a contrary view in Kartick Nath Pandey v. Jugger Nath Ram Marwari (3). The proposition that a preliminary decree for sale of property mortgaged under O. XXXIV, r. 4, C. P. C., cannot be executed unless made absolute under O. XXXIV, r. 5 is unassailable, and, therefore, the authorities cited in support of it need not be referred to. But the decree in the present case was beyond the scope of O. XXXIV, r. 4, because it was not only a decree for sale of the property hypothecated but also a decree against the person as well as other property of the judgment-debtor.

(1) 20 M. 107; 7 M. L. J. 66; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 75.

(2) 28 M. 224.

(3) 27 C. 285; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 188.

But the appeal must fail on another ground also granting for the sake of argument that the decree in question is covered by O. XXXIV, r. 4. The judgment-debtor is precluded from now taking the objection that it is incapable of execution because he did not take that objection on the previous applications for execution thereof. The decree was passed on the 19th May 1916 and execution proceedings went on from 1917 to 1920 with objections and offers to pay and applications for time on the part of the judgment-debtor. The present objection was taken for the first time on the 16th February 1920. The question is: Was the judgment-debtor competent to raise this objection at that stage? Precisely this very question arose before a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the case reported as Epoor Ramasamy Reddy v. Kandadai Rungamanner Iyengar (4) and was answered in the negative in the following way:—"The next question is whether the respondent is entitled to execute the decree at all. It is contended that it is only a preliminary decree and that according to the decision of the Privy Council [Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (5)] which has been followed by Miller and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., in Yemani Chinna Seshaya v. Varanasi Pepaya (6), Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., in Raja Kumara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur v. Audikesvalu Reddi (7) a preliminary decree is not capable of execution and it is only the decree absolute under r. 5, O. XXXIV, that can be executed. In this case it is clear that no decree absolute under r. 5 has been passed, but we think it is necessary to decide this question, because this contention is not available to the appellants. On the decree-holder's application for the execution of the decree, notice was issued to the judgment-debtors (appellants) and an order was passed directing the sale of the property; no objection was taken to the sale on this ground. It has been repeatedly held that even though a relief may not have been granted by the decree, yet if in execution proceedings a Court holds that a party is entitled to such relief under the decree, it is not open to the parties afterwards to contend that no such relief has been awarded and the matter is res judicata. We are, therefore, of opinion that in this case it is not open to the appellants to plead that there is no decree under which the properties could be sold. We must, therefore, disallow this contention and we dismiss the appeal with costs."

The learned Counsel for the appellant made an attempt to distinguish the above ruling on the ground that a notice was issued to the judgment-debtor in that case to show cause why the mortgaged property should not be sold, while in the present case no such notice was issued; but he admitted that the judgment-debtor was aware of the execution proceedings and took part therein all along. Therefore he had full notice of the order made for sale of the property, and as he did not object to it at the proper time he could not be allowed to do so later on. The excuse that he did not do so because he was under the impression that the decree was a simple money decree can be of no avail.

Further, the Madras High Court has held that under the circumstances stated in (3) above the application for sale should be taken to be an application for an order absolute for sale—See Appa Rao v. Krishna Ayyangar (8), which was followed in Veera Reddi v. Ramalinga Mudaley (9). This is another way of looking at the effect of the judgment-debtor's omission to object in time to the decree-holder's application for sale and indicates the judicial policy that the decree-holder should not be left in the lurch when in consequence of the judgment-debtor's own conduct he has allowed to pass the period prescribed by the Statute of Limitation for making an application for an order absolute for sale.

In all the reasons given above the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 100.

Appeal dismissed.

The Government Advocate, for the Commissioner of Income Tax.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava for the firm Messrs. Ramchand Gopaldas and others.

ORDER.

Hasan, J.—This is a reference under s. 66, sub-s. (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act, of 1922, by the Income Tax Commissioner of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. The question of law which the Commissioner has referred to this Court for decision is stated in the reference as follows:—Was the Ice Association described in para. 3 above a firm within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Income Tax Act, whose income, profits and gains are liable to assessment to tax under the said Act.

The Commissioner has answered this question in the affirmative, and I am of the opinion that his answer is right.

It appears that on the 15th day of March 1923, an agreement was made and entered into between two proprietors of two ice factories, and three managers of three ice factories all situate in the City of Lucknow. In the preamble of this agreement the object of Association formed thereby was stated to be the promotion and protection of the trade of ice business and of facilities to the public, and also the economising of the working of such manufacture and business.

The Association formed under this agreement was to work in accordance with the terms contained therein for a period of two years from 1st April 1923 to 31st March 1925. The Association thus formed was to have the entire control over the management of sales and distribution of the profits to the constituent factories, and the proprietors and managers of these factories were bound to assist the Association "in making the work easy and more successful." The parties to the agreement were to manage the affairs of the Association, to fix rates, and prices and adjust accounts and determine other matters arising out of the said agreement. On behalf of the Association and under para. 8 of the agreement, M. Amir Hasan proprietor of one of the constituent ice factories, was to work as an Honorary Sale Commissioner. Rates for the sale and disposal of ice were to be fixed from time to time by the Association and the Sale Commissioner was to keep the accounts, and was provided with a staff to be paid by the Association. Paragraph 19 of the agreement provides for the distribution of the sale-proceeds of the ice amongst the constituent factories in certain proportions. On an interpretation of these terms of agreement, I am clearly of opinion that the Association formed under this agreement, is a firm within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1922, and as such, is liable to assessment under the same Act.

The reference before us also raises a preliminary question as to the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain this reference. In other words, the question is, whether this Court is a High Court within the meaning of s. 66 of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1922. Section 8 of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925 runs as follows:—

"The Chief Court shall be deemed for the purposes of all enactments for the time being in force to be the highest Civil Court of appeal and revision."

This Court is the Chief Court of Oudh under s. 3 of the Oudh Courts Act, 1925. Section 4, para. 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1901, United Provinces defines High Court as follows:—

"'High Court' used with reference to civil proceedings, shall mean the highest Civil Court of Appeal in the part of the United Provinces in which the Act containing the expression operates."

The Oudh Courts Act operates in the Province of Oudh in the United Provinces. I am, therefore, of opinion that the effect of the two enactments is to constitute this Court a High Court within the meaning of s. 66 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922.

Ashworth, J. — I agree. Certain manufacturing firms by means of an agreement formed a Selling Association to prevent under-selling by the constituent firms. One clause in the agreement provided for an article manufactured by the constituent firms being paid for at a fixed rate by the Association. It is alleged in argument that heavy losses were incurred by the constituent firms by manufacturing at this rate. In my opinion the Association was clearly a separate firm within the meaning of s. 3 of the Income Tax Act. Reference has been made in a form which does not require this Court to decide the method of assessment, but it is apparently from the argument of Counsel for the Association, the method that the Association really objects to. There does not appear to me any reason why the profits of the association should be held diminished by any losses of the individual firms.

By the Court.—The answer of the Court to both questions asked in the reference is in the affirmative. Having regard to the provision of s. 66 (6), it is ordered that the Association shall bear the costs of this reference.

In a pre-emption case, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of the market value of the land in dispute, the sum actually paid may be taken to be the proper market value. [p. 259, col. 1.]

Where a pre-emptor refuses to purchase the property offered for sale at a certain price, he is not estopped from asserting his right of pre-emption if the property is subsequently sold for a lesser sum. [ibid.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Seikhupura at Gujranwala, dated the 14th March 1921.

Dr. Nand Lal and Lala Amolak Ram Kapur, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Nath and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Barkat Ram, defendant No. 1, sold the land in suit to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for Rs. 12,000. The plaintiffs sue for pre-emption, alleging themselves to be collaterals of the vendor, and have been given a decree subject to the payment of Rs. 12,024, the additional Rs. 24 having been allowed for improvements to well-gear. Both parties have appealed.

The evidence of Atma Ram P. W. No. 1 and Pala Mal D. W. No. 3, who are both first cousins of the vendor, proves that the plaintiffs are the latter's second cousins. Their statements are supported by an extract from the settlement pedigree table which is on the record, and are un rebutted. We agree with the lower Court's finding that the plaintiffs are collaterals of the vendor and have a right of pre-emption superior to that of the vendees.

The next question is whether the full price entered in the sale-deed was paid, and the main dispute relates to an item of Rs. 1,400 alleged to have been paid by the vendees to Mangal Singh, who is said to have been a creditor of the vendor Barkat Ram. Mangal Singh is the vendor's sister's son, and the bahi which he produces to prove the debt which he says Barkat Ram owed him is one in which an entry could be made at any time, as he keeps no cash book or daybook. The receipt that he gave to the vendees for the Rs. 1,400 is unattested. He lives about 8 kos from the vendee's village, but it is alleged that when he went there to ask Barkat Ram for payment the vendees undertook in writing to pay the money for Barkat Ram, and that they paid it about a month later. The written undertaking which the vendees are said to have given is not on the record, although it was produced before the lower Court. It is peculiar that the receipt for the Rs. 1,400 bears date the 2nd Poh, which was one day before the execution of the sale-deed. The vendees themselves have not gone into the witness-box, and we regard the evidence of Mangal Singh as to the debt and the payment of Rs. 1,400 with suspicion, and are not satisfied that any such payment was made. We have no doubt that the remaining sum of Rs. 10,600 was paid. There is no satisfactory evidence of the market-value of the land, and Rs. 10,600 the sum actually paid, may be taken to be the proper value.

Evidence was given by the vendees to prove that the land had been offered to the plaintiffs and that they had refused to buy it and had thus waived their right, but as the evidence is to the effect that Barkat Ram demanded Rs. 12,000, for the land, and we have found that the market-value was much less, the plea of waiver has no force.

There is no dispute about the item of Rs. 24, allowed by the lower Court for improvements.

We accept the plaintiffs' appeal (No. 1437 of 1921) and alter the decree to one for possession of the land in suit on payment of Rs. 10,624. It is not necessary to fix a date for payment as the amount has already been deposited. The defendant-vendees will pay the plaintiffs' costs in both Courts.

The defendants' appeal (No. 1115 of 1921) is dismissed with cost.

A subordinate Court has no power under the C. P. C. or any other statutory enactment to restrain another Court by an injunction from executing a decree. [ibid.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, dated the 3rd March 1925.

Lala Badri Das, R B, for the Appellant,
Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in this miscellaneous appeal is whether the Sub-Judge, Third Class, before whom a suit is pending for a declaration that a security bond for stay of execution of a decree was given under fraud and was, therefore, unenforceable, can issue an injunction to the Senior Sub-Judge, First Class, who is executing the decree against the surety for stay of execution pending decision of the said suit by the surety. The facts are briefly as below :—

An ex parte decree for Rs. 12,990 and costs was passed against Hira Lal and others, and the decree-holders took out execution of the same. The judgment-debtors then applied to have that decree set aside and also for stay of execution. This was allowed on their furnishing security for payment of the decretal amount if the ex parte decree were not set aside. The persons who gave the security bond were Kanshi Ram and Devi Chand. The ex parte decree was not set aside and was eventually affirmed by the High Court. The decree-holders proceeded to execute it against the judgment-debtors as well as the sureties, and on their application the Executing Court proceeded against the persons of the surety, Kanshi Ram and twice ordered his arrest. Each time Kanshi Ram appealed to the High Court against that order, and as his last appeal was dismissed he filed the declaratory suit in question. The plea of fraud was never raised in the execution proceedings, and it is a question whether he could bring a separate suit to establish fraud. A surety by virtue of s. 145, C. P. C., is a party within the meaning of s. 47, C. P. C. and a plea of this nature could be raised before the Executing Court. But this is by the way. The real point is that the Court in which the suit was instituted had no power under the C. P. C. or any other statutory enactment to restrain the Executing Court by an injunction from executing the decree.

Only a chartered High Court has inherent powers to issue injunctions of this nature in certain cases, but other Courts do not possess any such powers, vide Rash Behary Dey v. Bhowani Churn Bhowe (1) and Mungle Chand v. Gopal Ram (2). The Executing Court was, therefore, competent to refuse to stay proceedings and this appeal as against its order must fail and I dismiss it with costs.

It may be noted here that copy of the plaint produced by Mr. Fakir Chand shows that the surety's suit is to have the decree itself decreed void.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XXXIV, r. 8—Redemption suit—Decree based on compromise—Default in payment—Second suit for redemption, whether maintainable.

A decree passed in a redemption suit on the basis of a compromise provided that on payment of a certain sum to the defendant within one month of the date of the compromise the plaintiff would be entitled to get the property redeemed and to be put in possession and that after the expiry of the fixed period he would be entitled to execute the decree on payment of the sum mentioned in the decree. Plaintiff failed to pay the amount within the time mentioned in the decree and failed to apply for execution of the decree within three years of its date. He subsequently brought a second suit for redemption of the same property.

Held, that inasmuch as the first decree did not provide that the plaintiff's right to redeem was to be extinguished absolutely in case of default of payment he was not prevented from bringing a second suit for redemption and that the defendant was still a mortgagee and had not become absolute proprietor of the property.

Hari Ram v. Indraj, 69 Ind. Cas. 167; 44 A. 730, 20 A. L. J. 631; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 377; 9 O & A. L. R. 123 and Arura v. Bur Singh, 84 Ind. Cas. 67; 5 L. 371; (1925) A. I. R. (L.) 31, relied on.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 5th September 1924.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for redemption. It appears that on a previous occasion the plaintiff instituted a suit for redemption of this very mortgage and obtained a compromise decree in December 1916. The decree as framed was not in accordance with the compromise and was accordingly subsequently corrected in April 1924. The amended decree stood as follows:

"On payment of Rs. 225 to the defendant within one month of the date of the compromise the plaintiff would be entitled to get the property redeemed and put in possession but after the expiry of the fixed period he will be entitled to execute his decree on payment of Rs. 225. Parties shall bear their own costs." The plaintiff failed to pay the amount in time and failed to apply for execution within three years. He however has brought a second suit for redemption of that property. The Trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the claim was barred by the provisions of s. 11, C. P. C. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has taken the contrary view and remanded the case for trial of the other points involved in the case. In our opinion the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct. When it is borne in mind that the original mortgage deed was a usufructuary mortgage a suit for redemption of that mortgage in spite of a default of payment of the mortgage money within the time fixed can be brought. If there had been no compromise the proper course would have been that the property would be sold and the mortgage money realised thereby. By mere lapse of the time fixed, the mortgagee does not become the absolute proprietor of the mortgaged property. The case however was compromised and the decree was passed in terms of the compromise. The compromise nowhere expressly stated that in default of the payment of Rs. 225 within one month the plaintiff's right to redeem would be extinguished or that his exclusive remedy would be to apply for execution. We may note that the decree as originally framed bore a clause that in default of payment his right to redeem would be extinguished, but the Court subsequently corrected this, holding that it was not in accordance with the compromise. It seems to us that when under the compromise the parties did not agree that his right to redeem would be extinguished absolutely he is not prevented from bringing a second suit for redemption, and the mortgagee is still a mortgagee and has not become the absolute proprietor of the property. In support of our view we may refer to the case of Hari Ram v. Indraj (1) which has been followed by the Punjab High Court in the case of Arura v. Bur Singh (2).

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Mortgage—Redemption by one of several mortgagors—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Death of pro forma respondent—Legal representatives not brought on record—Abatement, extent of

One of several mortgagors is entitled to redeem the entire mortgage and by doing so he steps into the shoes of the mortgagee in respect of the shares of the other mortgagors [p. 261, col. 2]

Where a pro forma respondent dies and his legal representatives are not brought upon the record within the prescribed period, the abatement of the appeal as against the deceased respondent does not result in the abatement of the appeal as a whole. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Attock at Campbellpore, dated the 25th April 1924, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Pindigheb, District Attock.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that Budhe Khan respondent died on the 14th of February 1925 and no legal representatives having been brought on the record in his place within the prescribed time the appeal abated as against him. On behalf of the appellant an application was made on the 13th of June praying that certain persons be substituted as legal representatives of Budhe Khan. An affidavit was filed explaining the delay in presenting the application. It was alleged that the appellants did not know of the death of the respondent. In my opinion there was no sufficient ground for extension of the ordinary period of limitation. I, therefore, instituted to the parties that the appeal as against Budhe Khan had abated.

The learned Counsel for the respondents then contended that the whole appeal had abated. In order to understand this objection it is necessary to state the facts of this case. The land in suit was in possession of a muqarridar. On his death without an heir it reverted to the proprietary body of the village. The deceased muqarridar had mortgaged this land with defendants Nos. 1 to 27. The plaintiffs are two of the proprietary body. They instituted this suit for the redemption of the mortgage and impleaded defendants Nos. 28—51, the other proprietors of the village as pro forma defendants. Budhe Khan, deceased, was one of the pro forma defendants. The suit was decreed by the Trial Court. An appeal by the mortgagee defendants has been dismissed by the District Judge on the ground that one of the pro forma defendants was not impleaded or represented before him. The mortgagees appeal to this Court. It appears that the plaintiffs are the owners of a very large share in the land in suit. The question, therefore, is whether a few of the mortgagors can redeem the entire mortgage. This was not a suit by the plaintiff to redeem only his share of the mortgaged property. In my opinion one of the mortgagors is entitled to redeem the entire mortgage, and by doing so he steps into the shoes of the mortgagee in respect of the shares of the other mortgagors. In this case owing to the death of muqarridar all the proprietors became mortgagors.

The learned Counsel for the respondents argued that the proprietors are more like heirs of a deceased person and that a few of a number of heirs are not competent to sue in respect of a cause of action which vested in the deceased. In my opinion this analogy does not apply. The plaintiffs in this case cannot be called the heirs of the deceased muqarridar. They became co-owners of the land by virtue of reversion. They are, therefore, the owners of the land in whom the equity of redemption vests.

The matter can be looked at from another point of view. It was contended that the integrity of the mortgage cannot be broken except under certain circumstances. It was admitted that a mortgagee can allow partial redemption of a mortgage. The plaintiffs in this case are the mortgagors and the contesting defendants are the mortgagees. They are the appellants before me and they have allowed their appeal to abate against one of the respondents. Supposing a decree had been given against them in favour of a number of mortgagors jointly, I think it was open to them to abandon their appeal or to compromise the case against some of the mortgagors and to contest the right of others to redeem. The practical effect of the omission of the appellants to bring on record the legal representatives of Budhe Khan is the same.

Moreover, Budhe Khan was merely a pro forma defendant and the abatement of the appeal as against him does not result in the abatement of the appeal as a whole. I, therefore, hold that the appeal does not abate. This practically disposes of this appeal on the merits also, because the appeal by the mortgagees defendants has been dismissed by the learned District Judge on the ground that one of the pro forma defendants, Nawab, had sold his rights to one Alam Sher and on the plaintiffs' application Alam Sher, was made a defendant in place of Nawab. Nawab subsequently died, but Nawab's heirs were not made respondents by the appellants in the District Judge's Court nor was Alam Sher made a respondent. The Court ordered that Alam Sher should be joined. The appellants not having complied with these orders the appeal was dismissed. It is admitted by the learned Counsel for the respondents that if Alam Sher was not a necessary party to the appeal then the order of the learned District Judge could not be sustained. For reasons already given I hold that none of the pro forma defendants were a necessary party to the appeal and, therefore, accepting this appeal I remand the case to the learned District Judge for decision on the merits. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded to the appellants. The other costs will abide the result.

Where a mortgagee in possession, without the consent of the mortgagor, plants a grove which is not necessary for the preservation of the property and of which separate possession is not possible, the mortgagor is entitled to possession of the grove unconditionally.

Zubeda Bibi v. Sheo Charan, 22 A. 83 at p. 85; A. W. N. (1899) 189; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1085, referred to.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 31st October 1924, confirming that of the Munsif, Partabgarh, dated the 31st July 1923.

Messrs. Suraj Prasad Khandelwal and Radha Krishna, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a redemption suit. The facts of the case are as follows:—

One Durga Singh mortgaged grove No. 719 in Sahjanpur District Partabgarh to Jahangir (appellant), with possession, for Rs. 25 in or about 1904. Durga Singh died in or about 1912 leaving Saraojit Singh and Bhagwant Singh (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) as his heirs. The plaintiff Ram Harakh purchased the equity of redemption from the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on 30th August 1922 and instituted the present suit in December 1922 against Jahangir impleading the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 also. The claim was decreed by the first Court on the 31st July 1923. That decree was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court on the 31st October 1924. The mortgagee, defendant No. 1, has come to this Court in second appeal contending that the lower Courts were wrong in not allowing the price and cost of 80 new trees planted by him in the grove during the continuance of the mortgage.

It is admitted that 18 old trees still stand in the grove. It is neither alleged nor shown that the plot lost the character of a grove at any time. The new trees in dispute are accession to the mortgaged property. It has been found that separate possession and enjoyment of the grove is not possible without detriment to the principal property and that the planting of the new trees was not necessary to preserve the mortgaged property from destruction, forfeiture or sale and that the new trees were not planted with the consent of the mortgagor. Where a mortgagee in possession planted a grove without the consent of the mortgagor, which was not necessary for the preservation of the property and of which separate possession was not possible, it was held that the mortgagor was entitled to possession of the grove unconditionally [Zubeda Bibi v. Sheo Charan(1)] I should like to note also that the defendant No. 1 (mortgagee) had not raised the plea in question in the written statement which he had filed in the first Court. I fail to understand how and why he or his legal adviser was allowed to raise the plea in question in the course of arguments in the lower Courts. Upon the findings of the lower Court the mortgagor must be held entitled as against the mortgagee to the accession in question.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed. I dismiss the appeal with costs and order the appellant to pay the cost of the contesting respondents.

Custom—Alienation—Necessity—Marriage of children—Enquiry, scope of.

Where the necessity stated for an alienation of ancestral land by a village proprietor is the marriage of children, and this is also spoken to by the lambar-dar, who attests the sale-deed, and there are, as a matter of fact, several young children, one of whom is approaching marriageable age, the vendee is not bound to make any further enquiry as to whether any actual steps to make arrangements for marriages have been taken or not.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 5th March 1924, modifying that of the First Class Sub-Judge, Jullundur, dated the 31st October 1923.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Sheikh Niaz Mahommed, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was brought by the son of a vendor for the usual declaration. The amount of consideration was shown in the deed as Rs. 2,600, out of which Rs. 1,300 were on account of previous mortgages and this amount was not contested before the District Judge. The only question, therefore, was with regard to the necessity for the balance of Rs. 1,300, which was paid in full before the Sub-Registrar. The entry in the deed was that the money was required for the marriages of the vendor's children, etc. The Trial Court has held that the vendee had sufficient reasons to suppose that the money was so required, and the fact that the vendor had five unmarried children, the eldest of which a boy of 14 was approaching marriageable age, was a sufficient reason for his believing the story told him, and has dismissed the suit in toto.

The learned District Judge has held that the evidence regarding necessity for this sum is wholly insufficient, that it was for the alienee to prove that there was such necessity, and that he should have satisfied himself beyond all reasonable doubt that the money was actually required for the marriages, and that the absence of any evidence as to there having actually been a betrothal or any sort of preparations for the marriage shows that the vendee did not make sufficient enquiry, that necessity is not established for this item, and that only the sum required for the previous mortgages constituted a charge upon the land.

The only question to be decided is whether the vendee made sufficient enquiries, and whether it was incumbent upon him when told by the vendor and the lambar-dar of the village, who witnessed the sale-deed, and who gives evidence to this effect, that money was required for the children's marriages, to ascertain whether any steps had been taken to make arrangements or not. Doubtless he was bound to satisfy himself that the vendor had a child or children, and here the vendor had five young children his eldest daughter by his first wife having already been married. In the natural course of events he had to make arrangements for the marriages of these children and presumably the eldest child would be married before long and I think it was sufficient for him to satisfy himself of these facts and that he was not bound to make further enquiries, which would have been of a somewhat inquisitorial nature and might have been very much resented. All that I understand to be laid down in Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1) and subsequent judgments is that the vendee is required to satisfy himself that there is prima facie necessity, and just as he need not go behind an antecedent mortgage or a just debt, it is sufficient if the circumstances justify him in supposing that the vendor is telling the truth when he tells him that he requires money for the marriages of his children.

The question remains of whether the amount is so excessive that it should not be allowed. It is true that the children would presumably be married one by one, there being five of whom two are daughters. I do not think it can be said that the amount is excessive for a Sayyad zemindar to spend on the marriages. I therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

It is only when an appeal has been decided and a decree has been passed in appeal confirming, amending or reversing the decree of the Trial Court that the appellate decree operates to supersede the Trial Court's decree, and it is only then that the jurisdiction of the Trial Court to interfere with the decree so superseded ceases. Till the Appellate Court hears the appeal and decides it, the decree of the Trial Court remains in force and it can be rectified or amended by the Court which passed it.

Civil revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 9th May 1925.

Mr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision for the discharge of an order for the amendment of a decree passed by the Trial Court on the 9th May 1925. The Trial Court observes that there was a mistake in the decree which was not in accordance with the judgment and it has directed that mistake to be rectified. It is argued here that the Trial Court had ceased to have any jurisdiction to amend this decree or to rectify it after an appeal had been filed from that decree in the Court of the District Judge. But till the District Judge hears the appeal and decides it, the decree of the Trial Court remains in force and it can be rectified or amended by the Court which passed it. It is only when the appeal has been decided and a decree has been passed in appeal confirming, amending or reversing it, that the appellate decree operates to supersede the decree of the Trial Court, and it is only then that the jurisdiction of the Trial Court to interfere with the decree so superseded, ceases. It is immaterial what has happened since the order of the Trial Court of the 9th May 1925 now sought to be revised was passed. The order as passed on that date was correct and the Trial Court had jurisdiction to pass it. The decision in Asma Bibi v. Ahmad Husain (1) referred to by the learned Counsel for the applicant does not apply because in that case the amendment was made after the appeal was decided. The application is, therefore, rejected. The stay order passed will be withdrawn.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that a gift by the plaintiff is null and void and should be revoked. The gift consisted of the plaintiff's fourth share in a house which was under mortgage with possession, and, in the Courts below several reasons were alleged why the gift should be set aside.

as, for instance, undue influence, breach of the conditions of the gift, invalidity of the gift of plaintiff's undivided share. On all these points the plaintiff has been unsuccessful and before me the appellants Counsel has narrowed down his contentions to this only that under Muhammadan Law a gift is always revocable even after seisin has been delivered except in certain cases into none of which the present case falls. This contention is that a gift under Muhammadan Law is always revocable by the donor even after delivery of the property gifted although none of the conditions of the gift have been broken. I am not able to accept this proposition and hold that when once delivery has been made a gift under Muhammadan Law is not revocable if the conditions of the gift have not been broken, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Muhammadan Law—Hiba-bil-ewaz, nature of—Conveyance of landed property for dower—Transaction, whether sale—Pre-emption, right of—Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 9—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—"Price," meaning of—Dower-debt, whether price—Deed, construction of.

A conveyance of landed property by a husband to his wife in consideration of an extinction of her dower-debt is a gift of the form known as hiba-bil-ewaz in Muhammadan Law, and as such is not liable to pre-emption. It cannot be regarded as a sale attracting the provisions of s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act. [p. 265, col. 2.]

Ram Prasad v. Rahat Bibi, 33 Ind. Cas. 622; 18 O. C. 367, Abid Ali v. Arabunnissa, 1 O. C. 75, followed.

Nathu v. Shadi, 29 Ind. Cas. 495, 37 A. 522; 13 A. L. J. 714, not followed.

A hiba-bil-ewaz is a well recognised mode of transfer of property in Muhammadan Law. A sale is equally a well-understood form of contract in the same law, yet according to that law the legal incidents of each case differ in many respects. [p. 266, col. 2.]

A hiba-bil-ewaz is a combination of two reciprocal gifts. [ibid.]

Imdad Ali v. Ahmad Ali, 85 Ind. Cas. 400; 1 O. W.

N. 868; 10 O. & A. L. R. 1215; 28 O. C. 55; (1925) A. I. R. (O.) 518, referred to.

The consideration for a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz in Muhammadan Law does not, therefore, rest merely in the pecuniary value of the subject-matter of the gift and of the return but there is always a personal element when the gift is made in favour of one's wife or other near relations. [p. 267, col. 1.]

It is wholly unsafe to deduce a rule of law that a claim for pre-emption can lie in respect of a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz if in effect it amounts to a sale, when no such rule was promulgated by the Muhammadan jurists. [ibid.]

The word "property" as understood in Muhammadan Law does not include res incorporales which a claim for dower is. [p. 267, col. 2.]

The word "price" in the definition of sale in s. 54, Transfer of Property Act, means "money" [p. 268, col. 1.]

A Muhammadan transferring property in lieu of dower to his wife does not receive any "price" within the meaning of that word in s. 54, Transfer of Property Act. [p. 268, col. 1.]

There is no difference in principle whether the property is transferred 'as dower' or 'in lieu of dower'. [p. 267, col. 2.]

The primary object of all interpretation is to determine what intention is conveyed by the deed and the primary source of determining such an intention is the language used in the deed [p. 266, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 15th September 1924, setting aside the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 12th March 1924.

ORDER.

Simpson, A. J. C.—(September 2, 1925)—Counsel for the appellant at the close of his argument asked me to refer this appeal for decision to a Bench. Counsel for the respondent agreed to this course being taken. The reason is that the appeal raises the question whether a conveyance of landed property by a husband to his wife, in consideration of an extinction of her dower-debt, is to be regarded as a sale, attracting the provisions of s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, and liable to pre-emption, or whether it is to be regarded as a gift of the form known in Muhammadan Law as a hiba-bil-ewaz, and as such not liable to pre-emption.

The learned Munsif decided that the transaction was a sale and gave plaintiff a decree. The learned District Judge felt himself constrained to follow Ram Prasad v. Rahat Bibi (1), and dismissed the suit. I do not propose to discuss the cases, but I mention Mohammad Zaki Khan v. Munnu Sahu (2), and the cases therein referred to,

(1) 33 Ind. Cas. 622; 18 O. C. 367.

(2) 87 Ind. Cas. 176; 2 O. W. N. 171; 12 O. L. J. 267; (1925) A. I. R. (O.) 407; 23 O. C. 227.

especially Fida Ali v. Muzaffar Ali (3) a decision of Mahmood, J., a high authority on Muhammadan Law, and Abbas Ali Shikdar v. Karim Bakhsh Shikdar (4). The cases Lachhman Prasad v. Mir Fida Husain (5), Abid Ali v. Arabunnissa (6) and Raj Kishore v. Raghunath Prasad (7) on which Ram Prasad v. Rahat Bibi (1) purports to be founded, were all cases of actual exchange of some specific thing. They were not cases either of a money price or of a extinction of a debt. I certify that the appeal ought to be heard by a Bench.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haider Hussain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal in a suit for pre-emption which succeeded in the Trial Court but on appeal by the defendants the learned District Judge of Fyzabad reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. This appeal is preferred from the decree of the learned District Judge dated the 15th of September 1924.

On the 25th of August 1922 Akhtar Husain defendant No. 2 executed a document by which he transferred certain immoveable property of his own to his wife, Musammât Zubaida Khatun, defendant No. 1. The claim for pre-emption is in respect of that transfer. The defence, with which we are concerned in this appeal, was that the transaction evidenced by the deed of the 25th of August 1922 was not a sale but one of a hiba-bil-ewaz and that consequently it was not subject to the right of pre-emption.

The deed in question recites the fact of the marriage of Akhtar Husain with Musammât Zubaida Khatun and also the fact that Musammât Zubaida Khatun's dower was fixed at that marriage at the sum of Rs. 2,500. The deed then proceeds to say that the dower had remained unpaid till then and that it was incumbent on the husband, Akhtar Husain, to satisfy it. The operative part of the deed is the transfer of a 2 biswa 2½ anansi under proprietary share in village Dostpur Ferozpur, Parganna Aldemau, District Sultanpur, in favour of Musammât Zubaida Khatun. The words of transfer used in the document are "hiba wa bakhsh diya" (made a gift and present of). The value of the zemindari share which is the subject-matter of the gift is mentioned to be Rs 2,000. At the end the document is christened a deed of gift.

Under s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, the right of pre-emption arises in respect of "the property to be sold or foreclosed." The question for decision, therefore, is whether the 2 biswas odd share was sold or not by the deed of the 25th of August 1922. The plaintiff's case, as stated in para 2 of the plaint, is that the transaction evidenced by the deed of the 25th of August 1922 was in reality a sale but that it has been clothed in the garb of a hiba-bil ewaz with the fraudulent motive of defeating the claim for pre-emption. No evidence aliunde of the contents of the deed was relied upon in proof of this case. The question is, therefore, one of interpretation alone. The primary object of all interpretation is to determine what intention is conveyed by the deed and the primary source of determining such an intention is the language used in the deed. In the present instance the intention is floating on the surface of the document and that intention was to effectuate a transaction of hiba-bil ewaz and not of sale. A hiba-bil-ewaz is a well-recognised mode of transfer of property in Muhammadan Law. A sale is equally a well-understood form of contract in the same law, yet according to that law the legal incidents of each case differ in many respects. The parties to the deed of the 25th of August 1922 are Hanafi Muhammadans. Is it competent for the Courts of law to thwart the express intention of the parties and to convert the transaction of hiba bil-ewaz into one of sale so as to attract to it a claim for pre-emption under the Oudh Laws Act. Our answer to this question is in the negative.

It was admitted at the Bar that hiba-bil-ewaz is a combination of two reciprocal gifts—See in this connection the decision of one of us in the case Imdad Ali v. Ahmad Ali (8). If that is so, the transaction in question evidences the gift of the zamin-dari share by Akhtar Husain to his wife, Musammât Zubaida Khatun, and of the claim for dower by the latter to the former. Such a transaction is clearly not a sale.

The entire law of gifts, whether simple or bil-ewaz rests on the Prophet's saying:—"Send ye presents to each other for the increase of your love." (Hamilton's Hedaya, Book XXX p. 291). In the case of a gift by the husband to his wife and vice versa the recognised object of the gift, in Muhammadan Law, 'is improved affection' (Hamilton's Hedaya, Book XXX p. 302.) The consideration for a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz in Muhammadan Law does not, therefore, rest merely on the pecuniary value of the subject-matter of the gift and of the return but there is always a personal element when the gift is made in favour of one's wife or other near relations. In the present case the wife has accepted property worth Rs. 2,000 only in satisfaction of her claim of dower for Rs. 2,500. The acceptance of the gift is, therefore, clearly prompted by considerations of natural love and affection and acceptance is an essential element of a contract of gift.

The strongest case in favour of the appellant is the decision of Mahmood, J. in the case of Fida Ali v. Muza'ffar Ali (3) This decision was followed in Nathu v. Shadi (4) but is not accepted as good law by Mr. Ameer Ali—See his book on Muhammadan Law, Volume I, 4th Edition, page 713. We are of opinion that the view expressed by Mr. Ameer Ali is correct. Now in the first place, in the books of Muhammadan Law for instance Hedaya, the transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz is not mentioned as one subject to the exercise of the right of pre-emption. We think it is wholly unsafe to deduce a rule of law that a claim for pre-emption can lie in respect of a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz if in effect it amounts to a sale when no such rule was promulgated by the Muhammadan jurists. In the judgment of Mahmood, J., which commands our greatest respect, no rule of Muhammadan Law is quoted. A passage from the Sharaya-ul-Islam and another from the Mafatih, both books of authority on the Shia Law, are quoted to elucidate the rule applicable to the cases where there is no right of pre-emption. The learned Judge rightly points out "that sale is an essential condition precedent to the operation of the right of pre-emption is a well-established principle of Muhammadan Law and in this respect no serious difference exists between the doctrines of the Sunni and the Shia Schools." The rule stated in the Mafatih and the Sharaya-ul-Islam as quoted in the judgment of the learned Judge may well, therefore, be regarded as the rule of the Sunni Law also. In the Sharaya-ul-Islam the rule is thus expressed:—

"If the share has been assigned as a dower, or given in charity, or bestowed by way of gift, or in compromise, it is not subject to the claim of pre-emption." In the Mafatih the rule is stated in similar terms:—"The transfer must be by sale. So, if the transfer be made as dower, or as a gift, or in compromise, then according to the prevalent doctrine, there is no right of pre-emption". The rule precisely apposite to the case before us is stated in Hedaya as follows:—

"If a man marry a woman without settling on her any dower and afterwards settle on her as house as a dower the privilege of shuffa does not take place, the house being considered in the same light as if it had been settled on the woman at the time of . . . . . It is otherwise where a man sells his house in order to discharge his wife's dower either proper or stipulated; because here exists exchange of property for property. "(Hamilton's Hedaya, Book XXXVIII, page 593). We think that these rules conclusively exclude the right of pre-emption in a case of the nature which we have before us.

In the rule in Hedaya emphasis must be laid on the word 'sells.' The case before us is not of sale and of the application of the purchase money to the payment of the dower. In interpreting this rule it should be borne in mind that the word 'property' as understood in Muhammadan Law does not include res incorporales which a claim for dower is.

What difference in principle can it make whether the property is transferred "as dower" or "in lieu of dower." In each case the dower is represented by the property. The transaction before us may equally fall within the description of a "compromise." The wife has a claim of dower to the extent of Rs. 2,500. The husband is unable to satisfy it fully. He is willing to offer property in satisfaction of the entire claim the value of which is Rs. 2,000 only. The wife accepts the offer. Is this not a compromise? Again what difference can it make in principle whether the amount of dower is fixed before hand in money or whether it is fixed by the value of the property given as dower. It is permissible in Muhammadan Law to fix no dower at the marriage and to fix it later. An instructive instance on the point just now mentioned will be found in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kamar-Un-Nissa Bibi v. Hussaini Bibi (10).

It was argued by the learned Advocate for the appellant that the transaction in question was a sale within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and it was further argued that if that was so the claim for pre-emption must prevail. In support of the first portion of the argument the following cases were cited:—

Asalat Fatima v. Shambhu Dayal (11) and Abbas Ali v. Karim Bakhsh (4). These cases established the need of a registered instrument for a transaction of a hiba-bil ewaz. The following cases were also cited to show that the doctrine of marzul-maut as understood in Muhammadan Law was not applicable to a transaction of hiba-bil-ewaz:—Ghulam Mustafa v. Hurmat (12) and Esahuq Chowdhury v. Ahedanissa Bebi (13). We have considered these cases carefully and we think that we will not gratify ourselves if we decide the question involved in the present appeal in the light of the expressions of opinion used in those cases on matters wholly different in essence.

There is one feature of the definition of sale in s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to which we might profitably advert and that is the meaning of the word 'price' as used therein. It was agreed at the Bar that that word in that definition meant "money." We also agree with that view. The question, therefore, is: Did Akhtar Husain obtain money or a promise of payment of money in consideration of the transfer of the zemindari share which he made to his wife? Our answer is in the negative. On the date of the deed of gift Musammam Zubaida Khatun had only a claim on a legal right to her dower debt against her husband, Akhtar Husain, and Akhtar Husain was under a corresponding legal obligation to satisfy it. In discharge of that obligation Akhtar Husain makes the transfer in question and Musammam Zubaida Khatun releases him of that obligation. A claim for a debt is a "chose in action" and has well-known legal incidents—See Ryall v. Ramles (14) and notes under it, in White and Tudor's

Leading Cases Volume 1, page 28, eighth edition). Where does then payment of money or a promise to pay money come in this transaction? Nowhere. In Lachhman Prasad v. Mir Fida Husain (5) it was held that the "equity of redemption" was not "price" within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act but that it was a "thing" within the meaning of s. 118 of the same Act. The Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner held in that case that where a person assigned his equity of redemption in consideration of the assignee transferring to him proprietary rights over certain other lands the transaction was an "exchange" and no right of pre-emption could be exercised with respect to it.

The course of decisions in the late Court has been uniform and we are not prepared to disturb it. The decision in the case of Ram Prasad v. Rahat Bibi (1) is directly in point and against the appellant. Previous decisions of that Court are to the same effect—See Mir Abid Ali v. Arabunnissa (6) and Raj Kishore v. Raghunath Prasad (7).

On behalf of the respondents our attention was drawn to two decisions of the late Punjab Chief Court also Mir Zaman Khan v. Ghulam Fatima (15) and Ghulam Raza v. Sardar Khan (16). Our opinion falls in line with the opinions expressed in these Punjab cases.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 30th November 1923.

Mr. J. L. Kapur for Dr. Muhammad Alam, and Lala Maya Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and Bal Kishan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This order will dispose of the two appeals, Nos. 55 and 422 of 1924. The circumstances out of which they arise are as follows:—

In or about the year 1903 Sarbuland, the respondent, was given by Government a horse breeding grant of two squares of land Nos. 21 and 30 in Chak No. 36 in Sargodha Tahsil. On 30th August 1912 Sarbuland executed a document reciting that his brother Hussain Bakhsh and he had jointly purchased the mare required for the grant of land and paid for the grant out of joint funds, that they were jointly liable for their debts, and that the land would be considered their joint property in future. The document stated that Hussain Bakhsh was to continue to cultivate the square No. 21 and Sarbuland the other square. If Sarbuland resiled from this "agreement" he was to pay Rs. 5,000 to Hussain Bakhsh.

Sarbuland then proceeded to petition for insolvency on 2nd October 1913 and was adjudicated insolvent. In subsequent proceedings Hussain Bakhsh appears to have made several unsuccessful attempts to have one square, or its produce, released on the strength of the document of 1912. There was, it seems, some kind of arrangement between Sarbuland and his creditors leading to a discharge, for on 7th January 1922 a creditor applied to the Insolvency Court to have Sarbuland declared insolvent again. On 12th May 1922 Hussain Bakhsh filed objections to the attachment of one square. His petition was dismissed by the District Judge on 27th March 1923 by the following order:—

"He claims to be owner of one square out of two squares held by the insolvent. Hussain Bakhsh has sometimes put in a claim for the produce of the land as a tenant and had once asked to be admitted as a creditor to the extent of Rs. 5,000 if this claim to one square was not allowed, but my predecessors have not admitted his rights. I am not prepared to re open the question. He may have the question, if he likes, decided by a Civil Court. The application is accordingly rejected."

On 20th May 1923 Hussain Bakhsh filed a suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Sargodha against Sarbuland for a declaration that he had the same right in the square No. 21 as Sarbuland had in square No. 30, alleging that the grant had been paid for out of proceeds of ancestral land of himself and his brother and relying on the document executed by Sarbuland in 1912.

The plaint ended with the prayer that if Hussain Bakhsh was not found entitled to the rights claimed, a decree in respect of the rights found proved might be granted. This suit was dismissed on 30th November 1923, on the grounds, firstly, that the question of plaintiff's title had been finally decided against him under the provisions of s. 4 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, by the order of the Insolvency Court of 27th March 1923, and secondly, that the provisions of the document of the 30th August 1912 were contrary to the law contained in s. 19 of the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, V of 1912, by which any transfer or change made without the consent in writing of the Commissioner, or other officer empowered, of any of the rights or interest vested in a tenant by or under the Government Tenants (Punjab) Act, 1893 or the Act V of 1912 "shall be void." Against this order Hussain Bakhsh on 4th January 1924 filed the Appeal No. 55 of 1924. Three days later he filed the Appeal No. 422 of 1924 against the order of the District Judge, dated 27th March 1923, along with an affidavit in support of his prayer for extension of time under s. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act.

We may take first the appeal against the District Judge's judgment of 30th November 1923.

Mr. J. L. Kapur for the appellant admits that the defendant is still a tenant, bound by the provisions of Act V of 1912, and that the agreement of 1912 was executed after the Act V of 1912 came into force, but contends that there is nothing in s. 19 of that Act to preclude the grant of a decree giving effect to the agreement of 1912, which can be binding only upon the parties to the suit and will not affect the rights of Government. He cites Ali Mardan v. Bakar Khan (1), Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (2) and Nathu v. Allah Ditta (3). The facts in these three cases were, however, clearly distinguishable from those of the present case. In Ali Mardan v. Bakar Khan (1) the question for decision was whether a Deputy Commissioner could move for the revision of a decree which contravened a provision of the Government Tenants (Punjab) Act III of 1893 (which has been superseded by the Colonization of Government Lands Act, 1912). It was held that there was no legal procedure providing for such revision.

The ruling Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (2) dealt with a case in which it was sought to enforce an agreement, similar to that relied upon here, after proprietary rights had been acquired in land granted under the provisions of Act III of 1893. Similarly in the case decided in Nathu v. Allah Ditta (3), the defendant, against whom an agreement to share a grant was enforced, had acquired proprietary rights and was no longer a mere tenant. It is further to be noticed that s. 19 of Act V of 1912 contains an express provision that transfers contrary to its other provisions shall be void, which is not to be found in the corresponding s. 8 of the Act of 1893. In view of s. 19 of the Act of 1912 we are of opinion, that the agreement of 30th August 1912, so far as it relates to rights vested in the respondent as a tenant grantee (and it is not here sought to have declared any rights which may not be so described) is void and its enforcement by declaration was rightly refused by the Trial Court. As the appeal must fail upon this finding, there is no necessity to discuss the second ground urged by Mr. Kapur relating to the effect of the order of 27th March 1923 in the insolvency proceedings. The Appeal No. 55 of 1924 is dismissed with costs.

It is admitted by Mr. Kapur that if Appeal No. 55 fails there remains no force in the other Appeal No. 422 of 1924, which is accordingly also dismissed with costs.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 89 OF 1924.

March 16, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Lentaigne.

MAUNG SEIN HTIN—PLAINTIFF—

APPELLANT

versus

—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Agreement not to bid at excise auction, legality of—Public policy—Money paid under agreement not to bid, whether can be recovered—Fraud, plea of—Burden of proof.

An agreement not to bid at an excise auction is not per se illegal or opposed to public policy. [p. 272, col. 1.]

Where a plaintiff alleging that he had paid certain money to the defendant on the latter agreeing not to bid against the plaintiff at an excise auction sues to recover the amount paid by him and the defendant pleads that the agreement between him and the plaintiff was illegal under s. 23 of the Contract Act, the burden lies on him to show that it was intended by the agreement to effect the purpose of the agreement by illegal means. It is not sufficient for him to have used indefinite expressions when demanding the money from the plaintiff and then to ask the Court to presume that he had intended to act fraudulently or otherwise in contravention of any law. If he avoids pleading his own fraud he cannot ask the Court to presume that he had fraudulent intentions of an unspecified or an indefinite kind without his advancing evidence that such was the case. To refuse relief to the plaintiff under such circumstances would be to encourage fraud and trickery of a different kind by a person who had done nothing illegal except possibly to defraud the plaintiff with whom he entered into an agreement of an indefinite kind, with no intention of doing anything except to fraudulently keep the money in any event. [p. 272, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Ma-ubin, confirming that of the Sub-Divisional Court, Ma-ubin.

Mr. Ochme, for the Appellant.

Mr. Young, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court of Ma-ubin confirming the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Ma-ubin, and the only point for determination is whether the decree is invalid by reason of the fact that it is alleged by the defendant that the object of the alleged agreement was illegal, and that the contract sued on was void and contrary to public policy.

The plaintiff alleged that the plaintiff is the owner of the Hlawza shop at Ma-ubin Town; that first defendant is an Honorary Magistrate at Ma-ubin and a Lugyi of the Chinese Association and has influence over the Chinese Community; that second defendant is a teacher of the Chinese school in Rangoon, and is a person having influence over the Chinese people; that in the year

1922 plaintiff purchased the licenses for Ma-ubin and Mezali Hlawza shops, and joined as partner in the Yele, Kanwehabo and Payagyidaung shops; that the licenses for the said five shops were proclaimed for sale by auction in the Deputy Commissioner's Office, Ma-ubin, for the year 1923-24 on the 18th April 1923; that on the 17th April 1923 the first and second defendants came to the plaintiff's house at Ma-ubin and asked for payment of a total sum of Rs. 4,000—made up of Rs. 2,000 for Ma-ubin Hlawza shop, Rs. 1,000 for Mezali shop, Rs. 500 for Payagyidaung shop and Rs. 500 for Yele shop; and said that they would not bid for the said five shops; that they would prevent others from bidding for the same, and that they would return the money, if there was no reduction in the revenue, and if there was an increase of revenue as other persons were bidding for the same, and as plaintiff believed the statements made by the defendants, the plaintiff gave Rs. 4,000 to the defendants; that on the 18th April 1923 when there was a sale by auction other persons came and bid for the shops in question and plaintiff was about to be deprived of the shops, and, therefore, he had to purchase licenses for some shops at a reduced rate and for some shops at an increased rate of revenue; that the rates were as follows:—

Ma-ubin Shop for 1923-24 Rs. 22,100 but for 1922-23 Rs. 20,000 (an increase of Rs. 2,100);

Mezali Shop for 1923-24 Rs. 3,050 but for 1922-23 Rs. 2,800 (an increase of Rs. 250);

Yele Shop for 1923-24 Rs. 6,250 but for 1922-23 Rs. 7,050 (a decrease of Rs. 800);

Kanwekabo Shop for 1923-24, the plaintiff did not obtain the license.

Payagyidaung Shop for 1923-24 Rs. 5,000 but for 1922-23 Rs. 3,000 (an increase of Rs. 2,000);

That according to the agreement made by the plaintiff and the defendants, a demand for payment of Rs. 3,500 was made after leaving aside Rs. 500 for Yele Shop; that first defendant returned Rs. 500 promising that the balance of Rs. 3,000 would be paid when second defendant came back from Pyapon; that on several occasions defendants were asked to pay Rs. 3,000 according to the agreement, but in vain; and the prayer was for recovery of Rs. 3,000.

The written statement of the first defendant denied the alleged agreement and denied the receipt of Rs. 4,000 from the plaintiff and denied the alleged re-payment of Rs. 500 and promise to pay the balance; and the defendant contended that the suit is not maintainable and the money is not recoverable as it is paid in consideration of the promise to sacrifice the chance of pursuing one's own trade and to deter other competitors from . . . the plaintiffs at the Government Hlawza License Auction Sale, thus inflicting injury on the public purse, excluding one of the parties from competitions entirely at a sacrifice and restraining another from pursuing lawful trade, thereby rendering the said agreement void, being fraudulent, unlawful and opposed to public policy; that the defendant further contended that the plaintiff sued the defendant just to enable plaintiff to defend a criminal charge of defamation and criminal intimidation instituted by the defendant in a specified prosecution. The latter had reference to a prosecution instituted by the defendant against the plaintiff for calling him "a thief" in connection with this transaction. The second defendant raised similar legal defences and also denied the allegations of fact.

Both the lower Courts have decided all issues of fact in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Sub-Divisional Judge also decided the legal issue as to "whether the agreement was fraudulent, unlawful or opposed to public policy" in favour of the plaintiff. He disregarded two old decisions in Upper Burma and followed a more recent decision of a Bench of the late Chief Court in the case of Nagappa Chetty v. Ah Foke (1), where the plaintiff was allowed to recover a sum of money which had been deposited with a Chetty to be paid to another Chinaman if certain Hlawza licenses were sold below a certain price and on agreement that the defendants were not to bid for certain licenses. That decision was based on certain English decisions and also followed the Privy Council decision in Mahomed Mira Ravuther v. Savvasi Vijaya Raghunadha (2). The learned Trial Judge held that the facts of the present case are very similar to the facts of the case in the Chief Court, and he granted the plaintiff a decree with costs.

On first appeal the learned District Judge

(1) 56 Ind. Cas. 963; 12 B. L. T. 241.

(2) 23 M. 227; 27 I. A. 17; 4 C. W. N. 228; 10 M. L. J. 1; 2 Bom. L. R. 640; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 661; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 561 (P. C.).

held that there was not a tittle of evidence that Government had suffered any loss of revenue by the arrangement made between the parties; and that it is evident that defendants did not or could not induce the other intending buyers to desist from outbidding the plaintiff, and that there was no combination between the bidders to curtail the bidding; and that unless and until it was established that the arrangement made between them and the plaintiff was an artifice to defraud Government revenue, he found no reason for allowing them to take advantage of their own fraud, thereby enabling them to pocket a sum of Rs. 3,000, and he added that he was in full agreement with the learned Sub-Divisional Judge in following the decision in P. M. A. Nagappa Chettiar v. Ah Foke (1).

The present second appeal is against that decision. It is admitted that an agreement not to bid is not illegal, but it is urged that the case is not covered by the decisions of the Privy Council and of the late Chief Court, because it involves the further agreement of defendants that they would prevent others from bidding. I find, however, that no name of any other person was mentioned as a person to be so prevented and that no indication is given as to what defendants were to do, and that it is not clear what the defendants really contemplated when they used the original Chinese or Burmese expressions which have been so translated.

In the case of Mahomed Mira Ravuther v. Savvasi Vijaya Raghunadha (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council cited their previous decision that "all purchasers are bound to abstain from breaches of trust and from intimidation or falsehood in keeping off bidders" and in a later passage they quote the finding of the High Court, "The means by which competition was discouraged at the auction were clearly of an innocent character. In employing them, as in making the agreement with the zemindar, the purchaser did not go beyond the limit of what he was entitled to do in order to make a good bargain"; and they expressed the view that such findings were in accordance with the view pronounced by the Board.

I think that if the defendants in this case intended to show that the contract was illegal under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, the burden lay on them to show clearly that it was intended to effect the purpose by illegal means, and that it is not sufficient for them to have used indefinite expressions when demanding the money from the plaintiff and then to ask the Court to presume that they, defendants, had intended to act fraudulently, illegally or otherwise in contravention of any law. The defendants avoid pleading their own fraud, but they ask the Court to presume that they, the defendants, had fraudulent intentions of an unspecified or indefinite kind without their advancing any evidence that such was the case. To refuse plaintiff relief under such circumstances would be to encourage fraud and trickery of a different kind by persons who intended nothing illegal except possibly to defraud the person with whom they were entering into agreements of an indefinite kind, with no intention of doing anything except to fraudulently keep the money in any event.

For the above reasons, I see no reason, to disagree with the decisions of the lower Courts, and I dismiss this second appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 20, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Service of summons—Substituted service—Limitation—Burden of proof.

Article 164 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act prescribes a period of thirty days for an application to set aside an ex parte decree, and the terminus a quo is the date of the decree, or, where the summons was not duly served, the date on which the applicant has knowledge of the decree. [p. 273, col. 1.]

In the case of substituted service effected by order of the Court, the summons must be deemed to be duly served for the purpose of Art. 164 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, even though it does not in fact come to the defendant's knowledge. [ibid.]

Where the summons is not duly served on the defendant, the terminus a quo for an application to set aside an ex parte decree is the date on which the defendant has knowledge of the decree, and the burden lies upon him to show that his application is within time. [ibid.]

Petition, under s. 44 of Act IX of 1919, for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Jhang, dated the 10th February 1925, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhang, dated the 31st October 1917.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Petitioner.

Malik Ram Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 31st of October 1917 an ex parte decree was passed against the defendant, and it was not until the 25th of August 1924 (nearly seven years after the date of the ex parte decree) that the defendant made an application for an order to set aside the ex parte decree. The Subordinate Judge has granted the application without considering the question whether the application was or was not barred by time.

Now, Art. 164 of the Indian Limitation Act prescribes a period of thirty days for an application of this character, and the terminus a quo is the date of the decree, or, where the summons was not duly served, the date on which the applicant has knowledge of the decree. Now, the learned Judge, who passed the ex parte decree, had after satisfying himself that the defendant was keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service directed that substituted service should be effected as prescribed by O. V, r 20, C. P. C., and this order was duly carried out. Sub-rule (2) of that rule prescribes that service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as it had been made on the defendant personally. There can be no doubt that in the case of substituted service a summons is duly served for the purpose of Art. 164 even though it does not in fact come to the defendant's knowledge; and that time runs from the date of the decree. The application for setting aside the ex parte decree was made after the expiry of thirty days from the date of the decree, and was clearly barred by time.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the summons was not duly served on the defendant, the terminus a quo is the date on which the defendant has knowledge of the decree and it is clearly for him to show that his application was within time. Now, the plaintiff made several applications for executing his decree, and there is abundant evidence, both oral and circumstantial, to the effect that the defendant had knowledge of the decree more than thirty days before the date on which he made his application. The application is hopelessly barred by time, and the Subordinate Judge was entirely wrong in re-opening the case after the expiry of several years on the ground that "as ordinarily the suits should be decided on the merits a lenient attitude has to be taken in cases where the defendant is not personally served."

For the aforesaid reasons I accept the application for revision with costs and discharge the order of the lower Court setting aside the decree.

Motilal Pratabchand v. Surajmal Joharmal, 30 B. 167, 6 Bom L R 1038, explained.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Montgomery, dated the 9th July 1924.

Dewan Meker Chand, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The two Appeals Nos. 1955 and 1956 of 1924 can be disposed of conveniently in one judgment.

There were two suits by different plaintiffs against the same defendants Rang Ilahi and others, alleged to be the former proprietors of a defunct firm in Kasur. The plaintiffs in one case were Ruchi Ram-Khan Chand of Kamalia in the Montgomery District and in the other Hazura Mal-Lal Chand of Okara in the same District. In each case the plaintiffs said that they were employed by the late firm of the defendants as commission agents to purchase in the Montgomery District cotton, grain, etc., and to despatch it to Kasur. In one case the plaintiff alleged that a deposit of Rs. 200 had been made with them and paid at their shop at Kamalia by the defendants and in the other case a similar deposit of Rs. 2,000 was stated to have been made. Both suits were for a balance due on accounts.

One of the defendants admitted in each case the dealings alleged by the plaintiffs and did not deny the deposits but he also pleaded that the Montgomery Courts had no jurisdiction. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge proceeded to try this issue purely on the question of the place at which payment by the Kasur firm was to have been made. After discussing certain evidence he concluded that there had been a special agreement in each case that payment to the plaintiffs was to be made at Kasur in the Lahore District, the home of the defendants, and from this fact he proceeded to lay down a rule "in cases between commission agents and principals when money is specifically agreed to be paid at a place the claims are to be entertained only by those Courts having jurisdiction at that place." As authority for this proposition he has relied upon Motilal Pratabchand v. Surajmal Joharmal, (1).

Section 20, however, of the C. P. C. enacts that a suit may be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action wholly or in part arises. The expression "cause of action" is defined in Motilal Pratabchand v. Surajmal Joharmal (1) the ruling which the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has cited, as the bundle of facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in his suit. The learned Judge who decided that case after laying down this definition proceeded to explain what the bundle of facts must contain in a suit between a principal and commission agent. In that case the principal was the plaintiff and the commission agent was the defendant. It was explained that the plaintiff had to establish that he gave certain instructions to the defendant as his commission agent, that those instructions duly reached the defendant, that the defendant executed the commission with which he was charged, that the defendant was bound to render an account, etc.:

In the present case the plaintiffs had to prove inter alia that they received a commission from the defendants and that they executed it. That commission was the purchase of cotton, etc., in the Montgomery District and their alleged purchase of these goods in compliance with the defendants' orders was, therefore, part of their cause of action. What the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has really been at pains to do is to demonstrate that the suits could also be brought in a Court in the Lahore District. To establish this fact does not lead to the conclusion that the Court of no other district has jurisdiction, for it is a common phenomenon for a suit to be capable of institution in more than one district. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge's own Court has also jurisdiction since the alleged causes of action arose partly in the Montgomery District.

I accept both appeals with costs and set aside the orders returning the plaints for presentation to the proper Court. They will be received back by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and the suits be proceeded with.

Partnership, dissolution of—Accounts, mode of—Partnership moneys appropriated by one partner—Procedure.

Where a partner takes moneys of the partnership out of the partnership business and appropriates them to his own use, he must, on accounts being taken, be charged with the sums withdrawn by him out of the partnership assets in his hands with interest thereon from the dates of withdrawal. [p. 277, col. 2]

In such a case where it is found that the balance of the cash capital of the partnership is not sufficient to satisfy the claims of the remaining partners with regard to the contributions made by them towards capital, the proper procedure is to appoint a Receiver of partnership assets, to direct him to proceed with the collections of the outstanding debts of the partnership and to declare that such receipts should be employed first towards the discharge of all outside liabilities, costs and expenses and then towards the satisfaction of the respective claims on capital account of the partners. It is not proper in such a case to credit the partner who has appropriated the partnership moneys with the receipt of such moneys and to require other partners to accept book-debts due to the partnership in lieu of their claims on the capital account. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Lord Blanesburgh.—The question now before the Board arises in the course of a suit for dissolution of a partnership firm. The suit has been pending in the first Court of Gaya since the 2nd February 1915.

The firm's business was that of tobacco manufacturers, and at the commencement of the suit the partners in it were the plaintiff, Bishun Ram, entitled to a 10 anna share of profits, and the defendant, Bundi Lall, entitled to a 6 anna share. There were four branches of the business in different parts of India. The partnership was governed by a deed of the 2nd August 1905 under which the management was vested in Bishun Ram, and there was a stipulation for annual accounts. Interest on capital contributed was allowed at 9 per cent. and each partner was at liberty to add his profits to his capital if he so desired.

Out of the profits of the business certain house properties had been from time to time purchased by the firm, and it seems that these were left in the several possession of the partners according to their respective share in profits. Probably for this reason, possibly also because Bundi Lall's proportionate interest in capital was by this time much greater than his interest in profits, a serious difference arose in the course of the proceedings upon the question whether in the final division these properties were to be specifically divided between the partners in the proportion of 10 to 6, or whether, like other partnership assets, they could be made available first to satisfy the partners' claims on capital account. That question still lies at the root of the present appeal, but so far as it turns upon the construction of the partnership deed their Lordships accept the view taken of it by the High Court at Patna. They are satisfied that thereunder these houses are partnership assets burdened with the liabilities of the partnership whether to outsiders or to the partners. It is only after all such liabilities have been adjusted and in full—with recourse, if necessary, to the houses for the purpose—that they, or such of them as then remain available, will be distributable as surplus assets between the partners severally and in proportion to their shares in profits. Their Lordships, however, do not fail to recognise that it was a desire shared by both partners that these houses should be the last assets to be resorted to for discharge of partnership liabilities, and they see in a provision of the preliminary decree in the suit to which, with some observations as to its true effect, they will call attention in the sequel, some fulfilment of that desire.

The accounts between the partners were not taken annually. The last one taken and adjusted before action covered the period prior to the 20th October, 1911. From that account it appeared that there had been contributed by the plaintiff to the partnership on capital account Rs. 43,039 2 9, and by the defendant Rs. 40,789 0 1½. The position in this respect changed further in favour of the defendant before the commencement of the suit. It now appears that by that time his capital claims exceeded in amount those of the plaintiff on any view of the position.

The suit, as has been said, was commenced on the 2nd February 1915. On the 7th April 1915, Bundi Lall, the defendant, died and the suit was thereafter continued against his legal representatives, the present respondents. To them their Lordships will refer as the defendants.

In March of the following year the defendants applied for the appointment of an independent Receiver. The Court on that occasion refused to displace the plaintiff from his position of management under the partnership deed, but appointed him to be Receiver and manager pendente lite without remuneration and without security, and directed him to submit his accounts every month.

The responsibilities of his office lay lightly upon the plaintiff, and many of the subsequent difficulties in the case, including that with which their Lordships are now concerned, are attributable to two unauthorised, and so far as appears inexcusable, acts on his part committed while Receiver. Without leave of the Court or consent of parties he withdrew from the partnership funds in his hands as such Receiver, first, a sum of Rs. 22,049 4 7½, and later, one of Rs. 5,500, and although subsequently ordered on several occasions to pay over these moneys, he failed, except to the extent of Rs. 2,000, to do so, with the result that Rs. 25,549 4 7½—now an adjusted balance of Rs. 24,345—if not long ago applied to his own purposes, has remained in his hands, or since his death, which has now occurred, in the hands of his legal representatives, the present appellants.

Their Lordships desire at once to associate themselves with the observations upon these withdrawals made by the learned Judges of the Court at Patna in the judgment here under appeal. Like them, their Lordships see in the comparative inaction of the first Court of Gaya, when the plaintiff's grave misconduct was brought to its notice, a failure to appreciate the extreme seriousness of what the plaintiff had done. Their Lordships see indications of the same want of appreciation in the readiness of that Court in later orders to condone the plaintiff's unauthorised retentions by treating them, without even any charge for interest, as being in account with the defendants both regular and final. In truth, the action of the plaintiff in this matter, fully acknowledged and neither explained nor excused, amounted to a breach of duty as serious in character as any that can be committed by an officer of the Court in his position. It ought not to have been overlooked to any degree by any Court jealous of its responsibility for the actions of its own officers.

The suit came on for trial in August, 1916. Many issues were framed and fought, but no further reference thereto need now be made. In the result, on the 15th August, 1916, the then Subordinate Judge of Gaya made a preliminary decree declaring the respective interests in profits of the partners as above stated, dissolving the partnership as from the 7th April, 1915, the date of the defendant, Bundi Lall's death, appointing Balin Durga Prasad in place of the plaintiff to "be the Receiver of the partnership estate and effects in this suit and to get in all the outstanding book debts and claims of the partnership," directing the usual dissolution accounts, that of the dealings and transactions between the partners to be taken as from the 20th October, 1911, the date of the account already mentioned. The decree then proceeded as follows (this is the passage already above referred to):

"It is further ordered that the goodwill of business heretofore carried on by the parties and the stock-in-trade be sold on the premises. Saving the houses and landed property for being divided as directed above"—that is, in the proportion of 10 to 6.

And a Commissioner was appointed to take and certify the accounts.

Notwithstanding the direction given by this order to the Receiver to get in the outstanding book debts of the partnership, no steps were apparently taken by him to do so, and the Commissioner in his report, made after prolonged enquiry and dated the 9th February, 1918, found the total assets of the partnership, excluding house property, to amount to Rs. 67,641-6-1½, consisting as to more than Rs. 40,000 of book debts still outstanding. The house properties—19 in number—were severally valued by the Commissioner at sums amounting in all to Rs. 57,300, and on the footing that the other assets of the partnership as above stated would suffice to satisfy all its liabilities both to outsiders and to the partners on capital account, he proposed to partition these 19 properties between the partners or their representatives in proportion to their shares in profits, awarding to the plaintiff properties valued at Rs. 35,812-8 and to the defendants properties valued at Rs. 21,487-8.

In arriving at the figure of Rs. 67,641-6-1½ as the value of the remaining assets of the firm, the Commissioner included nothing in respect of the sums withdrawn by the plaintiff as above stated. It did not apparently occur to him to treat these sums as a partnership asset in the plaintiff's hands for which, with or without interest, he was accountable to the firm. He regarded them as proper receipts in respect of capital, merely operating a reduction pro tanto of his claim against the assets on that account.

And the Subordinate Judge of the first Court of Gaya, by his final decree of the 17th August, 1917, which it is the purpose of the present appeal to have restored, confirmed the Commissioner's report. He, too, treating the sum retained by the plaintiff as a receipt on account of capital, provided for discharge of the balance a sum which as, subsequently adjusted, was Rs. 9,713-2-0 by directing that Rs. 3,791-11-10½ was to be paid him by the Receiver out of cash in his hands and Rs. 5,921 6-1½ by the appropriation to him of book debts of that amount due to the firm. To the defendants, on the other hand, the learned Judge allocated, in respect of their ascertained capital in the business a net amount, as subsequently corrected and adjusted, of Rs. 43,903-9-1½ by directing that Rs. 9,523-2-0 was to be paid them by the Receiver in cash, while the residue of Rs. 34,380-7-1½ was to be satisfied by the appropriation to them of the remaining uncollected book debts of that nominal value.

Against the order of the Subordinate Judge the defendants appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna. Their principal grievance—that with which alone their Lordships are now concerned—was that while the plaintiff had been permitted to retain cash in respect of over Rs. 24,000 of his capital, he was now allowed in respect of the balance a further sum of over Rs. 3,700 in cash and was required to accept no more than Rs. 5,921 of his entire claim in book debts, the defendants were, in respect of as much as Rs. 43,903 of their capital, required to accept book debts, which as they asserted were “bad, mostly barred, and not at all recoverable.”

The High Court on this point agreed with the defendants. The learned Judges of that Court in their judgment of the 4th May, 1921, held that as the plaintiff had received in cash a sum which they adjusted as being Rs. 24,345, the defendants should receive a similar amount in cash before there was any further receipt by the plaintiff, and they accordingly made a decree which contained the following clause:—

“The first direction must be to pay to the defendants towards the amount due to them as capital Rs. 24,345 in cash, if there is cash in hand to that amount, and, if not, in cash and house property. The balance of his capital still due to the plaintiff and the balance then due to the defendants will be paid in house property. The plaintiff will get 10/16 and the defendant will get 6/16 of the house properties remaining after repayment of capital and of the debts due to the firm.”

The last sentence in this clause is not intelligible to their Lordships. There must, they think, be a typist's error somewhere. While, however, this seems to be so, their Lordships cannot escape the impression—and it is convenient to indicate it now—that the learned Judges of the High Court, while fully conscious that there were uncollected book debts that fact is referred to in the oral judgment of Ross, J.,—did not, apparently any more than did the Subordinate Judge, intend that these should be collected and applied so far as they would go in discharging partnership liabilities. Their intention apparently was to throw any otherwise unsatisfied portion of these, in the first instance, at all events, upon the house properties. To this point their Lordships will recur. Against that order of the High Court the legal representatives of the plaintiff—he is now dead—now appeal. They insist that the order of the Subordinate Judge of the 17th August, 1917, should be restored. They contend that there was ample jurisdiction to require the defendants to accept in satisfaction of their capital claims uncollected book-debts of any amount, and they say that even if this be not so, still by the deed of partnership, and if not then by the preliminary decree in the suit from which there has been no appeal, the house property is destined for division, as it was in the result divided by the Commissioner and Subordinate Judge irrespective of the question whether the claims of the partners in respect of capital had been so satisfied or not.

Their Lordships cannot agree. In their judgment it was entirely improper to distribute the assets in the way directed by the Subordinate Judge. The strict order, they think, would have been one charging the plaintiff with the sums withdrawn by him as being partnership assets in his hands with, they should have thought, at least mercantile interest from the dates of withdrawal. No claim has, however, been made against the plaintiff for interest, and their Lordships say no more about that. A strict order would then have directed the Receiver to proceed with the collection of the outstanding debts in obedience to the order of the 15th August, 1916, and would have declared that, subject to the discharge of all outside liabilities, costs and expenses, the sum so realized ought to be applied as far as it would extend in satisfaction of the respective claims on capital account of the plaintiff and defendants, any deficiency being made good out of the house properties as now directed by the High Court. As their Lordships have already said, they can see in the partnership deed no foundation for the appellant's present contention, while as to the direction in the preliminary decree, it amounted to no more than this: that the house properties were the last of the assets to be resorted to for the discharge of partnership liabilities to the intent that they might so far as was possible remain for appropriation between the partners in specie and as profits.

While, however, their Lordships can see no foundation for the appellant's appeal on the grounds on which it was pressed, they think, for reasons already indicated, that the clause in the order appealed from, above set forth, does not give full effect to the preliminary decree, and that clause should, in their judgment, be somewhat varied. They think the clause should read as follows (their Lordships retain the phraseology of the High Court):—

“The first direction must be to the Receiver to get in, so far as they now subsist, the outstanding book-debts as directed by the order of the 15th August, 1916, with full power to him to agree for the sale of any particular debt or debts to either of the parties for such consideration as he shall in each case consider adequate. The next direction must be to pay to the defendants towards the amount due to them as capital Rs. 24,345 in cash if the cash so collected, and in hand and available for the purpose is sufficient, and if not, then in cash and house property. The balance of his capital still due to the plaintiff and the balance then due to the defendants will be paid in cash or house property, or partly in one way and partly in the other. The plaintiff will get 10/16th and the defendants 6/16th of the house property remaining after re-payment of the capital and all other liabilities of the firm.”

Their Lordships think that, with those variations in the clause referred to, the decree of the High Court should be affirmed. The variations, in their judgment, ought not to affect the costs of this appeal. These the appellant must pay.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—Muhammad Hussain and Khadim Hussain Muttazai Pathans of Basti Mithu Sahib a suburb of Jullundur City were two brothers. Muhammad Hussain died on the 6th of May 1902, leaving a widow Musammât Murad Bibi and a daughter Musammât Fatima, defendants-appellants, as well as two other daughters. A dispute arose as to succession to his property, and Khadim Hussain set up a Will in his favour dated the 6th of May 1902. Eventually there was a civil suit in which it was held that the Will was not genuine. Subsequently Musammât Murad Bibi brought a suit and got a decree against her brother-in-law for joint possession of her husband's share in the family property, but as she could not get full enjoyment of her share she applied for partition. The Revenue Courts refused partition and Musammât Murad Bibi then, on the 15th of May 1916, instituted a civil suit for a declaration that she is entitled to partition of her share. With her was associated as plaintiff Musammât Fatima to whom she had made a gift of one-third of her share. The lower Court gave the ladies a decree and Khadim Hussain has filed an appeal in this Court, No. 433 of 1919. On the 24th of July 1917 Khadim Hussain filed a suit for a declaration to the effect that the deed of gift dated the 19th of August 1914 executed by Musammât Murad Bibi in favour of her daughter Musammât Fatima should not effect his reversionary rights after the death or marriage of the donor. The lower Court disposed of this suit and that brought by the ladies above referred to together, and gave the plaintiff a decree for the declaration sought. From this decree Musammât Murad Bibi and Musammât Fatima have brought the present appeal. The Court in disposing of both the suits directed that the parties should bear their own costs. In Khadim Hussain's suit Musammât Murad Bibi and Musammât Fatima have filed an appeal (No. 385 of 1919) as regards their costs. We proceed in this judgment to dispose of the ladies' appeal against the lower Court's declaratory decree in favour of Khadim Hussain to the effect that the gift of Musammât Murad Bibi should not affect his reversionary rights.

In the suit brought by Khadim Hussain he alleged as regards part of the property that it did not belong to the widow at all. This, however, was decided against him and the point has not been raised in appeal before us. The issues in the suit brought by Musammât Murad Bibi and Musammât Fatima were framed on the 18th of August 1916, and will be found on page 26 of Paper Book A. The second issue was whether the gift made by plaintiff No. 1 to plaintiff No. 2 is valid, the onus being laid upon the plaintiffs. In the case brought by Khadim Hussain issues were struck on the 21st August 1917, see page 12 of Paper Book D and the fifth and sixth issues were as follows:—

5. "Has the plaintiff locus standi to contest the gift? onus on the plaintiff," and,

6. "If so, is the gift lawful? onus on the defendants.

Subsequently on the 5th of October 1917 these issues were altered and then read as follows:—

5 "Has not the plaintiff locus standi to contest the gift? onus on the defendants" and,

6. "Is the gift lawful? onus on the defendants."

Evidence in both cases was heard together and Musammât Murad Bibi and Musammât Fatima produced their evidence first. At the time when the issues in Khadim Hussain's case were amended on the 5th of October 1917, only one witness on the other side had been examined. From that time on the onus of proving the validity of the gift was placed upon Musammât Murad Bibi and Musammât Fatima. Mr. Badri Das urges that the onus of proving that the gift was invalid should have been on Khadim Hussain. In support of this contention he urges that the parties are Muttazai Pathans and live in a suburb of Jullundur City, and that they migrated to this part of the country from the Peshawar District six generations ago, and that prima facie there is no presumption that they are governed by agricultural custom. He also states that they do not themselves cultivate land and that they are called Pirzadas. Now, in the lower Court it was never contended that the parties did not themselves cultivate their lands, or that they followed any other pursuit than that of agriculture. Nor was any stress laid on the fact that they had migrated from the Peshawar District; nor was it ever alleged that they were . . . by Muhammadan Law. Bakhshi . . . who appeared for Khadim Hussain, referred us to the written pleas of the ladies at pages 7-9 of Paper Book D, where in para 3, it is stated that according to the custom of the parties' tribe, the plaintiff has no right to succeed to the property of Musammât Murad Bibi whose reversionary heirs are her daughters. Again in para. 5 it is stated that according to the custom of the parties' tribe defendant No. 1, Musammât Murad Bibi, is full owner and is competent to alienate her property, and that even if no gift were made, still defendant No 2, Musammât Fatima, and her sister would succeed to any property that would be left by defendant No. 1. Further, it is to be noted that Musammât Murad Bibi is in possession of her husband's share of the family property in accordance with general custom. If Muhammadan Law had applied she would have inherited  $\frac{1}{4}$ th share only, while her daughters would have taken  $\frac{3}{4}$ ths.

The parties are residents of Basti Mithu Sahib, a suburb of Jullundur town, and the judgment of the Division Bench of the Chief Court dated the 27th of November 1905 in Civil Appeal No. 1404 of 1899 is very important in this connection. It is printed at pages 387-395 of Paper Book B. The dispute was between members of the same family who are parties in the present case, Khadim Hussain being himself one of the plaintiffs. At page 389 in the judgment it is stated:—"In spite of their foreign origin and first settlement in the Bastis as horse-dealers there is nothing at present to distinguish these Pathan agriculturalists from the surrounding agricultural tribes. They have lived by agriculture in groups for many generations and I, therefore, would agree with the Divisional Judge that Ghulam Hussain deceased was an agriculturist, and further that he had not an unrestricted power of alienation. The onus, therefore, lay on the defendants to show that Ghulam Hussain was competent by custom to make the gift in dispute." Again, in Johnstone J.'s judgment at page 395*, the following passage occurs:—"I agree that these Pathans, though they may have come to Jul-lundur as horse dealers, yet inasmuch as they have settled down as a compact village community and have apparently for six or seven generations lived by agriculture can fairly be styled agriculturists. I also agree that in view of what has become their hereditary occupation, viz., agriculture, and also in view of the fact that the village is situated in the midst of the population following the rules in regard to succession to ancestral estate and alienation thereof, which are known as Punjab agricultural custom, it can reasonably be presumed that the powers of alienation of ancestral landed estate possessed by a sonless proprietor in this village are restricted." It is true that in that decision the Judges left out of consideration cases of gifts to daughters on the ground that such gifts were specially favoured amongst endogamous Muhammadan tribes, but the decision is important as showing that the Judges considered that the members of this tribe were agriculturists and generally followed the customs of agriculturists.

In this connection also the judgments of the Division Bench of the Chief Court in the case of Ata Muhammad Khan v. Jiwani (1) may be referred to. In that case the parties were Barki Sayyads of Basti Pir Dad Khan, a neighbouring Basti to that to which the parties to the present suit belong, and it was held that according to the rule of the customary law generally applicable to agricultural tribes in the Punjab, the presumption was in favour of the exclusion of a daughter by a near collateral in the matter of succession to ancestral property and the onus is on the daughter to prove an exception to this rule. Having regard to these decisions, and to all the facts above stated, we are clearly of opinion that the onus was rightly laid upon Musammât Murad Bibi and her daughter to prove that the gift by the former to the latter was valid.

The third ground of the appeal is that the lower Court should have framed an issue as to how much of the property was ancestral and how much self-acquired. The contention of Mr. Badri Das is that even if the onus is on the ladies to prove that the gift was valid qua ancestral property, the onus would have been on Khadim Hussain to prove that the gift is invalid qua self-acquired property. In the plaint Khadim Hussain stated that the property in dispute was ancestral. In their pleas the defendants stated that a part of it was self-acquired, but they did not state how much of it was self-acquired. In his replication Khadim Hussain stated that the small portion of the property which was self-acquired had been acquired with the aid of income from the ancestral property. No issue was framed as to how much of the property was self-acquired, but the defendants got the special kanungo to produce an extract from the revenue papers, which is printed at page 109 of the Paper Book B. This extract is not admissible in evidence and in any case it shows that only 134 kanals and 2 marlas of the family property was acquired by the brothers. Of this half, 67 kanals and 1 marla is Musammât Murad Bibi's share out of which she has gifted only one third, or 22 kanals 7 marlas to her daughter. It is, however, in our opinion, unnecessary that any further enquiry should be made as to how much of the property is self-acquired. Though the ladies pleaded that part of the property was self-acquired they did not go on to say that there was any difference in the custom as to succession to ancestral and self-acquired property. There was no allegation that the gift would in any case be valid qua the self-acquired property. The witnesses, who gave oral evidence as to the custom, made no difference as to the different kinds of property, and there is no such distinction made in the Riwaj-i-am of 1885 or in that of 1913. We, therefore, are of opinion that the ladies never meant to plead that there was any difference in the custom dependent upon the question whether the property was ancestral or self-acquired. They meant to state that the custom was the same in each case.

A good deal of oral evidence was produced by the defendants, but very little stress has been laid upon it in this Court. The oral instances given by the witnesses are not well ascertained and we proceed to discuss the documentary evidence on the record about which lengthy arguments have been addressed to us.

Pages 2 to 103 of Paper Book B contain extracts from revenue papers the object of which is to show that daughters have in several cases succeeded to property, and on pages 104-107 a list of seventeen instances is given in which daughters succeeded either in virtue of gifts, or by inheritance. These were prepared by the special kanungo who did not produce the original documents in Court. They are not attested copies of any entries in the Revenue Records and are, therefore, not admissible in evidence. They have not been considered, and, in our opinion, rightly so, by the lower Court.

Mr. Badri Das has referred us to the two pedigree tables printed at pages 453-81 of Paper Book B in which the names of daughters appear in various places, and has argued from this fact that daughters have succeeded to their fathers in the presence of collaterals. No doubt daughters' names do appear, but apart from the fact that in many cases these daughters or their issues are shown as out of possession (bedakhal) it cannot be said to be clear from the mere presence of the names in the pedigree tables that they inherited their fathers' estate. They may have got it by gift, as gifts are specially favoured in this tribe, or the land may have passed from the father to his daughter's son either by inheritance or by gift. We do not think that the mere presence of the daughters' names in these tables is a sufficient ground for holding that they inherited their fathers' lands. In the second pedigree table the name of Sharaf Din appears who had two wives, Musammât Aishan and Musammât Fatima, and it appears that his property went to his two daughters Mir Begam and Sahib Zadi. He also had a brother Shams-ud-Din. The tamilknama at page 559 of Paper Book B shows that the property was gifted to these daughters by Shams-ud-Din who purported to be entitled to the property on account of dower due from her husband. If she received this land as dower it became her absolute property and she was entitled to dispose of it as she pleased. It appears, however, that the collaterals never disputed the daughters' rights to this property, but what they did dispute was the right of Musammât Fatima to make a gift of her brother-in-law Shams-ud-Din's property, to her daughters. The final order upon the claim brought by the collaterals was that the share of Shams-ud-Din was allotted to them, see the final order printed at pages 563-564 of the Paper Book B, which is in accordance with the award of arbitrator. This instance, therefore, does not help the defendants.

An attempt was made to show that in the neighbouring bastis there was a custom under which daughters inherited in the presence of near collaterals. We proceed to consider the cases from these bastis in order.

Basti Ghuzan. Exhibit P 273 shows that one Haidar Ali made a gift to his brother and sisters. Subsequently Musammât Hur brought a suit for possession of her father's share and her right was admitted by all the defendants except one, and the Court gave her a decree, but the judgment does not show that any enquiry was made into custom.

Exhibit P 274 mentioned in the lower Court's judgment at page 132 of Paper Book A is not now relied upon.

Exhibit P. 275 will be found at page 41 of Paper Book C. That was a case where a widow had made a gift in favour of her daughter, and on a collateral suing it was held that the widow had full ownership free from all restrictions which fetter property held on a life tenure and that the widow had the power to will it away to her daughters. This instance does not help the defendants because as the widow was found to be full owner she could obviously dispose of the property in any way she pleased.

These are the only instances cited by the defendants from Basti Ghuzan and we have no hesitation in agreeing with the lower Court that no well defined custom favouring daughters' succession in this basti has been established. Basti Pir Dad Exhibits 278 and 279 do not appear to be in point.

Exhibit P 280, printed at page 580 of Paper Book B. This case was decided in accordance with a special entry in the wajib-ul-arz of the village which allowed the gift. The case went in appeal and it appears that the appeal was referred to arbitrators, see Ex P 282 at page 44 of Paper Book C, in which it is stated that the arbitrators, had decided in favour of the right to part with her land being allowed to the widow and this decision of theirs was said to be not inconsistent with the wajib-ul-arz.

Exhibit P 283, printed at page 584 et seq (Paper Book B) is no doubt a case in point but the parties are clearly shown to be Barki Sayyads. It cannot be said that the parties to the present case who are Muttazai Pathans follow the same custom as Sayyads. The case of Ata Muhammad Khan v. Jiwani (1) was also from this basti, and the parties were stated to be Barki Sayyads, and it was held that a daughter was entitled to succeed to her father's ancestral property to the exclusion of her father's nephews. The owners of this basti as the lower Court notes, sometimes call themselves Pathans or Afghans, and at other time Barki Sayyads. We agree with the view of the Court that the custom of these people cannot be considered as the same as those of Muttazai Pathans of Basti Mithu Sahib.

Basti Baba Khel:—The inhabitants of this basti are Barkis who came originally from Arabia and it does not follow that the parties to the present suit follow every custom which prevails amongst them. The instances produced are Ex. P 288 and 289 at page 277 of Paper Book B. These are mutations of gifts and no facts are given. Exhibits P 292—294 pages 281—284 of Paper Book B, relate to a decision in favour of daughters based upon a compromise in which there was no enquiry as to custom. Exhibits P 290 contains a statement, at page 278 of Paper Book B, by a number of persons in answer to a question whether according to the present custom a gift of land made by a woman in favour of her daughter was lawful. This is the answer of a number of people and is not admissible in evidence under s 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is quite clear that no custom has been proved to exist in Basti Baba Khel in favour of daughters.

There are two other bastis, Basti Danishmandan and Basti Sheikh Darwesh, but the inhabitants in these are Ansaris whose customs are admittedly different from those of the inhabitants of Basti Mithu Sahib. Counsel for both parties admit this and it is not necessary for us, therefore, to discuss the instances from them.

An entry in the Riwaj-i-am of 1885 will be found at page 553 of Paper Book B. It shows that generally speaking a daughter does not inherit in the presence of a son, a widow or a near collateral. In the last column exceptions in favour of certain Musalman tribes are made. Thus, in the case of Lodhi Afghans, Sayyads and Barkis if there be no sons, a daughter inherits even in the absence of a writing of her father. This entry was specifically relied upon by the Chief Court in Ata Muhammad Khan v. Jiwani (1) in which the parties were Barki Sayyads. An exception was, therefore, made in the Riwaj-i-am of 1885 in favour of Lodhi Afghans, Sayyads and Barkis, but no such exception was made in favour of Muttazai Pathans, and we, therefore, consider that the absence of any mention of the parties tribe is a strong point in favour of the view that in this tribe daughters do not inherit in the presence of near collaterals. In the later riwaj-i-am also no exception was made in favour of this tribe.

In fact the exception entered in favour of Lodhi Afghans, Sayyads and Barkis in the earlier riwaj-i-am has been omitted.

Bakkshi Tek Chand referred us to the cases reported as Nizam Din v. Fauja (2) and Mandas v. Shah Wasim (3) the parties to which were Pathans of the Peshwar District, as showing that some Pathans of that district were governed by custom in matters of inheritance and not by Muhammadan Law. His argument is that merely because Muttazai Pathans originally came from Peshawar, it does not follow that they are governed by strict Muhammadan Law.

In our opinion Musammam Murad Bibi and Musammam Fatima have failed to prove that by custom daughters inherit in the presence of brothers or near collaterals of the last male owner, or that the gift by the former in favour of the latter is valid. We therefore, dismiss the appeal, but as we are also dismissing the appeal filed by Khadim Hussain in the other case, we direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This is an appeal from an order of remand passed by the District Judge in an appeal from a Revenue Court. A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies. This objection is well-founded. Under s. 175 of the Agra Tenancy Act, no appeal from any decree or order passed by any Court under that Act lies except as therein provided. Under s. 177 an appeal is provided from a decree of a District Judge passed on appeal but no appeal is provided from an order passed by a District Judge. It is, therefore, apparent that no appeal from his order of remand, which, of course, is not a decree lies to this Court. This view is concluded by the decision of the Full Bench case of Zohra v. Mangu Lal (1) which has been followed recently in the case of Gulzari Lal v. Latif Husain (2).

The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, contends that an appeal lies under para. 11 of the Letters Patent of this Court. In our opinion no such appeal lies under that paragraph at all. Under that paragraph, this High Court is constituted a Court of Appeal from the Civil Courts and has power to exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as are subject to appeal to the said High Court by virtue of any laws or regulations now in force. The constitution of this High Court as a Court of appeal is quite a different thing from saying that this Court has jurisdiction to hear appeals from every decree or order passed by a subordinate Court. If, therefore, there is no law or regulation which allows an appeal to it the High Court cannot assume an appellate jurisdiction. The power of revision and superintendence, however, is much wider.

The learned Vakil for the appellant next urged that his appeal should be treated as a revision and that inasmuch as the learned District Judge has assumed jurisdiction which was not vested in him, this Court should interfere in revision. This argument is based on the assumption that no appeal lay to the District Judge because no question of proprietary title had been raised in the first Court and no question of jurisdiction had been decided by it. The reply of the learned Advocate for the respondent is that the High Court has no power of revision in a revenue matter at all. The question whether the High Court has power to interfere in revision has been considered in a number of cases which are by no means unanimous and so far there is no Full Bench decision on this matter. The position is as follows:—

In at least three cases Ahmad Ullah Khan v. Murli (3), Kesho Das v. Morat Pandey (4) and Lalta Prasad v. Kharga (5), an application for revision was entertained. Then again in the case of Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6), at least one Judge expressed the view that a revision may lie from an order passed by a Judge on appeal. On the other hand, the other learned Judge in the case last mentioned, as well as other learned Judges in the case reported as Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7) and Gaj Kumar Chander v. Salamat Ali (8) have expressly laid down that the High Court has no revisional jurisdiction in cases under the Tenancy Act.

If there were no direct authority in point, I would have no hesitation in saying that there is no provision in the Tenancy Act which bars the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. In the first place, under s. 193 of the Act, the provisions of the C. P. C., with the exception of certain provisions mentioned therein, are made applicable so far as they are not inconsistent with the Act. Section 115 of the C. P. C. corresponding to the old s. 622 is not excluded. Prima facie, therefore, the revisional section of the C. P. C. is made applicable to suits and proceedings under the Tenancy Act unless there are other provisions of the Act which are repugnant to its application. In cases where it has been held that the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere, reliance has been placed solely on the provisions of s. 167 of the Act. Now s. 167 bars suits and applications of the nature specified in the Fourth Schedule and it also prevents every Court other than a Revenue Court from taking cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit or application might be brought or made. It seems to us that the present application for revision would not be incompetent unless it be shown that a suit or application of the nature of this application could be brought or made in the Revenue Court as specified in the Fourth Schedule. Reference has been made to serial No. 51 in the Fourth Schedule where an application for revision under s. 185 of the Act can be filed without any fixed period of limitation. But s. 185 is expressly confined to revisions to the Board of Revenue from subordinate Revenue Courts. It does not refer to revisions from the Court of the District Judge. It is, therefore, impossible to suggest that any application of this nature could have been brought or made in the Revenue Court. It would then follow that s. 167 cannot be a bar to this application. If the argument be accepted that the High Court has no revisional jurisdiction to interfere at all, then it was wholly futile to make s. 115 of the C. P. C. applicable to the Act for no case would then be conceivable where a revision would lie and s. 167 would not be a bar. If the view urged on behalf of the appellant were not the correct view, then the result would be that an order passed by a District Judge without jurisdiction, and howsoever illegal it might be, would remain final and be not open to revision either by the Board of Revenue or by the High Court. We do not, however, consider it necessary to refer this case to a larger Bench because it is possible to dispose of the case on different grounds. In the written statement the defendant had taken several pleas including a denial of the relation of landlord and tenant and also a plea of want of jurisdiction of the Civil Court. The Assistant Collector only framed one issue as to whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties or not, and decided it by a summary judgment. The learned District Judge was of opinion that the suit had not been decided in a satisfactory manner inasmuch as the first Court did not even take the trouble to go into the question whether the tenant had really relinquished the holding or whether the alleged relinquishment was valid. He did not even come to a definite finding whether a surrender had been made, for before the mortgagee could be ejected, it was necessary to find that a surrender had actually taken place. In view of these defects the learned District Judge has set aside the decree and remanded the case for re-trial after taking such additional evidence as may be tendered by the parties. After all, the case will be re-tried after both parties have had full opportunity of producing their evidence. No real injustice has been done to the parties. It is not a fit case, even assuming that we have power to interfere in revision, in which we ought to interfere. I would dismiss the appeal.

Boys, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother Mr. Justice Sulaiman. The appeal is from an order of remand passed by a District Judge under s. 177 of the Tenancy Act on appeal from a decree of an Assistant Collector of the First Class.

It has hardly been contended that an appeal lies but we are asked to treat the matter as an application under s. 115 on the revisional side. It is contended for the opposite party that no revision lies and the contention is certainly supported by judicial authority.

The relevant sections of the Tenancy Act are ss. 167, 177, 185, 193 and 196.

We had to consider the following cases:—

Damber Singh v. Sri Kishun Das (9), Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6), Jumna Prasad v. Karan Singh (10), Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7) and Gaj Kumar Chunder v. Salamat Ali (8).

We are also referred to Ahmad Ullah Khan v. Murli (3), Kesho Das v. Murat

(9) 2 Ind Cas 377; 6 A. L. J. 552; 31 A. 445.

(10) 46 Ind. Cas. 338; 16 A. L. J. 859; 41 A. 28.

Pandey (4) and Lalta Prasad v. Kharga (5), but though a revision was in fact entertained, the point whether a revision is competent was not raised in those cases.

In Chutten Lal v. Kanhaya Lal (11) the point was raised but not decided. I shall not, therefore, further refer to these last four cases.

Of the first five cases that I have mentioned it will be convenient to give a brief account in order to Judge exactly how far they are apposite to the facts of the present case and in order that it may be possible to form a correct estimate as to the steps by which the proposition may be said to have become nearly established that a revision does not lie.

In Damber Singh v. Sri Kishun Das (9) Richards and Alston, JJ., had before them an application in revision of an order of an Assistant Collector refusing execution. The suit had been filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the First Class and dismissed. The District Judge held that it should not have been tried in a Revenue Court, but under the provisions of ss. 177, 196, 197 of the Tenancy Act entertained the appeal and decreed the suit. The decree-holder applied to the Assistant Collector in execution. The Assistant Collector refused the application, and the decree-holder applied to the High Court in revision. It was held that a revision was barred by s. 167 of the Tenancy Act; and reliance was placed on the words "except in the way of appeal." In support of his right to apply in revision the applicant urged that the decree to be executed was in fact the decree of the District Judge. Richards, J., remarked "possibly his remedy was to apply to the District Judge for execution of the decree." This suggests at least the possibility that an application in revision might have been considered competent if it had been framed as a revision from the order of a District Judge. The actual case dealt with the revision by the High Court of an order of an Assistant Collector, i. e., an order of a Revenue Court and can have no direct bearing on the case before us. The more general effect of some of the remarks I will consider later.

In Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6) Figgitt and Walsh, JJ., had before them a revision of an order of a District Judge under s. 10 of the Tenancy Act. The suit on second appeal was dismissed. Figgitt, J., after holding that in any event the application did not come within the narrow compass of the provisions of s. 115 of the C. P. C., further held that the revision was wholly excluded by the last clause of s. 167 of the Tenancy Act; that to entertain a revision would amount to "taking cognizance" of the dispute or matter in respect of which the suit was brought, and that the fact that s. 115 of the C. P. C. is one of the sections made applicable by s. 193 of the Tenancy Act to proceedings under the Tenancy Act did not affect the matter as s. 193 was expressly subject to and could not override s. 167. Walsh, J. differed, holding that "the decision of a District Judge given by way of an appeal from a Revenue Court is a decision of the Civil Court and is, therefore, subject to revision", and further that the hearing of the revision would not amount to "taking cognizance" of the dispute or matter in respect of which the suit was brought.

In Jamna Prasad v. Karan Singh (10) Abdul Raoof, J., had before him a case in which an appeal had been filed under s. 177 before a District Judge from the decree of an Assistant Collector. The District Judge held that no appeal lay to his Court from the decree of the Assistant Collector and returned the memorandum of appeal. Abdul Raoof, J., refused to distinguish the case of Damber Singh v. Sri Kishun Das (9) and following the construction of s. 167 in that case held that no revision was competent. I find myself unable to appreciate why the learned Judge found himself unable to distinguish the case of Damber Singh v. Sri Kishun Das (9), which, as I have quoted above, was a case where the Court was asked to revise, not the order of a District Judge, a Civil Court, but of an Assistant Collector, a Revenue Court.

In Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7). Tudball J., had before him a revision of an order of an Assistant Collector of the First Class. The matter had not gone before a District Judge. Tudball, J., relied on Damber Singh v. Sri Kishun Das (9) referred to Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6) and pointed out that Walsh, J., would apparently in the case of a revision of an order of an Assistant Collector have agreed that no revision was competent. Tudball, J., further relied on the words "of the nature" in s. 167 and held that the nature of all revisions whether civil, criminal or revenue was alike. The learned Judge further remarked, and it is important to note this, that in the matter before him the case had not gone into the Civil Court at all because there had been no appeal whatever preferred to the District Judge, and there was, therefore, no order before him which could in any sense be deemed to be an order of a Civil Court. This again as in the case Damber Singh v. Sri Kishan Das (9) suggests at least the possibility that the learned Judge would have decided otherwise if he had had before him the order of a District Judge. He held that there could be no revision of the order of the Assistant Collector. Here again the High Court was asked to revise the order of an Assistant Collector, a Revenue Court, and the decision can have no direct bearing on the case before us. The more general effect of some of the remarks I will consider later.

In Gaj Kumar Chander v. Salamat Ali (8) Stuart and Wallach, JJ., had before them a revision of an appellate order of a District Judge under s. 180. After remarking that only Revenue Courts can deal with original matters while appellate powers are sometimes vested in the Revenue and sometimes in Civil Courts, the learned Judges held that by virtue of ss. 167 and 193 "the only power that the High Court has to dispose of matters covered by Local Act II of 1901 is given by the Act itself; and the power of revision is not a power which is so given to it". They held that the fact that there is no inclusion of s. 622 (now s. 115) in s. 193 of the Tenancy Act did not affect the question, for the provisions of the C. P. C. apply to the procedure in suits and other proceedings under the Rent Act so far as they are not so inconsistent therewith. They held, therefore, that no revision lies.

It will be seen that the question whether an application in revision lies against an order of a District Judge under s. 177 (the case before us) was only directly dealt with in Jamna Prasad v. Karan Singh (10) but the decisions in Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6) and Gaj Kumar Chander v. Salamat Ali (8) which were cases where a District Judge acted under s. 180 are also analogous. Section 177 is expressly referred in the exception in s. 185 while s. 180 is not, but, whatever may be the reason for the omission, it does not seem to affect the present question, so I will regard the two later cases as also bearing on the case before us where the appeal was allowed by s. 177.

In the main reliance was placed in these cases on a particular interpretation put on s. 167; while any effect was denied to s. 193 on the ground that any other interpretation would be in conflict with the interpretation already put on s. 167.

I will first deal with these considerations.

In dealing with s. 167 the words "of the nature" were relied on by Tudball, J., in Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7) as showing that not only revisions by the Board under s. 185 (Serial No. 51 of the Fourth Schedule) were excluded from the jurisdiction of Revenue Courts, but all revisions whether by Civil, Revenue or Criminal Courts. It may be that the words "of the nature" were used because there are some applications in the Fourth Schedule not further specified by sections (Serial Nos. 47, 48 and 49) or, by way of precaution because there might be found to be an analogy with inclusion of which in the sole jurisdiction of Revenue Courts was desirable. But whatever be the reason for the words, I cannot believe that the Legislature would have adopted such a vague method of including in the prohibition enacted by s. 167 such a clearly defined class of proceedings such as revisions. Nor was it necessary to hold this to support the particular decision. The fact that a power of revision was conferred on the Board by s. 185 of the Tenancy Act was sufficient to exclude any power of the High Court under s. 115 of the C. P. C. which otherwise might be held to exist in virtue of s. 193 of the Tenancy Act.

Next, the words "except in the way of appeal" were relied on in Damber Singh v. Sri Kishan Das (9) as showing that no revision lies. I will later state my view as to the real scope and intent of s. 167 and of these words in particular as meant merely to make s. 167 consistent with s. 196; but, even if that view be wrong, the words in question could at most be intended to make s. 167 consistent with ss. 177, 180 and 196; such a form of words could not rightly be used or be interpreted to enact affirmatively anything in regard to revisional jurisdiction nor was it necessary to attribute this effect to the words in order to support the particular decision. It could be supported for the same reason that I have already noted that the decision in Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7) could be supported.

Further the words "take cognizance" were relied on in Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6) by Piggott, J., as excluding revision. Walsh, J., held the contrary. I shall state later, when giving my own view, the real scope, in my opinion, of these words.

In more than one case, the force of the argument, that while certain sections of the C. P. C. are by s. 193 excluded, s. 115 (the old s. 622) is not excluded, was repelled by holding that it was excluded as being inconsistent with s. 167 of the Tenancy Act. The contention is of course sound, if in fact s. 167 does really exclude revision under s. 115 of the C. P. C.; but that only brings us back to the main question.

I have now considered earlier judicial authority and can find therein nothing that satisfies me that s. 167 is any bar to this Court exercising revisional jurisdiction in respect of an order passed under s. 177 of a District Judge who is undoubtedly a Civil Court. I would add that I am confirmed in my view by the absence of any reason for excluding the revisional jurisdiction of this Court in regard to a subordinate Civil Court, a District Judge, while allowing it to the Board, with one exception the reason for which is obvious, in regard to subordinate Revenue Courts.

I am further confirmed in my view by the fact that when the Legislature considered in s. 193 with such meticulous care what provisions of the C. P. C. were to be excluded from importation by virtue of s. 193 or were to be modified in their application, it would have left the exclusion of such an important provision as s. 115 a matter of doubtful inference.

Further I note that apparently in both the decisions, Damber Singh v. Sri Kishan Das (9) and Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7) there are remarks, to which I have referred above when summarising those cases, which strongly suggest the possibility at least that they would have been decided differently if the revision had been against the order of a District Judge.

I have discussed what, in my opinion, s. 167 does not enact, namely, that it does not affirmatively, even indirectly, prohibit revision of an order of a District Judge. I will now state my view of what s. 167 does enact, the really limited scope and intent of the section.

It appears to me that the intention as expressed in s. 167 is that the section is only concerned with the hearing of original suits and applications. This view of the section was not raised before us, but it appears at the least certainly not untenable and to be in accord with the scheme of the Act.

Before considering in detail the contents of the section, I would observe that there is nothing improbable in such a section being confined to original suits and other original proceedings. There is not the least need for any such section to contain any prohibition against appeals or revisions from orders of Revenue Courts being heard by other than Revenue Courts (except as provided). It is wholly unnecessary to forbid a Civil Court to hear a matter in appeal from a Revenue Court for the jurisdiction of Civil Courts ordinarily to hear such appeals is already confined by the law to Revenue Courts to appeals from Revenue Courts, and they could not under any circumstances touch an appeal from a Revenue Court, except where such power was expressly given. Such power is, of course, given by ss. 177, 180 and 196. But except where such power is expressly given it would be entirely impossible to suggest that a Civil Court could have any appellate power at all, and, therefore, any prohibition would be entirely superfluous. Mutatis mutandis exactly the same reasoning applies to revisions. No Civil Court could possibly entertain a revision of an order of a Revenue Court under the ordinary power and laws constituting the Civil Courts. Therefore, there is no need to prohibit the exercise of such a revisional power. When we come, however, to original suits and proceedings the situation is wholly different and a prohibiting section is essential. But for such a section Civil Courts would have co-ordinate jurisdiction with Revenue Courts in very many matters. It is, therefore, necessary to prohibit the exercise of such jurisdiction by the Civil Courts, where it is desired to confine it to Revenue Courts. If I have made my meaning clear we should then expect to find in the Act a section forbidding the exercise by Civil Courts of original jurisdiction in revenue matters and we should not expect to find such a section forbidding them to exercise appellate or revisional powers as such prohibitions would be superfluous.

I have thought it convenient to consider first what might be expected before considering what we actually find, thus inverting the usual course; while, of course, recognising that operative words must be interpreted in accordance with what has been actually said and that what might be expected can only be allowed weight in support or where ambiguity, if any, exists.

I will now consider the indications to be found in the actual words of the section. The section may be divided into its two clauses. In the first clause the first phrase which suggests itself for consideration is "all suits and applications." This phrasing is certainly more appropriate to original proceedings. If it had been intended to apply to appeals and revisions, nothing would have been easier than to say so in plain language. In fact, no reference is made in this clause in any way whatever to appeals and revisions. I will refer later to the reference to appeals in the second clause and will endeavour to show that that reference is entirely consistent with the view which I am now discussing.

In the second clause we next find the words "shall take cognizance". In Parbhu Narain Singh v. Harbans Lal (6) Piggott, J., held that it would be "taking cognizance" of the dispute or matter in which the suit was brought for a higher Court to deal in revision with the order of a Civil Court (District Judge) on appeal from an order of a Revenue Court. Walsh, J., differed and held that the term was not appropriate to the hearing of the revision from an appellate order. I have no hesitation in expressing my agreement with Walsh, J., for it appears to me difficult to hold that the words "take cognizance" are not very much more appropriate to original proceedings and are not almost invariably applied to original proceedings. I am not prepared to go so far as to say that those words have never been applied by the Legislature to appellate or revisional proceedings. I am certainly not aware of any such case, though it would not be difficult to quote very many instances of their application to original proceedings.

The next phrase calling for comment in the second clause of s. 167 is "except in the way of appeal as hereinafter provided". It is these words which, I think, have in some way or other not very clear to me appeared to at least one Judge to lend support to the view that s. 167 excluded revisional jurisdiction. So far as I am aware the words were first referred to in Damber Singh v. Sri Kishan Das (9) where reliance was placed on them in a case where there was no question of the revision of an order of a District Judge but revision only of an order of an Assistant Collector refusing an application for execution.

In Mohammad Ehtisham Ali v. Lalji Singh (7) the report of the judgment of Tudball, J., shows that when quoting the earlier case, Damber Singh v. Sri Kishan Das (9) the words "except by way of appeal" have been put in italics suggesting that the learned Judge was to some extent influenced by them. That again was a case only of revision of an order of an Assistant Collector. I have suggested above when outlining those two cases that in neither of them was the suggested effect of the words necessary to support the decision. I am unable to appreciate that the words "except by way of appeal" justify any such inference at all. In the view that I take that s. 167 only applies to original proceedings, the words are not superfluous or without meaning; but, on the contrary, they are found to be essential and of import to effect consistency between s. 167 and s. 196. But for those words it is clear that s. 167 would be making illegal entirely the hearing of certain original proceedings in any Civil Court whilst s. 196 would be declaring that the hearing of such original proceedings in a Civil Court was not in every case to be regarded as invalid. The words, then, "except in the way of appeal as hereinafter provided" are necessary and have a definite appropriate intention and effect if the view which I suggest be correct that s. 167 only applies to original proceedings.

I am, therefore, of opinion with the greatest respect for other decision to the contrary, that decisions which proceeded on the assumption that s. 167 has anything to do with appellate or revisional proceedings (except to the limited extent that I have specified) cannot be supported. I, therefore, hold, firstly, that there is nothing in s. 167 precluding the hearing by the High Court under s. 115 of the C. P. C. of a revision of an order passed by a District Judge under s. 177 of the Tenancy Act; and, further that it is reasonable that the High Court should have such power, and that to hold that it has such power is in accord with s. 193 of the Tenancy Act; and secondly that s. 167 is only concerned with original proceedings.

For both these reasons I would hold that this Court has power to entertain a revision of an order made by a District Judge under s. 177 of the Tenancy Act.

As some of these considerations were urged before us on one side or the other, I have thought it desirable to put them on record and to express my opinion thereon; and, in fact, we cannot really reject the revision on its merits without by implication approving the view that a revision lies.

I agree, however, that it is not a case in which we should refer the matter to a Full Bench as in the course of the hearing we have been satisfied that the application has no merits. I agree, therefore, in the order proposed by my brother.

A previous refusal by the pre-emptor to buy the property on the ground of his inability to buy operates as a waiver of his right to pre-empt.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 3rd January 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhelum, dated the 30th November 1922.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case asked for two reliefs, first, for a declaration that the sale impeached should not affect his reversionary rights, and secondly in the alternative for possession of the land as a pre-emptor. The first Court found that the sale was without necessity and, therefore, gave the plaintiff a declaration. The learned District Judge in appeal held that the sale was for necessity and dismissed the suit evidently overlooking the alternative claim to pre-empt.

Sometime before effecting the sale now impeached the vendor, a widow, applied to the Collector for permission to sell her land to one Fateh Muhammad a non-agriculturist for Rs. 600 and in those proceedings the plaintiff on the 18th August 1921 made a statement to the effect that he could not afford to buy the land and that so far as he was concerned the vendor was at liberty to sell it to Fateh Muhammad for Rs. 600 or to anybody who would give her the cost price for it. The Collector refused to sanction the sale of the land to Fateh Muhammad on the ground that it was worth more than Rs. 600.

The first Court held that this statement of the plaintiff did not amount to waiver but merely to a refusal to purchase the land for Rs. 600 and the learned District Judge merely says "I am not prepared to dispute that finding."

A second appeal has been preferred to this Court and I am asked to remand the case so that the plaintiff's right to pre-empt may be determined but I see no need for adopting that course as I hold it is clearly proved that the plaintiff in 1921 waived his right to purchase the land on the ground that he had no money at all and could not afford to purchase it. The land was subsequently sold to the present vendee for Rs. 500 and I do not think that the plaintiff should now be allowed to intervene after his clear disclaimer of any intention to purchase the land at any price.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Viscount Haldane.—The questions which arise for decision on this appeal relate to the construction and validity of the provisions of a Will, dated 27th April, 1897, and made by a Hindu, C. Ratna Mudaliar, who died in 1904. He left a widow and three daughters. One of these daughters, Yaodammal, died in 1907; another, Rajammal, in 1908; and the third Nilayathatchi Ammal, in 1918. Yasodammal had four children, three of them, two sons and a daughter, born before the death of the testator in 1904, and one of them, born afterwards in 1907. Rajammal, the second daughter, had a son T. who was born in 1907. This child was constituted a Ward of Court in 1910. Nilayathatchi Ammal, the third daughter, had six children, three sons and three daughters, all born after 1904. Of these various families the three sons of the third daughter were plaintiffs in the suit and are appellants to-day. The others were defendants and are now respondents.

It will be convenient first of all to set out the material portions of the Will:—

"I give devise and bequeath all my estate and effects immoveable and moveable unto my Trustees upon Trust that my Trustees shall sell, call in and convert into money the same or such part thereof as shall not consist of money and shall with and out of the proceeds of such sale calling in and conversion and with and out of my ready money pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and shall stand possessed of the residue of such proceeds upon Trust to set apart thereout and invest in promissory notes of the Government of India such a sum or sums of money as when so invested as aforesaid will produce by the income thereof a monthly sum of rupees one hundred and to pay such income monthly to my wife C. Andalammal during her life and from and after her decease to stand possessed of the said sum and the investments for the time being representing the same upon the Trusts hereinafter declared concerning the residue of my estate. And as to the residue of my estate I direct that my Trustees shall at their discretion invest the same in any of the modes of investment in which trustees are by law authorised to invest trust funds and shall stand possessed of the said residuary trust monies and the investments for the time being representing same (hereinafter called "the residuary trust funds"), in Trust to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal parts or shares as there may be daughters of mine living at the time of my decease or who having pre-deceased me shall have left issue her or them and me surviving and to pay the income of each of such equal parts of shares to my said daughters respectively during their respective lives. And from and after the decease of each of my said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter upon Trust for all the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of twenty-one years in equal shares and if there shall be only one such child the whole to be in trust for that one child and in the event of any of my said daughters dying without leaving lawful issue her or them surviving I direct that my trustees shall stand possessed of the share or shares so appropriated to her or them as aforesaid upon Trust for all the children of the other or others of my said daughters who shall attain the age of twenty-one years as tenants-in-common in equal shares per stirpes. Provided always and I hereby declare that if any daughter of mine shall die in my life-time leaving lawful issue at the time of my death such issue as shall attain the age of twenty-one years shall take and if more than one as tenants-in-common in equal shares per stirpes the share which would have been so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter of mine and her issue if she had survived me."

The suit was instituted in the High Court of Madras for a due construction of the Will and for administration. The plaintiffs, the present appellants, were, as already stated, grand-sons of the testator and children of his third daughter. Their case is that they, along with the sons of the other two daughters, are entitled to succeed to the testator's residuary estate subject to an annuity to the widow and to mere life-estates given to the three daughters, who are all now dead. For they contend that the trusts in favour of grand-children, following in the Will on those for the daughters for life, are void by the law of India. The case of the respondents, on the other hand, is that the trusts introduced in favour of grand-children were validly created by the Will, or, alternatively, that the three daughters of the testator in the result took his residue absolutely.

The case was tried before Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, who decided in substance (1) that the testator gave only a life-estate to each of his three daughters, and not an absolute estate, remarking: "It seems to me clear that what the testator wished to do was to divide the income of his estate into three shares for the benefit of his three daughters respectively during their lifetime, and thereafter the corpus of each share should belong to such of the children of each daughter as should attain the age of twenty-one years"; (2) that under the provisions of s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, and the rules laid down by the Lords of the Judicial Committee in the case of Juttendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (1), and other decisions, the gifts to the grand-children of the testator born after his death were void; but that the provisions of the Madras Act I of 1914, which were not in his opinion ultra vires of a Provincial Legislative Council, validated the bequest in this respect. The learned Judge was further of opinion that the testator's Will did not, for reasons which he gave, contravene the Indian rule against perpetuities in view of the provisions of Act IX of 1875, as amended by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890.

There was an appeal to the Appellate Court Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Madras. Before judgment on that appeal was delivered certain compromises were made between certain of the parties, for the division between them of what might be the fruits of this litigation. Into the terms of the compromise it is not, however, necessary, at this stage of the suit, to enter.

The appeal was heard by the Chief Justice (Sir John Wallis) and Mr. Justice Ramesam. These learned Judges did not agree with the view of the Trial Judge as to the effect of the Indian Majority Act, 1875, and of the Madras Act I of 1914 (which they held to have been ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature). They were accordingly of opinion that the disposition of the Will could not take effect as regards beneficiaries born after the death of the testator, and, as the provisions in favour of issue of daughters were obnoxious to s. 101 of the Indian

Succession Act, 1865, they thought that the whole disposition in favour of the daughters' children failed as a result of s. 102 of that Act. They held, however, that upon the true construction of the Will the intention of the testator was, in the first instance, to make an absolute gift in favour of each of his three daughters, the provisions which followed being a mere settlement of the gift thus absolutely made, and that consequently under s. 126 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, the daughters of the testator took absolutely, when these provisions failed of effect. That section, made applicable to the testator's Will by the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), is as follows:—

"Where a testator absolutely bequeaths a fund, so as to sever it from his own estate, but directs that the mode of enjoyment of it by the legatee shall be restricted so as to secure a specified benefit for the legatee; if that benefit cannot be obtained for the legatee, the fund belongs to him as if the Will had contained no such direction."

This is an enactment in statutory form of a principle which was already familiar to English lawyers. The case of Lassence v. Tierney (2) shows that where, reading the Will as a whole, the intention to confer an absolute estate in the first instance is expressed or implied, and following on that absolute estate there is a provision for settlement which in the event cannot be operative, then the words of prior intention prevail and the absolute estate takes effect notwithstanding the failure of the provision for settlement that follows. In India the words in s. 126 must be followed as laying down the principle, but the principle is not substantially different from what was expressed in Lassence v. Tierney (2). Their Lordships have given consideration to the terms of the Will in the present case. The material directions are those to the trustees "to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal parts or shares as there may be daughters of mine living at the time of my decease or who having predeceased me shall have left issue her or them and me surviving." The trustees are then to "pay the income of each of such equal parts or shares to my said daughters respectively during their respective lives. And from and after the decease of each of my said daughters to stand possessed of the share of the residuary trust funds so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter upon trust for the children of such daughter who shall attain the age of 21 years." The testator then directs that in the event of any of the daughters dying without leaving lawful issue the trustees are to "stand possessed of the share or shares so appropriated to her or them as aforesaid" on trust for her children who shall attain twenty-one. He goes on to introduce a proviso under which, if a daughter dies in his life-time leaving lawful issue, such issue as shall attain 21 years are to take the share "which would have been so appropriated as aforesaid to such daughter of mine and her issue if she had survived me."

Reading the Will as a whole their Lordships are unable to agree with the conclusion about the construction of these clauses come to by the Court of Appeal. They think that the first trust for apportionment directs merely division of the fund into as many equal parts or shares as there are daughters living at the testator's death, or sets of issue then living of daughters then dead.

The words of apportionment are introduced for merely arithmetical purposes and so far do not dispose of property. In order to find the interest given under the Will it is necessary to proceed to the further words, and these, in the case of a daughter, confine her interest to a right to income for life. They are followed by words of disposition in favour of the children and issue. This view of what may be called the apportionment clause is even more apparent as regards the suggested gift to issue of a deceased daughter. There is no unqualified gift to them by the apportionment clause. The effective gift in the later words of the Will is to such of a deceased daughter's children as attain 21. And if, on the whole, it could be said that the testator had used the words "issue" and "children" interchangeably then the limitation to such children only as attained 21 would, if there were a prior gift to them without that qualification, be merely otiose. If so much cannot be said then there is no room for the operation of the rule. Their Lordships are, therefore, unable to find in this Will the absolute bequests required by s. 126. They think that the three daughters took only for life, and that it must remain to be seen whether the later gifts in favour of their children or other issue are validly made under Hindu Law.

(2) (1849) 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 14 Jur. 182; 41 E. R. 1379; 84 R. R. 158.

Turning to this question, the first observation to be made is that the Will has apparently been drawn by someone familiar with English Law, but not with the Indian Statutes which apply. If it were only a question of the English rule against perpetuities, there would be no objection to the Will. But there comes in s. 101 of the Indian Succession Act of 1865. Under this section no bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the life-time of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority (ending at 18) of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong. The validity of the gifts now in question must be scrutinized as at the death of the testator, i. e., 1904, and if s. 101 then applied the disposition subsequent to the life-time of the testator's daughter was invalid, for the children of the daughters take only in classes, and by s. 102 of the Succession Act, if a bequest is made to a class of persons, with regard to some of whom it is inoperative by reason of the rules contained in s. 101, the bequest is wholly void. It being plain that this bequest, tested as at the testator's death, made delay beyond the lifetime of the daughters and the minority of some of their children possible, the bequest in favour of the children was inoperative. It was suggested, however, that this section had no application to the Will of a Hindu by reason of the fact that, as is shown by the Juttendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (1) any disposition in such a Will is invalid if the donee is an unborn person at the testator's death. The section, it was said, is only applicable to dispositions which are not otherwise ineffective. One answer to this was that in 1914 the Madras Act above referred to was passed which purported to get rid of the difficulty caused by the Juttendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (1) decision. This Act provides by s. 3 that a disposition shall not be invalid by reason only that the transferee or legatee is an unborn person at the date of the transfer, or the death of the testator. Questions were raised, as has already been observed, in the Courts below as to the validity of the Madras Act, but these questions are now superseded by the Act of the Indian Legislature, Act VIII of 1921, which has validated the law contained in the Madras Act, and repeats in s. 5 a provision identical with s. 101 of the Succession Act, 1865. The result is to make that section applicable to this Will, upon a view which was not contested before their Lordships if the Madras Act or the Act of 1921 were treated as operative. Now in that section, as has been already said, a "minor" means any person who shall not have completed the age of eighteen years. It was, however, pointed out by the respondents that, by the Majority Act, 1875, every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice, and every minor under the jurisdiction of any Court of Wards, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 21 years and not before; and this is accompanied by a provision that every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of 18 years and not earlier. These provisions do not, however, in the opinion of their Lordships, help the respondents. At the testator's death—for this purpose the relevant date—it was not clear, and could not be certain, whether all or any of the members of the classes in whose favour the disposition was made would ever have guardians appointed. The provision of the Will fixing 21 in every case as the age of vesting was, therefore, in contravention of s. 101, and the whole gift is invalid under s. 102. Their Lordships are unable to agree with the views expressed in some detail on this point by the learned Trial Judge.

Their Lordships are of opinion, for the reasons they have given, that the appeal must succeed. There will be a declaration that the appellants are entitled to their respective shares in the property in suit as upon an intestacy, subject to the life-estates (now at an end) in favour of the testator's daughters. This will be without prejudice to the compromises referred to in the decree appealed from, and to the sanction given to them by that decree. The case must go back to the High Court for further inquiry on that footing. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to interfere with the orders as to costs made in the Courts below. They think that the costs of this appeal should, in the same way, be payable out of the estate.

They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act (I of 1920), ss 5, 6, scope of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss 6, 8—Declaratory suit by reversioner after majority—Limitation.

Section 6 of the Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act of 1920 really gives an additional period of one year to those who were at the time of the enforcement of the Act entitled to institute suits, but could be successfully met by a plea of limitation owing to the repeal of the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act of 1900, and the consequent reduction of the limitation by the new Act. The section, however, does not control the operation of s. 5 of the Act. [p. 295, col. 1]

A father governed by Punjab Custom, having a minor son, sold certain ancestral property on 1st April 1913. The son attained his majority on 3rd July 1921. In a suit by the son instituted on 23rd May 1923, for a declaration that the sale being without necessity would not affect his reversionary rights it was objected that the limitation of 12 years prescribed for the suit by Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act of 1900 having been reduced to six years under Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act of 1920, the suit was governed by s. 6 of the Act, and not having been brought within one year of the operation of the said Act was barred by limitation:

Held, that s. 6 of the Act did not apply to the case, and the suit was within time under s. 5 of the Act, read with ss 6 and 8 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—The legal point involved in this second appeal is of considerable difficulty. In order to understand it the following statements of facts will be useful:—

Raji Shah, the father of the two plaintiffs, sold the land in dispute to defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 on the 1st of April 1913. Mahomed Ali Shah, plaintiff, was a minor at that time and Imam Shah, the other plaintiff, had not yet been born. Mahomed Ali Shah attained his age of majority on the 3rd July 1921 and this suit was instituted on the 23rd May 1923 for a declaration that the sale in question was fictitious and without consideration or necessity and did not, therefore, affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs on the death of the alienor.

The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, but the District Judge held it to be within time and remanded the case to the first Court for decision on the merits. The defendant-vendees have appealed to this Court.

At the time of the sale the period of limitation for such suits was provided by the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, 1900, which provided a period of 12 years, but that Act was repealed by the Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act, 1920, which came into force on the 4th January 1920. This Act reduced the period for such suits to six years. It is contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the present suit is barred by limitation on the ground that limitation for such suits in relation to alienation which took place before the 4th June 1920 is only one year by virtue of s. 6 of the Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act, 1920.

Section 5 of that Act runs as follows:—

“Subject to the provisions contained in ss. 4 to 25 (inclusive) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the First Schedule of the said Act, every suit, of any description specified in the Schedule annexed to this Act, instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor in the Schedule, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence.”

And s. 6 reads as follows:—

“Notwithstanding anything herein contained, any suit for which the period of limitation prescribed by this Act is shorter than the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, or by the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, 1900, may be instituted within the period of one year next after the commencement of this Act or within the period prescribed for such suit by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, or by the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, 1900, whichever period expires first."

It is admitted by Mr. Badri Das, who appeared for the appellant, that if the present suit is governed by s. 5 then the suit is within limitation by virtue of ss 6 and 8 of the Indian Limitation Act. The difficulty is really created by the opening sentence, which we have underlined, of s. 6 of the Act of 1920, which if read by itself might be interpreted to mean that s. 5 of the Act does not govern cases to which the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, 1900, applied but has ceased to do so by virtue of its repeal by the Act of 1920; in other words cases in which the cause of action to contest alienations has already arisen. We must say that the phraseology of s. 6 of the Act of 1920 is obscure and open to misconstruction, but we do not consider that the contention of Mr. Badri Das is sound. The point is one of first impression and reading the two sections together, i.e., ss. 5 and 6 of the Act of 1920, we hold that s. 6 really gives an additional period of one year to those who were at the time, when the Act came into force entitled to institute suits of the nature as the one before us, but could be successfully met by a plea of limitation owing to the repeal of the Act of 1900 and the consequent reduction of the limitation. In the case before us the limitation would have expired on the 1st April 1925 under the Act of 1900 and on the 3rd July 1924 under s. 5 of the Act of 1920 read with ss. 6 and 8 of the Indian Limitation Act. The opening sentence of s. 6 of the Act of 1920 being vague we are unable to hold that it had the effect of depriving the plaintiffs of their right which they had under s. 5.

We, therefore, hold that s. 6 of the Act of 1920 does not apply to the case of the plaintiffs in the suit before us. In view of our finding on this point the other point involved does not arise. The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

A proof of knowledge of the decree with all its contents and the general effect thereof is necessary in order to support a plea of limitation in bar of an application to set aside an ex parte decree.

Application for revision of an order of the Small Cause Court, Akola, dated 28th July 1923, in Miscellaneous Case No. 333 of 1922.

FACTS appear from the order of the Small Cause Court, Akola:—The original suit was fixed for 19th September 1922 and was decided ex parte on that day as the report of the process-server was that defendant refused the summons on 14th August 1922 and it was affixed to his house. Defendant stated that the report is false. His application is dated 30th October 1922 and to explain the delay he alleged that he came to know of the decree on 5th October 1922. This fact was to be proved by him. He himself went into the witness-box and deposed that on 5th October 1922 K. G. Deshmukh Pleader's clerk informed him of the decree and that he took inspection through petition writer Kasarkar. Mr. Deshmukh's clerk was not examined and the petition writer P. W. No. 3 gave the lie to his story. This is not proved. The fact that he filed his first application for setting aside this decree on 5th October 1922 would not be evidence of the fact that he came to know of the decree on that day and not before. And since he has failed to prove that his application is in time under Art. 164, Limitation Act, it must be disallowed.

It is true that the summons was not properly served. It appears from defendant's evidence that the process server did not personally go to the defendant's house but called him to the chaori through the patil and as he refused to come the report of refusal was made. This was no service at all but that does not help the applicant. Article 164 of the Limitation Act prescribes the time when the limitation begins to run the first is date of the decree and the present application is clearly beyond 30 days from that. The second is the date of the applicant's knowledge of the decree when the summons was not duly served. The present application comes within this second clause. In such a case it is for the applicant to prove when he came to know of it. Ordinarily in the absence of evidence to the contrary the applicant's sworn testimony would be enough but in this case applicant gave the names of the persons from whom he came to know of the decree and one of them proves the falsity of his statement and the other was not summoned at all. I cannot in these circumstances accept applicant's statement as sufficient and rely on it. I, therefore, dismiss the application with costs.

Mr. G. G. Hatvalne, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—I think this civil revision must succeed on the short ground that there is no material on record to show that the applicant had knowledge of the decree complained of at any time prior to 5th October 1922. The cases in Kumud Nath Roy v. Jatindra Nath (1) which follows Pundlick v. Vasant Rao (2) and Habibullah v. Karanju (3) clearly require proof of knowledge of the particular decree with all its contents and the general effect thereof. Such proof is wanting and I am not, therefore, prepared to accept the decision disallowing the defendant's petition for a hearing on merits as correct. The application is allowed and the lower Court is directed to deal with the merits of the case. The ex parte decree of the lower Court is ipso facto reopened.

I allow the revision but in the circumstances of the case I direct that each party shall bear his own costs of this revision.

ference of one creditor over others—Mortgage securing old and new loans.

A transfer cannot be avoided merely because its effect is to give one creditor preference over other creditors unless the debtor intends to do so.

Where a debtor who is unable to meet his liabilities and stands in need of further accommodation, approaches one of his creditors for a further loan, and executes a mortgage securing both the fresh and the previous loans, it cannot be said that he intended to prefer that creditor over others, but merely that he wanted to benefit himself.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Moti Sagar, in Civil Appeal No. 1396 of 1922, dated the 28th May 1923, and printed as 75 Ind. Cas. 861, reversing that of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 12th May 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 10th February 1921, one Sondha mortgaged the property in dispute in favour of his creditor Daulat Ram for a sum of Rs. 5,000. On the 18th April he presented an application for insolvency, and this application was granted on the 6th December. The creditors seek to impeach the transfer on the ground that it was made with a view of giving Daulat Ram a preference over other creditors, and the determination of the question depends upon the motive which inspired the debtor in making the transfer.

Now, the deed of mortgage shows that Sondha was already indebted to Daulat Ram to the extent of Rs. 3,200, and that he obtained a fresh loan of Rs. 1,800 and hypothecated his property for Rs. 5,000. There can be no doubt that Sondha was, at the time of the transfer, unable to pay his debts; and that he applied for insolvency within three months after the date of the transfer. It is further clear that the effect of the transfer was to give preference to one creditor over others, but s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not avoid a transfer merely because its effect is to give one creditor preference over other creditors but makes the intention of the debtor the dominant factor in deciding the fate of the transaction.

It appears to us that the debtor who was unable to meet his liabilities, stood in need of further accommodation and it was for this reason that he approached the creditor and asked him to make a loan. In entering into this transaction he intended to benefit himself and not the creditor; and we cannot, therefore, accept the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant that the transaction was effected with a view of giving Daulat Ram a preference over other creditors.

The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that Daulat Ram has not succeeded in establishing the whole of the debt of Rs. 3,200, and that in support of five hundis of Rs. 1,800 he has not produced any documentary evidence beyond the hundis themselves to prove the payment of consideration. It is to be observed that the learned District Judge recorded a finding on this point in favour of Daulat Ram and registered him as a creditor for the whole of Rs. 5,000 and interest thereon. No appeal was preferred against this decision so far as the amount of the debt was concerned, and the appellant is now precluded from impeaching it.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. Parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant Kirpa Singh built a kotha on a plot of land belonging jointly to the plaintiffs and the defendants. The present plaintiff-appellants brought a suit for demolition of that kotha on the ground that the particular plot had been left open by the common consent of all the co-sharers to be used on ceremonial occasions.

The Trial Court decreed the claim and granted the mandatory injunction prayed for.

In appeal the lower Appellate Court has set aside decision of the Trial Court and has dismissed the suit mainly upon the ground stated in its judgment. "There is, I think, no doubt from the evidence that he has been in possession for some time but that he only recently erected this particular kotha to which the plaintiffs object. This is practically admitted by both parties. The leading case applicable to the present one seems to me to be that reported in Majju v. Teja Singh (1) and it was there laid down that a suit of this description could only be maintained when the action of one of the proprietors had actually caused such material and substantial injury as could not be remedied by partition of the joint land. In the present case although this particular plot has not been partitioned but was left open, I do not see how it can be said that material and substantial injury has been caused to the plaintiffs, seeing that the greater number of proprietors seem to acquiesce in the erection of the kotha."

The learned Judge appears to be under the impression that co-sharers whose rights may be invaded by the exclusive possession of another co-sharer cannot maintain a suit without proving material and substantial injury. No doubt this at one time was the view adopted in this Court but the recent decisions on this question have set the matter at rest.

Now, the facts to be taken into consideration in this particular case are these: The defendant was one of the many co-sharers and he perfectly knew that he had no right to take exclusive possession of any portion of the common land and that with his eyes open he commenced and completed the building. Now when he is confronted with a suit by the plaintiffs he turns round and says, "you cannot dispossess me without showing special damage".

This was the very argument put forward in the case of Manji v. Ghulam Muhammad, (2). I examined almost all the authorities bearing upon this question and came to the conclusion that a plaintiff under these circumstances was entitled to sue without proving special damage. This view was upheld by a Bench of this Court in Letters Patent appeal which is reported as Manji v. Ghulam Muhammad (3). The learned Judge of the Court below has altogether ignored these two decisions and has based his decision upon an older ruling which must be considered to be no more law. Mr. Ralli, however, has contended that after all it was only a discretionary relief which the Court might have declined to grant and that it is not open to this Court to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Appellate Court. Now as a matter of fact the Court of first instance had given this relief in the exercise of its discretion. Therefore, the lower Appellate Court ought not to have interfered with the decision of the first Court. But leaving this question aside, is the defendant really entitled to any consideration in the matter? He knew perfectly well that this piece of land could never be partitioned and the injury, if any, caused to the plaintiff could never be remedied, and he also knew the limited right of joint ownership that he possessed and yet he persisted in erecting this building. He is not entitled to ask this Court either not to grant the injunction, or to refuse the prayer altogether or compensate the plaintiffs by awarding damages only.

In my opinion the lower Appellate Court was not justified in interfering with the decision of the Trial Court. I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court with costs throughout.

Stay of execution of a decree was directed by the Court on the judgment-debtor furnishing security by a specified date. The judgment-debtor failed to furnish security on that date, and the Court directed the decree-holder to take steps for execution at once. The decree-holder deposited talana for service of sale proclamation on the same day but did not file the processes, and the Court dismissed the execution case for default there and then. On revision.

Held, that the Court exercised its jurisdiction illegally in not allowing the decree-holder reasonable time for filing processes, as he could not have been expected to be ready with the processes on the expectation that the judgment-debtor would fail to furnish security, and that, therefore, the dismissal of the execution case for default must be set aside. ## JUDGMENT.

B. B. Ghose, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken as to the competency of this appeal on the ground that the order against which this appeal has been filed is an order of dismissal for default which does not come within the definition of decree under s. 2, sub s. (2), cl. (d) of the C. P. C. The appeal is not maintainable.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs, hearing fee three gold mohurs.

There is however an application by the decree-holder, and we are asked to interfere in revision with the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the execution case for default. The matter stands thus: Stay of execution was directed by this Court on furnishing security within a specified time. That date expired on the 20th February 1925. The judgment-debtor failed to furnish the required security on that date and the Subordinate Judge directed the decree-holder to take steps for execution at once. The next order dated the 20th February, proceeds thus: "The decree-holder has deposited talbana for service of sale proclamation. The processes have not been filed. I reject his prayer for the issue of sale proclamation". Then the next order of that very date is "the execution case is dismissed for default".

It seems to us that the Subordinate Judge had exercised his jurisdiction illegally in not allowing the decree-holder reasonable time for filing the processes after he had put in the talbana under the direction of the Court. The 20th February was fixed as the last date on which the judgment-debtor might furnish security for stay of execution and the decree-holder could not have been expected to be ready with the processes in the expectation that the judgment-debtor would fail to furnish the required security. In such circumstances, the Subordinate Judge ought, in the proper exercise of his jurisdiction, to have given the decree-holder reasonable time for furnishing the processes.

The order of the Subordinate Judge dated the 20th February 1925 dismissing the case for default is, therefore, set aside and the case is remanded to him for allowing the decree-holder to take further steps for the execution of his decree. The petitioner will be entitled to his costs of this application, hearing-fee three gold mohurs.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 24th January 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 26th July 1922.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellants.
Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 27th of June 1916 a preliminary decree under O. XXXIV, r 4 was passed in favour of a mortgagee. On the 4th January 1917 an application for execution was presented on which a notice issued. Proceedings were then stayed by another Court. On 12th April 1922 a further application for execution was presented on which the Court quite rightly held that it could not execute the preliminary decree. On the 1st May 1922 an application was put in for the first time asking for a final decree to be passed. This was dismissed by the Trial Court as barred by limitation under Art 181.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that time ought to have been extended under s. 14 of the Limitation Act. He accordingly extended the time and directed that the decree holder should be given a final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5.

At the hearing of the second appeal a preliminary objection was taken that it was undervalued at Rs 4. It is contended by the respondent that the words "direct that the decree-holder be given a final decree" mean that the District Judge himself passed a final decree and that, therefore, the appeal should bear full stamp. No final decree has in fact been prepared by the District Judge but merely a memorandum of costs such as is prepared when an order is passed which does not require a decree. I read the words as meaning that in accordance with the usual procedure the final decree is to be prepared by the Trial Court which gave the preliminary decree and I hold that this appeal is correctly stamped.

On the merits, Counsel contends that there was no excuse for the mistake made by the decree-holder and that, as laid down in Moti Singh v. Maghar (1) an application which does not lie in any Court cannot be taken into account for the sake of extending time under s. 14 of the Limitation Act. As against this the respondent contends that the decree is in the form of a final decree. The words used by the District Judge are: "The decree, though not strictly in accordance with the prescribed form, seems, in my opinion, to be intended to be preliminary." All that Counsel has been able to show is that in the concluding words of this decree instead of saying, "the plaintiff shall be at liberty to apply for a personal decree", the words used are: "he shall be entitled to realize it by sale of other property." At first Counsel contended that certain other passages in the decree are not in accordance with the Code but this he withdrew after examining the prescribed form.

It appears to me not only that the decree was intended to be preliminary, but that it is preliminary both in form and substance and the trifling difference in the words in the concluding portion is wholly immaterial.

As against Moti Singh v. Maghar (1) Counsel cannot quote any authority of this Court and I have no hesitation in following it. The application is clearly barred by time and it appears to me that the delay is wholly inexcusable.

Counsel for the respondent contends that the fact that the first Executing Court did not realize that this was a preliminary decree and issued notice debars all other Courts including this Court from treating it as such a wholly impossible position.

I accept the appeal and confirm the order of the Trial Court. Costs of the judgment debtor will be paid throughout by the decree-holder.

If he is not competent to appear, plead and act in any Court under the rules governing the procedure in that Court, he cannot claim right of audience by virtue of O. III, r. 4 [p. 301, col. 2].

A Pleader can appear for a party whose interest is opposed to that of the party for whom he had acted, drawn up pleadings or appeared in the same proceedings, only with the latter's consent or when specially authorised by the Court. [p. 302, col. 2].

Rule 277 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice is intended to regulate the proceedings in Courts and a practitioner of the Court has to conform to the rules governing its procedure [p. 301, col. 2].

The object of r. 277 is not to save the Pleader from a suit for damages by the party for whom he acted and against whom he subsequently acted, but to prevent an unreasonable conduct on the part of both the Pleader and the client [p. 302, col. 1].

A Pleader who has acted for a party to a suit and has discharged himself cannot afterwards act for the opposite party and the Court has power to restrain him from doing so on an application made for that purpose [ibid].

The words "in any matter connected therewith" in r. 277 mean connected with the suit or appeal or other proceeding in which the Pleader gave the advice and does not refer to a subsequent suit, or appeal or proceeding after the termination of the former suit, appeal or proceeding, where the causes of action in the two are different [p. 303, col. 1].

The subsequent suit or proceeding or matter can be said to be connected with the previous suit or proceeding or matter only if the former flows from, or in consequence of, the previous suit or proceeding. Otherwise there is no connection at all [ibid].

It is not the identity of the subject-matter that establishes the connection between the two suits or the identity of the parties but the identity of the right or title that is asserted or denied and the relief claimed. [p. 303, col. 2].

Where a Court by a wrong interpretation of r. 277 refuses to allow a practitioner to appear against a client for whom he is alleged to have acted on a former occasion, it exercises a jurisdiction not vested in it by law and the order is revisable by the High Court [p. 303, col. 1].

[Duty of Pleaders stated.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Srirangam, dated the 24th June 1924, in C. M. P. No. 315 of 1924 in Original Suit No. 103 of 1924 on its file.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer and R. Kesava Iyengar, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and K. G. Srinivasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application.

to revise the order of the District Munsif of Srirangam, who directed two Pleaders not to appear for the defendants in two suits pending in his Court as the plaintiff objected to their appearance inasmuch as they had appeared for him in previous suits against the defendant in which the subject-matter was the same as in the suits now pending. The first contention of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer is that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass such an order. It is argued that the Pleaders are not parties to the suits and that they have no right of appeal against such an order and, therefore, the order is without jurisdiction and is not covered by r. 277 of the Civil Rules of Practice.

The District Munsif purported to act under r. 277 which is in these terms: "Except when specially authorised by the Court, or by consent of the party, a Pleader who has advised in connection with the institution of a suit, appeal or other proceeding, or has drawn pleadings in connection with any such matter, or has, during the progress of any such suit, appeal or other proceedings, acted for a party, shall not, unless he first gives the party for whom he has advised, drawn pleadings or acted, an opportunity of engaging his services, appear in such suit, appeal or other proceeding, or in any appeal, or application for revision arising therefrom or in any matter connected therewith, for any person, whose interest is opposed to that of his former client, provided that the consent of the party shall be presumed if he engages another Pleader to appear for him in such suit, appeal or other proceeding without offering an engagement to the Pleader whose services he originally engaged". It is conceded by Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer that the Court has jurisdiction either to grant or to refuse such authority when a Pleader applies for the same under the rule. But it is urged that when he does not make an application for special authority, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order against him and that the only course open against a Pleader who violates the rule is by a proceeding under the Legal Practitioners Act for unprofessional conduct.

Considerable stress was laid on O. III r. 4 of the C. P. C., in support of the argument that a Pleader's engagement lasts till the termination of the proceedings, and, therefore, the Court cannot prevent the Pleader from appearing for a party after he has filed his vakalat in Court. Order III, r. 4 does not give an absolute right to a Pleader to appear in a Court till the termination of the proceedings but only provides in what manner should a Pleader be appointed and till what time the appointment will be in force. It assumes that a Pleader is competent to appear, plead and act in the Court in which he wishes to plead and act. If he is not competent to appear, plead and act in any Court under the rules governing the procedure in that Court, he cannot claim right of audience by virtue of O. III r. 4. Is it open to a second grade Pleader to claim a right of audience in the District Court by filing a vakalat or for a first grade Pleader to claim a right of audience in the High Court by filing a vakalat in Court for a party? The District Court and the High Court will refuse to receive the vakalat of a Pleader not entitled to appear before them and will refuse to allow him to act in that Court by reason of the rules governing their procedure. In re the Pleaders of the High Court (1), it was held that ss 2 and 36 of the C. P. C., Act XIV of 1882, did not give the Pleaders of the Bombay High Court the right to appear in the Presidency Small Cause Court of Bombay wherein only Barristers and Attorneys had a right to practise. Rule 277 is intended to regulate the proceedings in Courts and a practitioner of the Court has to conform to the rules governing its procedure. If he does not conform to the rules governing the procedure he cannot claim a right of audience in that Court. A Pleader can appear for a party whose interest is opposed to that of the party for whom he had acted, drawn up pleadings or appeared in the same proceedings either with the latter's consent or when specially authorized by the Court. The rule contains a prohibition against the Pleader's appearance unless the conditions therein laid down are satisfied. Supposing a Pleader is disbarred or struck off the rolls, can he insist upon his right to appear in a Court in which he had filed his vakalat before he was disbarred or struck off the rolls by reason of O. III, r. 4. Rule 4 is only an enabling provision by which a Pleader when he accepts an engagement and files his vakalat in Court is entitled to conduct the proceedings till he or his client dies or the termination of the proceedings. But this rule does not override the rules governing the qualifications of various classes of Pleaders or the rules governing the procedure of the Courts. If the contention of Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer is pushed to its logical conclusion, it would mean that a Pleader could appear for both the plaintiff and the defendant if the contending parties are foolish enough to engage the same Pleader, and the Court would be powerless to prevent the Pleader from appearing for both the plaintiff and the contesting defendant in the same suit. It is to prevent such conduct on the part of the Pleaders and unreasonable conduct on the part of the clients that r. 277 of the Civil Rules of Practice has been enacted. In Ramlall Agarwallah v. Moonia Bibee (2), Wilson, J., held, following the principle of law laid down in the case of Cholmondeley v. Clinton (3), that an Attorney who has acted for a party to a suit and has discharged himself cannot afterwards act for the opposite party and that the Court had power to restrain him from doing so on an application made for that purpose. The High Court of Madras in their proceedings dated 8th April 1869 ruled that when a suit is remitted by order of an Appellate Court for re-hearing or finding on an issue, the proceedings on such order must be regarded as a further proceedings in the trial of the suit and, consequently, under s. 22 of Regulation XIV of 1816 a Vakil cannot change sides and hold a vakalatnama for the party opponent to the one for whom he appeared at the first hearing. See Proceedings, 8th April 1869 (4). The Court has, therefore, power to refuse to hear practitioners who violate the rules regulating the procedure in Courts.

It is next contended that the special authority required under r. 277 is only for the protection of the Pleader against an action for damages by the party for whom he had acted and not for enabling the Pleader to appear in Court for his opponent. The rule is no doubt intended both for the protection of the Pleader as well as the client but not in the sense in which the appellant wants it to be understood. The object of the rule is not to save the Pleader from a suit for damages by the party for whom he acted and against whom he subsequently acted but to prevent an unreasonable conduct on the part of a party who engaged the Pleader's services and afterwards gave him up without proper grounds. If a party who gets advice from a Pleader does not choose to engage his services for the conduct of the suit but engages another the Pleader is not altogether debarred from accepting an engagement from the opposite party but he could do so by giving the former an opportunity to engage his services and if he refuses to engage his services and unreasonably withholds his consent he may appear for the latter with the special authority of the Court. It is to prevent unfair dealing by the parties that the Court is invested with the power to grant special authority to a Pleader to appear against the party whom he gave advice or acted or appeared for at an early stage of the proceedings. But for such power any rich party or an unscrupulous client might prevent all leading Pleaders from appearing for his opponent by seeking their advice by paying a nominal fee and then engaging the services of one or more of them to conduct the proceedings in Court.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer for the respondent urges that there is a finding of fact that the suits now pending are connected with previous suits and the High Court should not interfere with the order of the lower Court under s. 115 of the C. P. C. The facts are:—The plaintiff filed O. S. No. 525 of 1912 afterwards numbered as 400 of 1914 against the defendant in which he asked for possession of a plot to the west of his house and prayed for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with his right to the common lane to the north of the plot. In O. S. No. 860 of 1920 the plaintiff prayed for a mandatory injunction for the removal of a cross-wall put up by the defendant in a portion of the lane. The plaintiff has now brought two suits against the defendant, viz., O. S. No. 103 of 1924 for a mandatory injunction for removal of the balcony wrongly put up by the defendant over a portion of the common lane and for the removal of a portion of the defendant's drain encroaching on the common lane and O. S. No. 104 of 1924 for a mandatory injunction for removal of the arch of the verandah erected by the defendant on the ground that it had interfered with the free access of light and air to his house and for incidental reliefs. The District Munsif finds that the four suits are closely connected with one another. It is difficult to see the connection. If the same questions are in dispute now as were in dispute in the previous suits, the decision of the previous suits would be res judicata in the present ones. The connection contemplated by r 277 is not the connection of the parties or of the subject-matter. The wording in r 277 is "in such suit, appeal or other proceeding, or in any appeal, or application for revision arising therefrom, or in any matter connected therewith." The words "in any matter connected therewith" mean connected with the suit or appeal or other proceeding in which the Pleader gave the advice and does not refer to a subsequent suit, appeal or proceeding after the termination of the former suit, appeal or proceeding. If a Vakils appears for a party in a suit or proceeding, he cannot appear for the opposite party in subsequent proceedings, in the same suit or proceeding, but that does not prevent a Pleader who appeared for a party from appearing in a subsequent suit for the opposite party when the causes of action in the two are different. The subsequent suit or proceeding or matter can be said to be connected with the previous suit or proceeding or matter only if the former flows from, or in consequence of, the previous suit or : : : Otherwise there is no connection at all. If a plaintiff sues the defendant for possession of land on his title and succeeds and sometime after brings a suit upon a fresh cause of action against the same defendant, there is no connection between the two suits though the defendant may raise the question of title of the plaintiff, but that would not be sufficient to establish a connection between the two. The question involved in the two suits in the District Munsif's Court are the right of the plaintiff to object to the defendant putting up certain structures and that right was not in dispute in the former suits. The causes of action are different, and the reliefs claimed are not the same. The District Munsif's exercise of jurisdiction was owing to a wrong interpretation of the rule and this Court has power to interfere with the order of the District Munsif as he exercised a jurisdiction not given to him by r. 277 of the Civil Rules of Practice.

(5) 62 Ind. Cas. 712, 41 M. L. J. 60; 13 L. W. 541; (1921) M. W. N. 646.

Pichai Pillai (6) relied upon by Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyer as supporting his contention are distinguishable from the present. In Ramakrishna Pillai v. Balakrishna Iyer (5) the petitioner was plaintiff in O. S. No. 8 of 1917 and defendant in O. S. No. 56 of 1920 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Mayavaram. The respondents were two Vakils of the Mayavaram Sub-Court who appeared for him in the former suit and for the plaintiff in the latter suit. The petitioner's application that audience should be refused to the Vakils respondents who had filed O. S. No. 56 of 1920 for the plaintiff was rejected by the Subordinate Judge as he was not satisfied that there would be any conflict between their duty in representing the plaintiff in O. S. No. 8 of 1917 and in representing his opponent in O. S. No. 56 of 1920. Both the learned Judges who heard the civil revision petition against the order of the Subordinate Judge were of opinion that the suits were connected with one another. Spencer, J., observed at page 6.* "In both suits questions arise as to the validity and binding character upon the petitioner of the indenture and whether he is estopped by reason of it from questioning the title of the defendant in the former suit and the title of the plaintiff in the second suit." The learned Judges allowed the petition and directed the Subordinate Judge to refuse to allow the respondents to conduct O. S. No. 56 of 1920 for the plaintiff. That case has no application to the present, as in that both the suits were then pending in the Mayavaram Court and as found by the learned Judges they were connected and some of the important questions arising in the suits were common to both suits. It is not the identity of the subject-matter that establishes the connection between the two suits or the identity of the parties but the identity of the right or title that is asserted or denied, and the relief claimed.

In Srinivasa Rao v. Pichai Pillai (6) Miller, J., approved of the order of the District Munsif who prohibited a second grade Pleader from appearing for the plaintiffs in O. S. No. 32 of 1913 on his file. The Pleader appeared for the defendant in proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., and obtained an order in favour of the defendant and he filed O. S. No. 32 of 1913 for the defeated party. The District Munsif relied on r 277 of the Civil Rules of Practice prohibiting the Pleader from appearing for the plaintiff. In proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate decides only the question of possession and his order is to maintain the possession of the party found to be in possession at the time the proceedings are adopted. His order is subject to the result of a civil suit and is good only till the Civil Court decides which party is entitled to the property in dispute. The civil suit, therefore, in almost all cases follows the order of the Magistrate and the proceedings in a civil suit are in a sense continuation of the proceedings before the Magistrate. Though the Magistrate enquires only into the question of possession, yet documents are relied upon by the parties for the purpose of proving their possession and the Pleader who appears for a party necessarily acquaints himself with the title to the property and invariably peruses the documents produced by his client. With the knowledge of the strength and weakness of his client's title if he appears in the civil suit for a party whose interests are opposed to his clients in the proceedings before the Magistrate, there is a danger of his using for his client in the civil suit the knowledge gained by him from his client in the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court. There is an intimate connection between the proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., in the Magistrate's Court and the civil suit filed in consequence of the order of the Magistrate.

If a Pleader appears for a party in the proceedings in execution, he cannot appear in the suit filed by reason of the order in claim proceedings for a party whose interests are opposed to that of the party for whom he acted in the claim proceedings without his consent or without the authority of the Court in which the suit is pending. The suits now pending in the District Munsif's Court are not the necessary consequence of the previous suits. There is no connection between the present one and the former suits. As observed by Spencer, J., in Ramakrishna Pillai v. Balakrishna Iyer (5) the two suits will ordinarily be considered connected if they have any issue in common or involve substantially a determination of the same question of fact or the same mixed question of law and fact.

A few observations as to the duty of Pleaders would not be out of place here.

The legal profession is a very noble one; and no Pleader should by his conduct consciously or unconsciously do anything to lower its high standard of morality, probity and honesty. The Pleaders would do well to avoid any conduct on their part which is reasonably capable of being misunderstood. If a Pleader advises or acts for a client he should not appear against him in any subsequent proceeding if he feels that he might in such proceeding even unconsciously use the information gained from his former client against him. Clients should have the fullest confidence in their legal advisers and should not be deterred or hampered in disclosing the strength and weakness of their cases by the fear that their instructions might at some future time be used against them by their legal advisers. It is the duty of legal practitioners to avoid even the suspicion that they might possibly use the information which they received in their professional capacity against the clients from whom they received them. There is no rule, etiquette or code of ethics to govern the conduct of clients. On the other hand the Pleaders who are guided and governed by the etiquette of the profession are not likely to do anything which would incur the censure of the profession and, in order to prevent an unscrupulous or contumacious client from depriving his opponent of the services of Pleaders, r. 277 of the Civil Rules of Practices gives a discretion to the Court to specially authorize a Pleader to appear and act for a party whose interests are opposed to those of the party for whom he at one time acted or appeared or gave advice.

We have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff has no reason to complain of the conduct of the Pleaders. He has only to thank himself if he lost the services of the two prominent Pleaders. He could have retained them if he had cared. He engaged other Vakils to appear for him and his petition to the District Munsif is evidently not to protect his own interests for they require no protection but to annoy the defendants and the Pleaders whom he did not care to retain. Perhaps there is some motive at the bottom of the plaintiff's petition. We set aside the order of the District Munsif and allow the petition with costs throughout.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 61 of 1924.

April 14, 1925.

TAPIRAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

JUGALKISHORE AND ANOTHER—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Document, material alteration in—Suit to recover money—Acknowledgment produced in evidence—Material alteration in acknowledgment, effect of—Suit, whether can be decreed.

The rule that no decree can be passed in a suit brought on a document which has been materially altered after execution without the privity of the party to be affected by it, has no application where the obligation to be enforced does not arise under the altered instrument and the instrument is produced merely as a piece of evidence in proof of the obligation. [p. 305, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Where a cause of action for recovery of money lent to the defendant exists independently of any document which may have been obtained from the defendant in support of the advance, the fact that the document has been materially altered is no ground for dismissing plaintiff's claim for the advance. [p. 307, col. 2.]

An acknowledgment which merely evidences the receipt of a loan does not amount to a contract and does not furnish a cause of action, and a claim in proof of which such an acknowledgment is produced can be decreed despite the fact that the acknowledgment has been materially altered without the consent of the debtor affected by it. [ibid.]

A material alteration in a written acknowledgment of debt does not render it inoperative as the acknowledgment is merely an evidence of pre-existing liability. [p. 305, col. 2.]

Appeal against a judgment of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 17th September 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 126 of 1923.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants-respondents borrowed from Hemlal cousin of plaintiff-appellant Rs. 200 on 11th February 1920, Rs. 100 on 25th April 1920, Rs. 25 on 21st May 1920 and again Rs. 25 on 23rd September 1920, and for each of the sums so borrowed they passed an acknowledgment or ruju in favour of Hemlal in his account book. As they failed to re-pay the money in spite of demand, plaintiff brought a suit against them for recovery of all the four items plus interest thereon at the rate of Re. 1-8 per cent. per mensem.

Defendants admitted having borrowed all the four items referred to by the plaintiff. They also admitted having passed all four acknowledgments filed by the plaintiff in respect of the aforesaid four items. They, however, denied that they had agreed to pay any interest. They pleaded that in the first acknowledgment dated 11th February 1920 the letters "Da-1½" had been fraudulently interpolated without their knowledge or consent in order to make it appear that that they had agreed to pay interest at Re. 1-8 per cent. per mensem, although there was no agreement on their part to pay any interest, and contended that as a material alteration has been made in one of the acknowledgments plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything from them.

Both the Courts below held that defendants had not agreed to pay any interest. They further held that a material alteration had been made in the first acknowledgment without the knowledge or consent of the defendants by inserting therein the letters "Da 1½". They consequently dismissed plaintiff's claim for the money covered by that acknowledgment and decreed his claim for the money due on the remaining three acknowledgments with interest thereon at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem by way of damages. Plaintiff has now preferred this appeal and he contends that his claim for the money covered by the first acknowledgment should not have been dismissed by the Courts below. In my opinion his contention is sound and must prevail.

It has, no doubt, been held that there is no right of action on a document which has been materially altered after execution and without the privity of the party to be affected by it, and that no decree should be passed in a suit brought on such a document despite the fact that consideration for the document has been admitted by the defendant: Pandurang v. Kishan (1), Kanhayalal Tarachand v. Sitaram Tukaram (2). But this rule has no application where the obligation to be enforced does not arise under the altered instrument and the instrument is produced merely as a piece of evidence in proof of the obligation. It has accordingly been held that a material alteration in a written acknowledgment of debt does not render it inoperative as the acknowledgment is merely an evidence of pre-existing liability: Atmaram v. Umed- ram (3). In that case Chandavarkar, J., has observed at pages 620 and 621:*

"The principle of English Law, which was first laid down in Pigot's case (4) that the material alteration of a document by a party to it after its execution without the consent of the other party renders it void, has been followed in India. But all the decisions which have been cited at the Bar from the English and Indian Law Reports relate to cases in one and all of which the altered instrument was the foundation of the plaintiff's claim and the source of the defendant's obligation or liability. They were cases of written contracts, or bonds or Bills of Exchange or similar instruments, as to which it may be taken as settled law both in England and here that a material alteration avoids the instrument where the action is on the instrument itself: see Agricultural Cattle Insurance Company v. Fitzgerald (5). The decisions cited in the notes to the case of Master v. Miller (6) in Smith's Leading Cases also make that clear. As pointed out in the case of Earl of Falmouth v. Roberts (7) there is a distinction between cases in which the altered instrument is merely evidence and those in which the obligation sought to be enforced is by reason of the instrument itself. 'The rule of law,' said Parke, B., in that case, 'applies where the obligation is by reason of the instrument..... But no case has been cited to us nor have we been able to find any in which it has been laid down either in England or here that a written acknowledgment of his liability by a debtor becomes void and inoperative if it is materially altered without his consent by his creditor. An instrument which creates a liability and gives rise to a cause of action is one thing and a written acknowledgment of that liability is another.'

In Harendra Lal Roy v. Uma Charan Ghosh (8) plaintiff had sued the defendant for money advanced. In the business book of the plaintiff, defendant had acknowledged his liability for that amount by signing his name over an eight anna stamp. It was found that an entry relating to interest had been subsequently interpolated in the acknowledgment and consequently the Small Cause Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the sum covered by the acknowledgment and dismissed plaintiff's suit. When the matter came up in revision before the High Court, Maclean, C. J., set aside the decree of the Small Cause Court and gave a decree to the plaintiff on the ground that plaintiff had not sued on the basis of the altered acknowledgment but had produced it merely as evidence in support of the loan. He pointed out in that case that the authorities discriminated between the cases in which the altered document was the foundation of the claim and those in which it was only filed as evidence and observed that the principle that where a plaintiff sues upon an instrument which he has materially and fraudulently altered, such alteration vitiates the instrument had no application to suits in which the altered instrument was not the foundation of the plaintiff's claim.

In this connection, I may also refer to the case of Moti Lal Saha v. Monmohan Gosami (9). In that case plaintiff had sued the defendant for recovery of debt on the allegation that the defendant had borrowed the debt from him by executing promissory notes in his favour. The promissory notes were found to be forgeries but still the plaintiff was held entitled to recover. Ram-pini and Pratt, JJ., observed in that case as follows:—

"We think, therefore, that although the promissory notes are forgeries, it does not follow that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for the money lent by them if they can prove the loan in any other way. And in support of this view, we need only cite the case of Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarika Nath Dey (10)."

It is, no doubt, true that the case cited above was a case in which the document sued upon was held to be forgery and was not a case of material alteration. But the principle upon which the decision in that case was based fully governs the present case. That principle is that where a cause of action for recovery of an advance exists independently of any instrument which may have been given for the advance, the fact that the instrument is vitiated by fraud is no ground for dismissing plaintiff's claim for recovery of the advance.

Similarly in Dula Meah v. Abdul Rahman (11), Newbould, J., has observed "I can find no decided authority that the material alteration of a written contract destroys the original debt if the debt is not merged in the written contract. If the written contract is a negotiable instrument this would usually happen. But in the case of a simple bond I would hold that the alteration prevents a suit being based on the bond, and that the question whether a suit would lie on the original debt depends on whether there is a separate contract which can be proved apart from the bond." Rankin, J., has also pointed out in that case that "an independent cause of action must be shown if the doctrine of Master v. Miller (5) is not to take effect." This case also recognises the principle that where a cause of action for recovery of money lent to the defendant exists independently of any document which may have been obtained from the defendant in support of the advance, the fact that the document has been materially altered is no ground for dismissing plaintiff's claim for the advance.

In this connection, it may be useful to refer by way of analogy to cases in which a creditor's claim for recovery of the loan advanced to his debtor has been decreed in spite of the fact the document obtained from the debtor in support of the loan was found inadmissible to evidence for want of proper stamp or for a like reason: Banarsi Prasad v. Fazal Ahmad (12) Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (10) Ram Bahadur v. Dusuri Ram (13). These cases have also been decided on the principle that where a cause of action for money lent is complete in itself and where the claim is founded on the original consideration, it can be enforced provided that the original consideration has not merged in the instrument (e. g. bond or promissory-note) which is excluded from evidence.

Bearing in mind, the principles referred to above, let us examine the facts of the present case. In this case, Rs. 200 were admittedly advanced to the defendants on the 11th February 1920 and an acknowledgment for the money advanced was obtained from them by plaintiff's predecessor Hemlal. The acknowledgment does not contain the terms of any agreement which may have been arrived at between the parties in regard to re-payment of the loan, etc. It simply recites the fact of the receipt of Rs. 200 by the defendants. Such an acknowledgment which merely evidences receipt of the loan does not amount to a contract and furnishes no cause of action: Raghubirsingh v. Udechand (14), Durga Shankar v. Ram Prasad (15). The foundation of plaintiff's claim is the advance of Rs. 200 made by Hemlal to the defendants and the acknowledgment in question was produced by the plaintiff merely in proof of the loan. Every loan carries with it an implied promise to re-pay it, even though no express promise, written or verbal is made by the debtor to repay it: Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (10). As this is the undoubted law, it follows that when the defendants have admitted that they borrowed Rs. 200 from the plaintiff, they must also be deemed to have admitted that they had promised to re-pay the money and as they have failed to re-pay it, the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action against them for breach of the implied promise, independently of the acknowledgment given by them to show that they received the money and in spite of the fact that the acknowledgment has been materially altered. The fact that the acknowledgment in the present case was given simultaneously with the loan makes absolutely no difference because the question to be decided in such a case is not whether the instrument evidencing the loan sought to be recovered was given simultaneously with the loan or not but whether it constitutes the sole foundation of plaintiff's claim for recovery of money lent. I have already held that the acknowledgment in question is not and cannot be the foundation of plaintiff's claim and consequently, plaintiff is entitled to recover Rs. 200 from the defendants despite the fact that the acknowledgment has been materially altered.

In the view I have taken above, it is not necessary for me to consider whether the case of Kandre Jula Anantha Rao Pantulu v. Kandikonda Surayya (16) which was cited before me by the learned Pleader for the appellant and also the cases of Khosal Moham-

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Masulipatam, dated the 11th of September 1922, in A. S. No. 65 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Gudivada, in O. S. No. 602 of 1919.

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Venkatachalam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The main question for consideration in this appeal is whether the sale in execution of the property of the deceased judgment-debtor is a mere irregularity or a nullity. It appears that in this case an order for the sale of the judgment-debtor's property was made and that before the sale took place, the judgment-debtor died. His legal representatives were not impleaded. There are two cases of this Court which are exactly applicable, one reported in Raghunathaswami Iyengar v. Gopaul Rao (1) and the other in Doraisami v. Chidambaram Pillai (2). The decisions being directly opposed to one another, it is suggested for the appellant that in view of this difference of opinion this second appeal should be referred to a Bench but, as I will explain, I do not think that is necessary.

In Raghunathaswami Iyengar v. Gopaul Rao (1) Oldfield and Ramesam, JJ., held that the sale in execution which took place after the death of the judgment-debtor without bringing in legal representatives on record was a nullity. Spencer and Krishnan, J, in Doraiswami v. Chidambaram Pillai (2) held exactly the contrary. The Full Bench decision in Rajagopala Aiyar v. Ramanujachariar (3) does not in terms decide the point at issue but it did hold, as in Doraiswami v. Chidambaram Pillai (2), that an omission to give notice under O. XXI, r. 22 renders a sale held in execution a nullity. It does, in effect, deal with the present question at issue, although in that case the judgment-debtor was not dead but no notice was issued in accordance with O. XXI, r. 22. The question is, however, definitely decided by the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das Khetri (4). That was a case, where after the sale had been proclaimed and had even been adjourned to a further date, the judgment debtor became an insolvent. Notice was given to the Official Assignee, but the notice apparently was merely a notice asking him whether he would come on record and it was not a notice that execution would proceed against him. It was there held that inasmuch as the property passed by operation of law from the judgment-debtor to the Official Assignee, execution could not proceed until the Official Assignee had been brought before the Court and an order binding on him had been obtained. Their Lordships further remark that "a notice under s. 248 of the Code (corresponding to O. XXI, r. 22) is necessary in order that the Court should obtain jurisdiction to sell property by way of execution as against the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor." No distinction can be drawn between the civil death of a judgment-debtor as the result of insolvency and the actual death of the judgment-debtor and the effect would appear to be exactly the same. When the sale in this suit was held, the judgment-debtor in whom the property had vested was dead and consequently the property could no longer vest in him and there could be no sale of his property, but only of property which had been his before his death. The property that was sought to be sold is property which at the date of the sale had become vested in the legal representative of the debtor and inasmuch as that legal representative was not on record, there could be no valid sale as against him. Provision for executing decrees after the death of the judgment-debtor is contained in s. 50 of the C. P. C. which provides that the decree-holder may apply to execute them against the legal representatives. I do not think that I need discuss the question whether execution can be taken against a deceased man, for that is not possible. He cannot be arrested and he has no longer any property to be proceeded against. Therefore, the only remedy for a decree-holder is to proceed against the legal representatives as possessing the assets of the deceased and then the provisions of O. XXI, r. 22 must be applied. If they are not complied with, we have the authority of the Privy Council and a Full Bench of this Court to the effect that the sale is a nullity. The question is thus concluded by authority and the difference of opinion between two Benches of this Court does not render it necessary for me to refer this case to a Bench. I must follow the decision of the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sunder Das

Khetri (4) and accordingly I confirm the finding of the lower Court that the sale was a nullity.

Further, an argument is put forward by the appellant that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the brothers were divided is wrong in law. The Subordinate Judge relies on oral evidence and the circumstances of the case for arriving at this finding, and that evidence is not before me and, I am not, therefore, in a position to say that there was no evidence on which his finding could be based. Being a finding of fact, I must accept it. The second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bareilly, dated the 24th February 1925.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Malik for Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a decree-holder, the Allahabad Bank, Ltd., Bareilly, against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly, dated the 24th of February 1925. The order does not contain the facts of the case which must, therefore, be narrated here. The decree, holder had obtained a decree against one Banke Lal and his four sons on the 31st of January 1924. An application for execution was presented on the 8th of May 1924 and the property of the whole family was attached and proceedings were being taken for sale of the property. Before a sale took place, Banke Lal alone was adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvency Court which appointed a Receiver for his property. His property thereupon vested in the Receiver. On the 7th of December 1924 subsequent to the insolvency proceedings, the Pleader for the Bank requested the lower Court that the father's one-fifth share may be released and only four-fifths of the attached property may be sold. The Court passed an order accordingly. On the 26th of January 1925 two sons of Banke Lal applied that the entire property of the family may be sold by the Receiver appointed by the Insolvency Court. There was no suggestion that the entire property had vested in the Receiver upon an adjudication in favour of the father. On this application the lower Court passed an order with the terms of which we do not agree. The learned Subordinate Judge directed that copies of the application and of the order of the Court may be sent to the Receiver in insolvency to take steps accordingly and to act as if the entire family property were the assets of the insolvent. This order was not justified because on an adjudication of a Hindu father as an insolvent under the Insolvency Act, the joint property of the family does not at once vest in the assignee. Their Lordships enunciated this proposition of law in the case of Sat Narain v. Behari Lal (1), where the terms construed were those of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909). The term "property" is defined in the Provincial Insolvency Act in the same words. (Section 2 (d) of Act V of 1920). That pronouncement of their Lordships will, therefore, cover the present case also.

On the 6th of February 1925, the Receiver of the Insolvency Court, Babu Johri, applied that he may be permitted to carry out the sale of the entire family property and on this application the lower Court ordered that sale proceedings through the Amin and the Collector be stopped and that the whole property shall be sold by the Receiver in whom, according to the Court, the entire property had vested. The decree-holder was informed of this order. Eighteen days later on the 24th February, the learned Judge ordered the execution case to be struck off. This is the order under appeal. It is in the following terms. "Banke Lal judgment-debtor has been declared an insolvent. His property together with the whole of the family property will be sold through the Receiver."

The mere words of this order as quoted above are not objectionable as the lower Court would be well advised to have the sale of the sons' interest and of the father's interest in the joint family property carried out by the same agency. The previous orders of the lower Court, however, indicate that according to its opinion all the assets have vested in the Receiver. Such a finding will obviously be prejudicial to the decree-holder because, if the assets are all vested in the Receiver, the other creditors will claim rateable shares in the shares of the sons in the joint family property and so far that portion of the property of the sons will not be available to the decree-holder-appellant.

We set aside the order of the 24th of February 1925 and direct the lower Court to proceed according to law. We have already indicated that the insolvency of the father does not vest the interest of the sons in the joint family property in the Receiver. Whatever interest the sons may have in the property will be available to the decree-holder appellant to satisfy his decree of the 31st of January 1924, which was specifically passed against the sons as well as against the father. We think that the proper procedure in the case would be to carry out execution proceedings in combination with the Receiver in insolvency and arrange so that the entire property both of the father and of the sons may be sold at the same time. It appears that part of the immoveable property is house property which could be sold by the lower Court directly and part is revenue paying property which will have to be sold through the Collector of the district. There ought to be no difficulty about the sale of the shares of the sons in the house property being carried out at the same time that the share of the father is sold. The lower Court may appoint the Receiver in insolvency sale officer for the house property and when the property is sold the Receiver under the direction of the lower Court and independently of the Insolvency Court will deposit four-fifths of the sale amount in the lower Court for the benefit of the decree-holder appellant. There will be some difficulty in selling the share of the sons in the revenue paying property along with the share of the father. It may be found possible by the lower Court to advise the Collector at the time of the sale that the sale by him may take place at the same time that the father's share is sold. If any other arrangement of joint sale suggests itself to the lower Court and is acceptable to the parties, it may be adopted.

The respondents were not represented to-day and the appeal was heard ex parte. The appellant shall receive his costs here including fees on the higher scale.

A suit by the plaintiff against a Union Board in respect of the ownership of certain streets in the town was settled by a compromise under which the plaintiff's title to the streets was recognised but the public were to be given access during specified hours in a day. The said compromise was embodied in a resolution of the Board and an application was made by both parties to the Court to pass a decree in terms thereof. Pending the disposal of the petition, the Government acting under s. 31 of the Madras Local Boards Act rescinded the said resolution and applied to be made a party to the suit, and without deciding the question whether the compromise between the parties to the suit was lawful or not, the Court added the Government as party to the suit. Mr. A. Kishnaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. V. Ananta Krishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the District Munsif of Ramnad directing the Secretary of State for India in Council to be made a party to the suit which was filed by the Raja of Ramnad against the Union Board of Ramnad for a declaration that certain streets around his palace belong to him and are not vested in the Union Board. Trouble seems to have arisen from the fact that during the survey under the Survey Act, these roads were classified as public streets. The suit, however, as appears from the note of the District Munsif was not a suit under the Survey Act but was a suit by the plaintiff to establish his title to the roads. There was a compromise entered into between the Raja of Ramnad and the Union Board and this compromise was entered into after a resolution of the Union Board. A joint petition was put in under O. XXIII, r. 3 of the C. P. C. on the 26th of April 1924 where it was stated that the parties had come to an agreement and that a decree should be passed in terms of the razinamah. By that razinamah the defendant Board recognised the ownership of the plaintiff over the lanes A, B and C mentioned in the Commissioner's plan; the plaintiff was to allow the public free use of the lanes from 5 A. M. till 9 P. M. for ever; and the plaintiff was given the right to close the lanes except during the hours when the public were allowed access; each party was to bear its own costs. It was prayed that a decree be passed in terms of this razinamah. This petition was put in on the 26th of April but no order was passed on it. It appears from the affidavit filed on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council that the Government on the 4th of July 1924, long after this petition was presented, and purporting to act under s. 36 of the Local Boards Act rescinded the resolution of the Union Board to enter into a compromise. On the date the petition to record the compromise came on for hearing, the Secretary of State for India in Council put in a petition to be made a party to the suit and the District Munsif without deciding the petition already filed to record the compromise passed an order making the Secretary of State for India in Council a party to the suit. The present revision petition is filed against that order.

The contention of Mr. Krishnaswamy Iyer for the petitioner is that, under O. XXIII, r. 3, C. P. C., the Court was bound to pass a decree in terms of the compromise, such compromise being legal and valid and that it was not competent to the Court to add a party to the proceedings where the original parties terminated the suit by a lawful compromise. Order XXIII, r. 3 runs as follows:— "Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit." It seems to me to be clear that if this compromise between the Union Board and the plaintiff was a lawful and valid one, the District Munsif had no power to add any party but he had only power to pass a decree in terms of the compromise.

Sankaralinga Nadan v. Rajeswara Dorai (1) has no application. In that case the defendants who were Shanars were sued as representing their community. The High Court found that the compromise after decree passed in favour of the trustee by the Subordinate Judge was a breach of trust on the part of the trustee and that third parties interested were entitled to intervene. Their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld the order of the High Court. In the present case there is no such charge and the suit is not filed by or against either party in a representative character.

The fact that the petitioner claims a right or interest in the matter cannot, if the suit was terminated lawfully by the original parties thereto, allow third parties to agitate their rights in the suit. If third persons have any interest in the matter, their remedy is to file a separate suit. The District Munsif has passed no orders on the validity of the compromise and I think that the order which he has passed making the Secretary of State for India in Council a party is clearly premature. The first question to be determined was whether the compromise was legal. On this part of the case I have heard the arguments both of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer for the petitioner and of Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer for the Secretary of State. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer argues that the Local Boards Act constitutes the defendant, the Union Board of Ramnad as a Corporation with all rights of suing or being sued, or acquiring, holding or transferring property moveable or immovable, or to contract and do all other things which it considers proper or expedient for the purposes for which it was constituted. The streets vested in the Board under the Act and that Board was, having regard to the allegations in the plaint, the proper party to be impleaded. The contract, therefore, which resulted in the razinamah was a contract entered into by a body which had authority to enter into the contract. Such being the case, there could be no question of the contract not being enforceable. It is contended by him that the provisions of s. 38 of the Act, which gives the Government the power to suspend or cancel any resolution of the Local Board, can only be exercised so long as the matter rests in the stage of a mere resolution which as between the Board and the Government the Government can interfere with, and that so long as the rights of third parties are validly created under a contract which cannot be impeached on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation or ultra vires, the contract is enforceable irrespective of what the Government may do under s. 38. Reference has been made to the decisions in Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa (2), British Murac Syndicate v. Alperton Rubber Company (3) and Baily v. British Equitable Assurance Company (4) and to Vol. VIII of Halsbury's Laws of England p. 384. It is argued by Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer that s. 38 by necessary implication renders all contracts invalid where such contracts are based upon the resolution which has been set aside by the Government in other words, that all contracts which are entered into by Local Boards will by virtue of s. 38 be of no effect if the Government later on rescind the resolution by virtue of the powers vested in them under that section which gives no time within which the contract may be rescinded. This would really mean that all contracts are liable to the risk of being cancelled at any period irrespective of the rights of the parties. As at present advised, I am not prepared to concede so wide a proposition, but it is unnecessary for me to give any decision on the point at this stage of the proceedings especially as any decision passed by me on this point would not be subject to an appeal. If the case goes to the District Munsif for adjudication as to the validity of the compromise and should he pass any order one way or the other, it would be subject to an appeal. As it is, it is difficult to uphold the order of the District Munsif who adds a party without determining whether the compromise has put an end to the suit. There is no question about the effective addition of parties. I also refrain from saying whether, should he hold that the compromise is invalid, this is a case in which the Secretary of State for India in Council should be made a party.

The result is that the order of the District Munsif is set aside and the case remanded for disposal in the light of the observations made above. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Vendor and vendee—Covenant of indemnity against loss—Pre-emption decree—Vendor's liability.

A vendor who by virtue of a clause in the sale-deed takes upon himself to recoup any loss incurred by the vendee in consequence of any suit ("kisi qism ka dawa") by anybody in relation to the property sold, is bound to make good the loss on vendee's losing his land on a pre-emption decree being passed against him [p 314, col. 1.]

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Anant Ram Khosla for Lala Jagan Nath Agarwal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only points in this case are whether a vendee whose sale was pre-empted was entitled by a clause in his covenant to recover from his vendor the loss which he suffered, and whether apart from this clause on general principles his confession of judgment in the sense that he admitted the plaintiff's right to pre-empt debars him from obtaining the relief which has been given to him by both the lower Courts. Finally there is a cross-objection in which he claims Rs. 25, the sum allowed by the Trial Court and disallowed by the District Judge, being the costs incurred by him in execution in endeavouring to obtain an order from the Executing Court that his vendor was liable to make good the sum re-payable to the pre-emptor and thereby save the whole of this litigation. The relevant portion of the contract of sale runs as follows:—

"Yeh bai sahi hai aur bila kisi shart ke hai, jaidad mazkur manmuqirr ne Musamman Shams-ud-Din wa Abdur Rahman wa Munawer pisran Salah-ud-Din wa Musammut Allah Jawai bewa Salah-ud-Din qum Sheikh, sakin Hissar, se kharidi hai, agar baiannya un ka koi waris jaidad mazkur ke mutulliq kisi kism ka dawa karen aur us se koi nuqsan kisi kism ka mushtri ko ho to us nuqsan wa kharcha muqaddama ka manmuqirr bazat-i khud zimmawar hoga, aur meri jaidad uski zimmewar hogi, niz baad tahrir wasiqa haza agar koi saham wa sharik mera ya aur koi shakhs kisi kism ka dawa jaidad mubaia ki babat karega to us ki zimmewari manmuqirr ki hogi aur aise dawe se jo kuchh harj wa nuqsan mushtri ka hoga uski adaigi ka manmuqirr zimmewar hoga, mushtri ko ikhtiar hoga ke woh harjana wa nuqsan meri zat wa jaidad har kism se jis tarah chahen wasul karle"

It has been held that under this clause the vendor is liable to recoup the vendee for his losses. Counsel on appeal relies on Ghulam Jilani v. Imdad Husain (1) which, though not expressly dissented from in Wazira v. Shadi Khan (2), was certainly not followed. It appears to me that whatever may be the view taken of the words used in the contract which forms the subject-matter of Ghulam Jilani v. Imdad Husain (1) the words "aur koi shakhs kisi kism ka dawa jaidad mubaia ki babat karega" most certainly cover a pre-emption suit. The vendor guaranteed peaceful enjoyment to his vendee and the clause was not confined to any patent defect of title existing before sale, but covered the inherent and potential defect which would become tangible and real as soon as a pre-emption suit was lodged by a competent person. I find, therefore, agreeing with the learned District Judge that under this clause the defendant is liable to make good the losses by the plaintiff.

The second point appears at first sight to be very much stronger than it really is. In the pre-emption suit the defendant-vendee admitted the title of the pre-emptor and at first the vendor denied it, and an issue was framed as to whether the subject-matter of the suit really consisted of shops, regarding which there was no right of pre-emption. On going through the record of the pre-emption case I find that on the 5th of October 1917 the vendor himself stated on solemn affirmation that he did not contest the pre-emptor's right to bring the suit. Counsel urges that he may have been induced to do so because of the craven conduct of the vendee, but it is impossible to get over the fact that he himself confessed judgment on this point and cannot now plead that the whole of the losses of the suit are due to the carelessness or dishonesty of his vendee. On this point also, therefore, there is no reason why the plaintiff should not succeed.

As to the cross-objection the District Judge was apparently under the impression that this sum of Rs. 25 formed part of the costs incurred in the pre-emption case proper. They were incurred and I think bona fide in execution proceedings, and this being so I think the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

I dismiss the appeal with costs, and I accept the cross-objections also with costs. The decree will be in the same form as granted by the District Judge, i. e., against Sita Ram to the extent only that he received property from Jai Kishan Das his father.

In an appeal from a decree in a suit for redemption, the Appellate Court, in remanding the suit, directed accounts to be taken up to the date fixed for redemption. The Trial Court after inquiry found that the mortgage amount deposited was in excess of the amount due to the mortgagee. Accordingly a decree was given to the plaintiff for possession of the suit land. The question of mesne profits was left undecided.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, dated the 3rd August 1921, made in A. S. No. 1 of 1921, presented against an order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Cocanada, dated the 30th August 1920, made in E. P. No. 529 of 1919, in O. S. No. 1 of 1917 on its file.

Mr. K. Kumaraswami Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somu Sundaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case brought a suit for redemption and a decree was passed in 1917. The appeal against the decree was decided on 22nd February 1918. In that judgment the Appellate Court passed the following order:—“In a redemption suit there should be a final and complete adjustment of all the accounts between the parties upto the time of actual redemption and no claim for mesne profits can be kept outstanding or can be enforced by the mortgagor subsequently—Account should, therefore, be taken down to the date to be fixed in the decree for redemption.” A fresh enquiry was, therefore, held by the District Munsif and on 5th December 1918 he passed a decree finding that the mortgage amount deposited was in excess of the amount due to the mortgagee and that it was, therefore, unnecessary to pass decree for payment of the amount and possession to be given on payment. He accordingly gave a decree to the plaintiff for possession of the suit land and further held that the question of mesne profits was left undecided. Both the lower Courts have held that this is in itself a final decree and that this question of mesne profits not having been decided, the plaintiff is precluded from asking the Court to ascertain what those profits are. Ordinarily in a redemption suit there should be a preliminary decree, followed by a final decree. It seems to me that this decree is in fact partly final and partly preliminary. In so far as it is a decree for possession it is final, and in so far as it leaves the question of mesne profits undecided and expressly states that it was so left, it is preliminary to an ascertainment of those mesne profits. The plaintiff put in an application which purports to be under O. XXI, r. 11, for delivery of possession and for attachment of moveables under O. XXI, r. 35 and O. XXI, r. 43 and added a prayer to ascertain the mesne profits from the date of suit. This petition was put in on 3rd November 1919 and it came before a different Munsif. He held that it was not open to the plaintiff to ask for mesne profits and, therefore, dismissed the petition. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, his order was confirmed. If the Munsif intended by his order to have the ascertainment of mesne profits adjourned to a future date, these orders of dismissal are clearly wrong. The language of the decree saying that the question of mesne profits is left undecided is somewhat unusual and it is contended for the respondents that it must be taken to mean that the relief was refused and that no effect can be given to the order leaving the mesne profits unascertained. When we consider that the appellate judgment directly ordered the Munsif to take an account and ascertain the mesne profits and has given as a ground, therefore, that the mortgagor would have no right to obtain any relief in a subsequent suit, it is hardly conceivable that the Munsif would have acted exactly contrary to the orders given by the Appellate Court, even though he might have been personally of the opinion that that order was wrong. That fact has to be taken into account in considering the suggestion of the respondents. On the other hand if the interpretation put upon the decree by the appellant is correct the Munsif would not have been guilty of this disrespect of the Appellate Court's order. Although this order is not strictly in accordance with the form that it should have taken, I think we must look to the circumstances which led up the decree and interpret it accordingly. I think it is clear that it was interpreted as a preliminary decree by the appellants when they put in their subsequent application. No doubt their prayer for ascertainment of mesne profits should have been put in under O. XXXIV, but I do not think that the omission to specify the provision of law is a serious objection. If necessary, an amendment of the petition might have been ordered to bring it into conformity with strict procedure but the omission to specify O XXXIV, cannot deprive the plaintiff of his rights.

A large number of authorities have been cited before me in this respect but I do not think it is necessary to deal with them here because of the interpretation that I put upon this decree. I may refer to a Privy Council case Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Muhammad Abdul Aziz (1) in which the question of mesne profits was reserved when the decree was passed and although there was a final disposal of one portion of the subject-matter of the suit, it was held that it was open to the Court to subsequently ascertain the mesne profits and pass further decree. It seems to me that that is in accordance with what I propose to do now. I, therefore, allow this appeal and remand the Execution Petition No. 529 of 1919 to the District Munsif for disposal according to law. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in A. A. O. No. 36 of 1922 throughout. In this view the suit filed by the plaintiff to recover the mesne profits is not maintainable and, therefore, the second appeal must be dismissed. Under the circumstances I award no costs.

The proposition that where the property of a Hindu joint family has passed out of the family in execution of a decree and rights of a third party have come in, the sale cannot be set aside unless it is established that the debt was tainted with illegality or immorality, applies only to cases where the persons who challenge the transaction are sons or grandsons of the transferor.

It is only when the transfer has been made by a father or grandfather that the question of the debt having been tainted with immorality or illegality can arise. No such consideration arises when the transfer has been made by an uncle and a mere manager of a joint Hindu family. In such cases the transfer, unless it is supported by legal necessity, cannot be upheld. [p. 317, cols. 1 & 2]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 5th of August 1924.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for partition of a  $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in a house and a shop. In 1893 there was a partition suit brought by Salig Ram, a cousin of the contesting defendants' fathers, for separation of his share. That suit was decreed and separate lots were allotted to Salig Ram and his brothers. According to the judgment of the Court of first instance the lots marked yellow and red were given to Lalman and Jagannath, the fathers of the three contesting defendants. Subsequently Jagannath made a mortgage of the  $\frac{1}{4}$ th share allotted to him and Lalman in favour of one Shib Narain. A suit was brought on the basis of this mortgage deed against Jagannath and his sons, two of the contesting defendants who were impleaded as minors under the guardianship of Jagannath himself. To this suit neither Lalman nor his son Ram Prasad, the other defendant, was impleaded. The suit was decreed. The decree was sold to the present plaintiff who put it in execution, and the mortgaged property was put up at auction sale and purchased by the plaintiff. He also obtained a delivery of symbolical possession over the property purchased by him at auctions but admittedly he did not succeed in obtaining actual possession of the house and the shop.

The present suit has been instituted for an actual partition and separation of the  $\frac{1}{4}$ th share. The suit was resisted by the sons of Jagannath and his nephew on the ground that the mortgage of 1908 was without any legal necessity and was inoperative. Both the Courts below have dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court has held that Jagannath his sons and his nephew were members of a joint Hindu family and that the mortgage was without any legal necessity. It has further held that the mortgage debt was not tainted with any illegality or immorality but that inasmuch as the plaintiff had not obtained actual possession of the property, the property could not be said to have passed out of the family so as to make the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council applicable.

The first point to consider in second appeal is whether the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the family is joint must be accepted. Prima facie it is clearly a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, urged that in the litigation of 1899 the shares of Lalman and Jagannath also were separated and that, therefore, the partition decree of that year involved a separation between the two brothers Jagannath and Lalman also. This argument is based on the passage in the judgment of the Court of first instance that two lots yellow and red belonged to Lalman and Jagannath. That however does not show that each got one lot and not that the two lots were given to both jointly. I, therefore, feel bound to accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Jagannath his sons and nephew Ram Prasad formed a joint Hindu family in 1908 and do so even now.

It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the view of the lower Appellate Court is that in order to make the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Girdharee Lal v. Kantoo Lal (1) applicable, it is not necessary that actual possession should have been taken by the purchaser third party and that all that is necessary is that the property should have passed out of the family under a sale in execution of a decree. This contention may have some force, but the plaintiff cannot succeed in the present case because of the finding that the nephew Ram Prasad is also joint with Jagannath. In all the cases where it has been held that where property has passed out of the family in execution of a decree and rights of a third party have come in, the sale cannot be set aside unless it is established that the debt was tainted with illegality or immorality, the persons who were challenging the transaction were sons or grandsons of the transferor. It is only when the transfer has been made by a father or grandfather that the question of the debt having been tainted with immorality or illegality can arise. No such consideration arises when the transfer has been made by an uncle and a mere manager of a joint Hindu family. In such cases the transfer unless it is supported by legal necessity cannot be upheld. The learned Vakil for the appellant has referred me to the cases of Ram Chandra v. Muhammad Nur (2), Jadubir Pande v. Gajadhar (3) and Gajadhar Pande v. Jadubir Pande (4) but in all these three cases the persons who wanted to challenge the alienations were sons of the transferors. I am, therefore, of opinion that on the ground last mentioned the plaintiff cannot succeed. The finding that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage of 1908 is fatal to this case. When the plea of want of legal necessity raised by one of the contesting defendants succeeds the whole suit must stand dismissed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 7th June 1921.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for the Appellant.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, for Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the owner, Kanwar Ranzor Singh, from the award dated the 7th of June 1921 made by the District Judge of Ambala under the Land Acquisition Act. By Notification No. 2588 G. dated the 20th of May 1919 the Punjab Government declared its intention of acquiring the Morcyu Estate situated in Simla for a public purpose, namely, residences for public servants. The Collector by his award, dated the 20th of November 1920, awarded Rs. 29,120-0-0 as the market value of the estate, and Rs. 4,368-0-0 the usual allowance of 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition; the total amount awarded was Rs. 33,488 0 0. The owner having objected to the award the matter was referred to the District Judge of Ambala for determination of the market value of the property acquired, but the learned Judge declined to enhance the award of the Collector.

At the commencement of the hearing the learned Government Advocate took a preliminary objection that the appeal was barred by limitation. It was filed on the 12th of October 1921. That was the first day on which the High Court opened after the long vacation which began on the 29th of July 1921. The memorandum of appeal was returned to the Counsel for the appellant on the 4th of November 1921 on the ground that the Court-fee paid was insufficient. It was re-filed by the Counsel on the 7th of November 1921 with the following endorsement:—

“The Court-fee originally paid by the appellant is correct. But to avoid further loss of time, the deficiency is made up and additional Court-fee is paid”

In our opinion the Court-fee originally paid by the appellant was insufficient; but it appears that the Counsel was misled by the award of the learned District Judge, the last of which runs as follows:—

The objector did not state in his written application the amount which he claimed but his Vakil stated before my predecessor that he claimed Rs. 70,852-0-0. I, therefore, allow the Secretary of State his costs on the difference between this amount and the amount awarded by the Collector, viz., on (Rs. 70,852-0-0 minus Rs. 33,488-0-0) = Rs. 37,364-0-0.

The Court-fee originally paid was on Rs. 37,364-0-0. As a fact it should have been on Rs. 70,852-0-0 minus Rs. 29,120 0 0 = Rs. 41,732-0-0. An appeal filed on the 7th of November would be barred by limitation, but as we hold that the appellant was misled by an error of the District Judge and the insufficiency in the Court fee originally paid was due to a bona fide mistake on his part he is entitled to the benefit of s. 149 of the C. P. C. and s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. We, therefore, overrule the objection of the learned Government Advocate.

The only point involved on the merits of this appeal is the market value of the property acquired. The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied upon the following evidence in support of his appeal:—

(1) Certain offers made by the Superintending Engineer, Imperial Circle, Simla, but declined by the owner.

(2) Evidence of certain witnesses who give their opinion as to the value of the property.

(3) The evidence of Mr. Goldstine, an Engineer of Simla, who prepared an estimate of the value of the building and the land, and

(4) The prices realized on sales of other properties in Simla.

As regards (1) it appears that after the issue of the Notification the Superintending Engineer started negotiations with the owner with a view to settle the market value of the property in order to avoid the contingency of going to Court and in the course of such negotiations he made offers of Rs. 40,000-0-0 to Rs. 42,500-0-0 to the owner which were declined. Two of the offers are alleged to be oral ones made by Mr. Aikeman, Superintending Engineer, and the last one was made in writing by Mr. Hope, Superintending Engineer, by means of his letter dated the 25th of February 1920. In this letter Mr. Hope clearly stated that the offer was being made without prejudice. The learned District Judge held that evidence as to these offers was inadmissible under the provisions of s. 23 of the Indian Evidence Act. The learned Counsel for the appellant has contended before us that s. 23 does not apply to the facts of this case. He argued that the section applies only when there is a dispute between the parties and an offer is made to settle such a dispute. It was contended by the learned Counsel that after the notification there was no occasion for any negotiations between the Government and the owner as it was not within the power of the latter to refuse to sell the property. We consider, however, that it was still open to the owner to take the matter to the Civil Courts on the question of amount of compensation, and it was in order to avoid this contingency that negotiations were started by the Superintending Engineers. In our opinion it is clearly established that the offers were made by these Engineers under circumstances from which the Court ought to infer that the parties agreed together that the evidence of the offers should not be given and agreeing with the Court below, we hold that the evidence as to these offers is not admissible.

Regarding the evidence of witnesses who give their opinion as to the market value of the Moroyu Estate, we observe that these witnesses have given no reasons to show that they were in a position to judge of the market value of this estate. Ordinarily such evidence is seldom accepted as a satisfactory guide to determine the market value of property, but in this case it is almost worthless.

As regards (3) Mr. Goldstine has not produced any detailed estimate of his valuation. All that we have on the record is a letter signed by him addressed to the owner in which he stated that in his opinion the value of the buildings on the estate was Rs. 49,852 and the value of the site was Rs. 21,000, making a total of Rs. 70,852. In the absence of a detailed estimate it is not possible to check the correctness of the figures supplied by the witnesses. We cannot, therefore, accept this evidence.

(4) The Collector awarded 16 times the net rental for 16 judgments dated the 26th of April 1916 of the Chief Court of the Punjab. The notifications in those cases were issued in 1916 and the properties then acquired had changed hands shortly before the issue of the notifications and, therefore, the price then fetched was considered by the Chief Court as the best guide in determining their respective market values. This property has not changed hands for a considerable time. It is situated about 220 yards from the Viceregal Lodge and has always been occupied by high Government Officials. At the time of the acquisition it was occupied by the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp, Secretary to the Government of India. It has a tennis court and a large compound. Its situation and position are both stated to be very good. Its area is 2.15 acres. All these factors contribute materially to appreciate the market value of property. The appellants' witnesses have mentioned certain sales of properties alleged to be inferior to the present one for amounts larger than the market value awarded in this case; but we find that the evidence is mostly hearsay and cannot, therefore, be admitted. Some of the witnesses stated that the market value of house property in Simla was 20 times the net rental while one thought that it was so much as 22 times the gross rental. It is impossible to act on such evidence unsupported by any instances, and there is a vast difference between 20 times the net rental and 22 times the gross rental. There is no evidence on the record that the Moroyu Estate has any potential value beyond the income from its rent. Moreover, the house is old. Having, however, regard to the fact that 16 times the net rental was awarded in one case in 1916 and 18 times in the other, and that this property has certain undoubted advantages, we consider that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary 18 times the net rent will be its fair market value. Mr. Goldstine states that the owners of old houses in Simla get about 5 or 5½ per cent interest in house property. At 5 per cent. the market value would be 20 times the net rental, and at 5 per cent. it will be about 18 times.

The actual rent of the house at the time of the acquisition was Rs. 2,600. It is claimed on behalf of the appellant that the actual rent is low and that the proper rent of the house is somewhere between Rs. 3,500 and Rs. 4,000. We do not think that there is any material on the record to justify our assuming that Rs. 2,600 is a low rent. In order to calculate the net rent of a house the usual rule in Simla appears to be to deduct 30 per cent. out of the gross rent, being 10 per cent. on account of furniture, 10 per cent. on account of repairs and 10 per cent. on account of Municipal taxes. The net rent of the Moryu estate as found by the Collector is Rs. 1,820 and this figure multiplied by 18 comes Rs. 32,760. The usual allowance of 15 per cent. on this figure comes to Rs. 4,914.

We accept the appeal so as to enhance the award to Rs. 32,760 as a market value and adding Rs. 4,914 the usual 15 per cent. the total award will be Rs. 37,674. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case we leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

8, 10 TO 12—RESPONDENTS.

Inam grant—Grant “to representatives and assigns” —Death of grantee before date of grant—Grant, whether enures to heirs of grantee—Board’s Standing Order 52 (2).

An inam title-deed issued by Government ran as follows:—“The inam is now confirmed to you, your representatives and assigns, to hold or dispose of as you or they think proper”. The grantee was dead on the date of grant, and the question was whether the grant enured for the benefit of the heirs of the grantee:

Held, that having regard to the Board’s Standing Order 52 (2), the words “representatives and assigns” should not be interpreted as mere words of limitation but as effective to secure the grant to the heirs of the deceased grantee. [p 322, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 112 of 1922 (A. S. No. 309 of 1920, on the file of the District Court and A. S. No. 161 of 1920 of the Sub-Court), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Vizagapatam, in O. S. No. 83 of 1918.

Mr. C. Rama Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the nearest heirs of one Venkataraju in whose favour (with others) three inam title-deeds were issued in 1906 and 1907. Both the lower Courts have found that as Venkataraju was dead on the day on which these title-deeds were issued, he obtained no right to the suit property, and, therefore, the plaintiffs as his heirs have got no right.

The title-deed runs as follows: “Title-deed granted to (1) Devaguptapu Subbarayudu, (2) Devaguptapu Chendramma, (3) Devaguptapu Venkataraju and four others as per register;” and it recites,

“The inam is now confirmed to you, your representatives and assigns, to hold or dispose of as you or they think proper.”

The question at issue is whether this is a grant to Venkataraju and his representatives and assigns, or whether these words are words of mere limitation as contended for by the respondent. The treatment of such words as being words of limitation is a legal technicality and the question is, whether the Government in issuing this deed intended to adopt this technicality or whether they intended to use the words in their ordinary meaning. The words are, no doubt, ambiguous; therefore, I think, it is relevant to refer to the Board’s Standing Order 52 (2) which deals with this question. There it is laid down,

“In case of the death of the holder of an enfranchised inam before the actual delivery to him of the title-deed, the deed should, in the first place, be entrusted to the Revenue Authorities for safe custody. The Collector should make inquiry as to who is the party entitled, as heir of the deceased, to receive the deed, and is enjoined to hand it over, exactly as received, to the heir of the deceased." If these words were words of mere limitation, the grant to the deceased would fail, and if it was intended to give a fresh grant to the heirs, it would be necessary to issue a grant afresh in their name. Inasmuch as the Government have declared that that is not the procedure to be adopted, I think it is clear that these words are not mere words of limitation but are effective to secure the grant to the heirs of the deceased grantee, which is the intention of Government as expressed in the above Board's Standing Order. That being so, the plaintiffs are entitled to the properties covered by the grant.

A question is raised by the respondent as to the non-joinder of parties, but under O. I, r. 13, C. P. C., this should have been raised in the Trial Court and must now be deemed to have been waived.

As the lower Appellate Court has not recorded any finding on the other issues in this suit, this decree must be set aside and the appeal remanded for disposal on the other issues. Costs will abide the result.

Stamp fee on the appeal memo. will be refunded to the appellant.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 2nd July 1921.

Dr. Nand Lal and Mr. Amolak Ram, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. S. Bhagat and Amar Nath Chopra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 4th October 1917 the Punjab Co-operative Bank in liquidation filed a suit for Rs. 27,950-15-9 against Baldeo Das and his three brothers. It was alleged that the defendants and their father, Kishan Chand, who died about 1909, constituted a joint Hindu family, which also carried on contract work and a brick kiln business under the name of Kishan Chand and sons. On the father's death the eldest son, Baldeo Das, became the manager of the joint family and the business carried on by it and in that capacity executed on the 11th October 1911 two promissory notes in favour of the plaintiff Bank, one for Rs. 16,300 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum and one for Rs. 3,700 with interest at 11 annas per cent. per-mensem, and for the second promissory note (para. 4 of the plaint) deposited two sale-deeds of land by way of equitable mortgage. In para. 10 of the plaint, however, it was prayed that a decree for the full sum claimed should be passed against the mortgaged property as well as against the other property of the defendants and against them personally. There was thus a contradiction between the two paragraphs of the plaint, quoted above, in one place the allegation being that there was an equitable mortgage of land only as regards the second and smaller promissory note, while at the end the claim was that the total amount sued for should be a charge on the land in question. During the pendency of the suit, Thakar Das, who used to be the manager of the Bank before it went into liquidation, was examined as P. W. No. 3 on the 7th March 1918. He deposed that the title-deeds were handed over to the Bank when Rs. 2,000 were given to Baldeo Das, on the 21st October 1908, long before the promissory notes were taken. At that time the total advances made amounted to Rs. 12,200. He further said that the title-deeds were to be security for the whole loan advanced. The words "up to date" in the English record after "advanced" do not occur in the vernacular record. The proceedings were ex parte throughout against Baldeo Das, but the suit was contested by his three brothers, who finally entered into a compromise with the plaintiff Bank on the 7th April 1919. By this compromise the Bank gave up its claim against the three brothers while the brothers admitted that the decretal amount would be a charge on the 17 kanals 4 marlas of land in question which was Baldeo Das's self-acquired property and which was under equitable mortgage with the Bank and that his other self-acquired property including his shares in the plaintiff Bank and his one-fourth share of the ancestral property would also be liable. As against this, the plaintiff Bank admitted that the three brothers were not joint with Baldeo Das, and that their share in the ancestral property would, therefore, not be liable and that the suit as against them should be dismissed. After this compromise, a decree was passed ex parte against Baldeo Das, and by that decree a charge was created on the land in question. As the presumption was that all four brothers were joint, it is obvious that prima facie the compromise was to the advantage of all the parties.

In the meantime, the Punjab Commercial Syndicate and Krishan Lal filed a suit on the 6th May 1918 against Baldeo Das and his three brothers for Rs. 27,000. The dealings in this case also had been by Baldeo Das who did not appear, but the suit was contested by his three brothers. The Syndicate compromised with them on the 18th July 1919 in exactly similar terms to those entered into by them with the Punjab Co-operative Bank except that there was no charge upon any land, as there was no mortgage. The three brothers admitted that Baldeo Das's one-fourth share of the ancestral property and his self-acquired property should be liable while a list of the known ancestral property was given. In return for this the Syndicate released the three brothers and their shares of the ancestral property from liability and obtained an ex parte decree against Baldeo Das only.

Then on the 24th February 1920, the above named Syndicate and Krishan Lal sued the above-named Bank along with Baldeo Das and his three brothers for a declaration that the words "against the land mortgaged measuring about 17 kanals" in the decree obtained by the Bank in accordance with the compromise of the 7th April 1919 should not affect the Syndicate, that was to say, that the said land was not mortgaged with the Bank for the amount of their decree, and that the Syndicate could also execute its decree against the said land. It was mentioned in the plaint that according to para. 4 of the Bank's plaint (as already described) it was only alleged that there was an equitable mortgage of the land as regards the smaller promissory note of Rs. 3,700, but it was not mentioned that in para. 10 of the Bank's plaint it was prayed that the whole sum sued for should be a charge on the land. After alluding to the compromise of the 7th April 1919, it was stated that in accordance with it the Bank by fraud obtained a decree for Rs. 27,950-15-9 against Baldeo Das on the condition that he should be personally liable, and that the decretal amount should form a charge on the land in question. In this way the other defendants, that is, Baldeo Das's brothers, got themselves absolved from liability, while in reality the land was not mortgaged with the Bank and neither the whole amount claimed nor any part of it was a charge on the land. It was further alleged that Baldeo Das's brothers entered into a compromise affecting their brother to which he was not a party, and inserted therein conditions affecting him whereas they had no power to make a compromise encumbering the land in question. The plaintiff Syndicate, therefore, claimed that they as decree-holders were also entitled to execute their decree against this land. These are the only allegations in the plaint. This suit has been dismissed and it is an appeal from its dismissal, which is now before us.

The defendant-Bank raised several preliminary questions and also pleaded that there was no fraud, as the land was mortgaged with them for the debt due to the Bank. The plaintiff-Syndicate in their replication stated that they could bring the suit as they suffered under the decree in question and that they had a cause of action because the Bank had obtained their decree by fraud and collusion. No attempt was made further to define what the fraud and collusion was.

The Senior Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, held inter alia that, as the money realised by the sale of the disputed land was lying in Court, a suit for a mere declaration lay because the effect of a decree if given, would be to allow the Syndicate a rateable distribution in the net assets; that s. 73, C. P. C., did not bar the suit; and that the decree which was attacked could only be avoided if there had been a fraud (a) either upon the Court or (b) upon the defendants in that case in the conduct of the proceedings as an extrinsic collateral act, or (c) unless there had been fraudulent collusion directed against the alleged injured creditor.

On the issues of the merits, he held that the fraud alleged in the pleadings was that no land was in reality hypothecated with the Bank and that the defendants other than Baldeo Das, who was absent, colluded with the Bank to charge the land in order to extricate themselves from liability. He further held that there was no fraudulent collusion of this nature and that, in any case, if Baldeo Das's brothers did agree to the charge on the land in consideration of the claim being given up against them, this would not give the plaintiff-Syndicate a cause of action, as it was necessary for them to show that the fraud was directed against them. He also held that there was no allegation in the pleadings that any fraud was directed against the plaintiff-Syndicate and that if there had been, there was no evidence to support it. Lastly, he held that it was not alleged in the plaint that there was any fraud on the Court, and that, in any case, no fraud upon the Court had been made out.

The grounds of appeal are somewhat diffuse. Grounds Nos. 1, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 are of a general nature and require no discussion. In ground No. 13 it was prayed that the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the land should be stayed pending the decision of the appeal. This was not done so that the money must have been paid to the Bank. The other grounds taken amount to this (1) that there was a fraud upon the Court [ground No. 2 (a)] and (2) that there was a fraud directed against the plaintiffs-appellants [ground No. 2 (b)], in that the compromise was designed with intent to defeat their claim [ground No. 2 (c)], their suit being then pending (ground No. 7), while (3) grounds Nos. 3, 4 and 6 go on to state that none of the land in suit was mortgaged by Baldeo Das with the Bank and that para. (4) of the Bank's plaint showed that in any case the hypothecation was only as regards the promissory note of Rs. 3,700, and that the decree was (therefore) obtained by fraud by the Bank in collusion with Baldeo Das's brothers.

It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (1) that when fraud is charged against the defendants, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. Now in the present case, if the pleadings are looked at, the only fraud alleged is that Baldeo Das's brothers and the Bank colluded together to obtain for the Bank a charge upon the disputed land which in reality was not mortgaged with them, this having been done in order that the brothers should escape liability. This is the best possible statement of the appellants' case. There is no allegation that there was a fraud upon the Court or directed towards the Syndicate though it is noted in the pleadings that the Syndicate was adversely affected by the decree in question but nothing more and that they for this reason had a cause of action. We would, therefore, hold that the appellants cannot be allowed to go beyond their own statement of their case, though, as we have heard appellants' Counsel on all the grounds of appeal, we think it will be the best course to record our findings on all the points raised.

The case for the appellants, therefore, was that the Bank obtained their ex parte decree with a charge on the disputed land against Baldeo Das by fraud in that, in reality, the land was not mortgaged with the Bank but Baldeo Das's brothers admitted that it was mortgaged and that it was their brother's self-acquired property in return for the Bank's releasing them from liability as members of a joint Hindu family with him. In order to establish their case, the appellants relied on the record of the previous case and examined two witnesses. The first witness was Lajpat Rai, one of Baldeo Das's brothers. He denied that there was any talk at the time of the compromise to the effect that the decree should be made a charge on the disputed land in case other creditors should step in. It was not even mentioned at that time that there were other creditors. Though he and his two brothers, who contested the suit with him, disputed the hypothecation in their written statement, they admitted it later, he explained, when the sale-deeds were produced by the Bank and

(1) 15 O. 533; 15 I. A. 119; 12 Ind. Jur. 254; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 168; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 939 (P. C.).

Thakar Das made his statement as a witness. The second witness knew nothing about the transaction. No further attempt was made to prove that the land in question was not hypothecated with the Bank or what the fraud was. The appellants' oral evidence was thus in favour of the Bank and against the appellants, whatever the fraud alleged be considered to be. This leaves to be considered only the circumstances. In connection with them appellants' Counsel laid great stress on para. 4 of the Bank's plaint, and the fact that the Syndicate's suit was then pending. He also commented at great length on the statement of Thakar Das, P. W. No. 3, in the Bank's suit, and stated that it was not sufficient to enable the Court to pass an ex parte decree in favour of the Bank against Baldeo Das. All this, however, amounts to little or nothing. At the time the Bank's suit was filed, it was in liquidation and its officials were dispersed. This might easily account for the statement in para. 4 of its plaint, which was contradicted by para. 10. The compromise in question might well have been entered into by the Bank and Baldeo Das's brothers, even if there had been no other creditor. There was a presumption against the brothers that they were joint with Baldeo Das. At the same time the contest was delaying the Bank from realising its debt. The brothers had seen that the title-deeds were produced by the Bank and they had heard the statement of Thakar Das, who used to be its manager, to the effect that the title-deeds were deposited as a cover for the whole loan in 1903. It was thus quite reasonable on their part to admit that the land in dispute was the self-acquired property of Baldeo Das and was mortgaged with the Bank and that they had no concern with it, in return for the Bank giving up its claim against them. The Bank gained even more than that; for the brothers also admitted that Baldeo Das had a one-fourth share in the joint ancestral property and that the shares of the Bank held by him were his self-acquired property and not family property. In this way the brothers were estopping themselves from denying these facts in the subsequent execution proceedings. From these circumstances combined with the fact that the appellants have not even tried to establish that there was not an equitable mortgage with the Bank, it is impossible to draw the deduction that the Bank and the brothers of Baldeo Das colluded together to defraud Baldeo Das or to obtain a fraudulent charge on the disputed land for the Bank. There was an eminently reasonable compromise entered into between them and thereafter the Court, with the record and the evidence before it, passed the ex parte decree in question against Baldeo Das and, on the basis of the compromise, dismissed the suit against his brothers. The mere fact that the appellants' suit was pending, does not make such a fair compromise appear even suspicious. As the alleged fraud was not established the suit was properly dismissed on this ground alone.

We would go further and hold that the present suit did not lie on the allegation of fraud made. It has been held in Janki Kuer v. Mahabir Singh (2), that an ex parte decree cannot be re-opened except on the ground of fraud as an extrinsic collateral fact vitiating the proceedings in which the decree was obtained and it is not sufficient to allege that it was obtained on a false claim. Even if an ex parte decree is obtained on perjured evidence, it cannot be set aside on that ground, Kripasindhu Panigrahi v. Nandu Charan Panigrahi (3). The following passage from Venkatarama Aiyar v. South Indian Bank, Limited (4) may be quoted in extenso:—

"The passages relied upon in the books referred to above lay stress on the fact that a fraud practised on the debtor is not itself any ground for interference by third parties. The defendant holds a decree which finally determines that the relation of creditor and debtor exists between him and his judgment-debtors and which is conclusive as to the amount of the debt as between the parties (and in the present case, as to there being a charge on the land),..... The plaintiffs have failed to establish fraud or collusion against themselves. In these circumstances I think the principle of the decision above referred to applies, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to attack the decree by showing that it is not based on a real debt."

It follows from this that it was necessary for the appellants to allege that there was collusion directed against themselves and this they did not do. Their suit failed on this ground also.

(2) 58 Ind. Cas. 317; 2 U. P. L. R. (Pat.) 242.

Even if it be taken that the allegations in the pleadings amount to an averment of fraud directed against the appellants, it is obvious from the above discussion that there is no evidence of any such fraud or collusion. It is unnecessary to go over the same ground again as it has been shown that the compromise complained of would have been a fair and reasonable compromise as between the Bank and Baldeo Das's brothers, even if the appellants' suit had not then been pending. The burden was, therefore, heavy upon the appellants to establish that it was the result of collusion to injure them. The evidence led by the appellants did not help them. It has not been shown that the land was in fact not hypothecated with the Bank. It does not affect the case that the result was detrimental to the present appellants, though it must be noted that there is no evidence on the record to show that it was detrimental to their interests and that they could not execute their decree in full otherwise. Fraud and collusion against the appellants were not alleged nor have they been made out.

Obviously there was no fraud on the Court. That also was not alleged in the pleadings. The ex parte decree against Baldeo Das was passed on evidence. It would not matter if that evidence was insufficient, or if the decree was obtained on perjured evidence. Before the decree could be vacated, it would have to be established that it was the result of collusion and fraud directed against the appellants. As to this there is neither direct nor indirect evidence.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

In execution of a mortgage decree, a puisne mortgagee, who had been made a pro forma defendant in the suit, applied to be made a party to the execution proceedings and to have a notice under r. 66 of O. ### JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—I am clearly of opinion that the application, in the form in which it was presented, was not maintainable, and that the Courts below should have refused it. It was urged before us that the application was one under s. 47; but what was the question that the Courts had to try? The question was whether, not having been made a party to the execution proceedings, the respondent was bound by a sale held in his absence. But this is precisely the question which he raised in his application of the 11th September 1922. The Court held that he was a pro forma defendant and was not entitled to a notice under O. XXI, r. 66. I think the decision of the Court was wrong. But the applicant was satisfied with the order, and did not prefer an appeal therefrom. The sale has now taken place, and he applies for an order that he is not liable to be evicted inasmuch as notice under O. XXI, r. 66 was not served on him. The Courts below have acceded to his application, and, as a result of their orders, the applicant in effect becomes the owner of the properties, though he was a puisne mortgagee and failed to redeem the prior mortgage.

If his present application is to be regarded as an application under s. 47, the application of the 11th September 1922 was equally an application under s. 47. If that be so, then the order passed on the application of the 11th September 1922 operates as res judicata, and it is not open to the applicant to re-agitate the question whether he was entitled to notice of execution. In order to succeed in the present application, the applicant must establish that he was entitled to notice under O. XXI, r. 66; but this question he cannot raise having regard to the order of the Court on his application of the 11th September 1922.

It was next urged that the application was one under O. XXI, r. 100. But r. 100 applies to a case where a person other than the judgment-debtor is dispossessed of immoveable property; but here the applicant is the judgment-debtor, and so far as we are informed, he has not been dispossessed of the property yet.

Lastly, it was contended that the application was one substantially under O. XXI, r. 90; but it is sufficient to point out that there is no complaint here of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale.

There was no merit whatever in the application, and the Courts below should not have stretched the law to give the applicant the status of an owner. He is a puisne mortgagee and a decree was fairly and properly obtained against him. He failed to redeem within the time fixed by the decree. He has made no attempt to satisfy the mortgage decree; and the position now taken up by him is one of absolute technicality, namely, that he should have been served with notice under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Code. The technical objection may be met by the technical reply that this is precisely the issue which he raised in his application of the 11th September 1922, and that the order passed on that application operates as res judicata between the parties.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the orders passed in the Courts below, and dismiss the application with costs in all the Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Appeal, second—Finding of fact—Question for trial not understood, effect of.

A finding of fact cannot be disturbed in second appeal, provided the facts found by the lower Appellate Court are relevant and the finding is based on evidence proper for consideration [p. 329, col. 1.]

It is not necessary that the whole of the evidence given in the case should have been considered in the lower Appellate Court and still less that every part of it should have been mentioned in the judgment; interference is not justified by an apparent omission to consider some material part or even the main part of it. Where, however, the lower Appellate Court has entirely misunderstood the question it had to try, its finding cannot be upheld in second appeal. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 22nd of July 1922, reversing that of the Second Munsif, Bhandara, dated the 27th of March 1922.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Chintaram and the two defendants Vithoba and Tukaram all belong to the Kalar caste. The first two live in Warad and the third in Borgaon, which is not far away, and they appear to be the sons of three brothers. The plaintiff alleged that by a registered sale-deed, dated the 3rd of February 1921, Raghunath, the father of Vithoba, sold him for Rs. 156 his absolute occupancy holding consisting of field No. 420/4 (45) and field No. 423-9 (90), and that in the following Mrig, that is to say the second fortnight of June, the two defendants ousted him from the larger field No. 423/9. Raghunath, it appears, died in April of that year. Chintaram further stated that he had lost the original sale-deed, but gave no details in the plaint of the time or manner of the loss. In the appellate judgment it is incorrectly stated that the allegation in the plaint was that the loss occurred in what the learned Additional District Judge in his judgment calls the "month of Mrig" The same term is used in the plaint, but in reference to another event.

Stripped of irrelevancies the version of the facts really put forward by the defendants was as follows: There was a decree for Rs. 67-12-0 against Raghunath and he was otherwise deeply indebted. He, therefore, arranged to execute a bogus sale deed in favour of the plaintiff. For payment of the decree he borrowed Rs. 52, from the plaintiff Chintaram, and executed the sale-deed for Rs. 156, the balance being untrue entered in the deed as due for previous loans. There was never any intention of making any real sale and no consideration was paid excepting the Rs. 52, nor was possession of either field ever given to the ostensible purchaser. But after Raghunath's death Chintaram showed signs of treating the sale-deed as a genuine and valid document, and so the matter was discussed in the presence of others on the 13th of June, though no formal panchayat was convened. As a result of that discussion Chintaram agreed that inasmuch as he had actually paid only the Rs. 52, which had been given to Raghunath in cash when the document was registered and as this was just a third of the whole stated consideration of the sale-deed, he should be given only the smaller of the two fields, which is just half the size of the other, and the latter should remain with Vithoba. Chintaram himself recorded a note of this agreement on the back of the sale-deed. At the same time and place the first defendant Vithoba executed a document leasing the larger field for one year to the second defendant Tukaram, which Chintaram also signed as an attesting witness. Later, that is on the 16th of October 1921, the lease to Tukaram was converted into a sale by a registered document.

The defendants in their pleadings denied knowledge of the execution of the sale-deed by Raghunath, and in almost the same breath made their allegations of what was done about it at the panchayat. They also pleaded that secondary evidence of its existence and contents could not be given for the reason that it was not lost but intentionally suppressed, for the purpose of concealing Chintaram's own endorsement on it. It does not appear to have struck any body that the allegations in regard to that endorsement are not only an admission but an affirmation of the existence and execution and contents of the document, and that those matters require no further proof. Much argument seems to have been wasted on this point, different views being taken in the two Courts below, and the petition of appeal here challenges that of the lower Appellate Court.

The plaintiff was apparently unable to deny his signature on the lease of the 13th of June 1921. He, however, "denied" the document, whatever that may mean when it is coupled with an admission that as far as he knows it was executed and that he signed it himself as an attesting witness. The latter admission, however, is qualified by the statement that Vithoba represented to him that the document was to be a lease of some other field, and he signed it when only the first two lines had been written and then went away. It was then urged at considerable length that neither the lease nor the sale to Tukaram could convey any title, as they were both subsequent to the sale to the plaintiff, and the legality of the "award" of the panchayat was also impeached. Neither the lease nor the sale was pleaded as a basis of any title, nor was there any allegation of an arbitration or an award: all three matters were put in merely as evidence in support of the allegation that on the 13th of June 1921 the plaintiff agreed that the larger field should be retained by Vithoba and the smaller one given to him and that no more of the consideration of the sale was to be paid by him than he had already paid. His pleadings ended with a statement that the loss of the sale-deed occurred "about the time of Mrig" during a journey from Warad to Bhandara.

On those pleadings and the evidence adduced by the parties the suit was dismissed in the first Court on the finding that loss of the original sale-deed had not been proved and, therefore, secondary evidence of its existence and contents could not be given. This decree was set aside in appeal on the following findings, stated as far as possible in the learned Additional District Judge's own words. He held "that the original sale-deed is lost and that secondary evidence is admissible in evidence to prove the same," and further that, in the absence of rebutting evidence, the secondary evidence adduced by the plaintiff proved "that the sale-deed was for consideration and that it was not nominal." It is next found that there was no arbitration and no award, and "the whole story about the panchayat and the award is false and untrue". There is a complete avoidance of a finding on the question whether the plaintiff signed the lease of the 13th of June 1921 with knowledge of its contents or signed it under the impression that it was to be a lease of other land when only the first two lines had been written. All there is on this point is a finding that there is nothing to show that the attestation of the document by the plaintiff induced the lessee Tukaram to believe that the field belonged to his lessor Vithoba, and "the attestation in question does not, therefore, operate as an estoppel."

It was laid down by the Privy Council in Durga Chowdhry v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhry (1), that an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may be, cannot be made the basis of a second appeal. Such findings of fact as there are in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court cannot be described as anything less than gross and inexcusable errors, and it would seem that in writing that judgment the learned Judge was fitting the material to a predetermined result, not working on it to its natural result. That is an entirely wrong method and one bound to lead to error, however unconsciously it may be adopted.

But I would be precluded from disturbing the findings of fact in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, however strongly I might think they were opposed to any really sane view of the evidence, provided the facts found were relevant and the findings were based on evidence proper for consideration. It is not necessary that the whole of the evidence given in the case should have been considered in the lower Appellate Court and still less that every part of it should have been mentioned in the judgment; interference is not justified by an apparent omission to consider some material part or even the main part of it. The proposition that it is so justified has, however, been accepted in this Court till it has become an established practice, and it is enunciated in several published rulings among which I need only mention my own in Raoji v. Warlu (2), though that proposition was very definitely rejected by the Privy Council in the case mentioned, which was an appeal from a judgment of this Court. It was followed by Ismay, J. C. in Tanto v. Gajadhar (3), but since then appears to have dropped out of sight.

It has been suggested that their Lordships did not lay down any such strict rule in that case. There can be little doubt about that, from the remarks in the judgment on the Calcutta case of Futtehma Begum v. Mohammad Ausur (4) and the Allahabad case of Nivath Singh v. Bhikki

Singh (5), the views expressed in which were not accepted as a correct statement of the law. If there were any doubt it would be cleared by the remarks made by their Lordships in Shivabasava v. Sangappa (6), on this and another previous judgment of the Board in Anangamanjari Chowdhry v. Tripura Sundari Chowdhry (7). The same rule was also laid down negatively in Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhry (8). In Damusa v. Abdul Samad (9), their Lordships did uphold a refusal by this Court to accept concurrent findings of fact by the two lower Courts, but that refusal was based on the opinion that both those Courts had misconceived the real question they had to try.

Now the one question for trial in the present case was this: did the plaintiff admit on the 13th of June 1921 that only Rs. 52 of the consideration of his sale-deed had been paid and agree that the rest should remain unpaid and that Vithoba should retain the larger of the two fields and he himself should take the smaller? The judgment of the lower Court does not even approach that question, but deals, apart from it, with two at the most of the subsidiary issues of fact on which the answer to it depends. That answer must, therefore, be given here under s. 103 of the C. P. C., and the learned Pleader for the respondent was unable to urge that on a proper consideration of the case the answer could be anything but an affirmative.

The appearance of the document of the 13th of June 1921, in which Chintaram's admitted signature appears below that of another attesting witness, makes his unsupported story of having signed it when only the first two lines had been written even more ridiculous than it is in itself. That document alone is sufficient proof of the allegations of the defendants, which are otherwise well supported, and sufficient disproof of the essentially improbable story of the plaintiff, which is unsupported except by his own deposition, which in most other respects is obviously untrue. It seems to me still more patent that he never lost the sale deed but has intentionally suppressed or destroyed it, and, therefore, that it does bear the endorsement in his hand which the defendants allege; no sane person outside a Court of Justice would accept for a single moment as anything but an obvious and brazen lie his ridiculous story of the loss of the document, though in many Courts the application of wrong standards and principles has led to a very general impression that a Judge must pretend to believe in the truth of what he knows to be untrue, and must act as if it were true. The definitions of "proved" and "disproved" in s. 3 of the Evidence Act are perfectly clear.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit will be restored. The plaintiff-respondent will pay all the costs of the litigation in all three Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 177—legal representatives on record—Limitation.

Article 177 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, which prescribes the period of limitation for an application to bring on the record the legal representatives of a deceased respondent, was not in any manner affected by the passing of the Amending Act XXVI of 1920. It was not till the Amending Act XI of 1923 was passed that the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 177 was reduced from six months to ninety days.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarnagar at Meerut.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Nehal Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Surendra Nath Sen, Girdhari Lal Agarwala, Panna Lal and Gopi Nath Kunzru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion this appeal must succeed. The learned Judge says this ignorance of the law is no excuse. It is a dangerous proposition. We think that almost any excuse for ignorance might be accepted under these circumstances if it were necessary for us to consider whether we ought to extend the time. But we are of opinion that no extension of time, or concession of any kind, is required by the appellant. The difficulty has been to ascertain what the law is. It now turns out, that the appellant was right and the Judge was wrong. The Punjab High Court, [cf. Gobind Das v. Rup Kishore (1)] after an exhaustive enquiry have ascertained that when the Act of 1920 was enacted by the Government of India, the period provided in the appropriate column opposite Art. 177 was "six months." No slovenly use of the word "ditto" a word which ought to have no place in any Statute at all, has anything to do with the matter. The period was six months.

The Amending Act, XXVI of 1920, did not touch Art. 177. Therefore, after the Amending Act was passed; the period in the column, according to law, opposite Art. 177, was still six months and that was actually the period provided when the appellant put in her application on the 28th June. That application was well within six months and was, therefore, in accordance with the existing law. Subsequently in 1923, by Act XI of 1923, the period has been altered to ninety days, but that was subsequent to this application. The appellant was, therefore perfectly within her rights.

The appeal succeeds and the matter must be sent back to the lower Court with direction to re-hear the application according to law.

The appellant is entitled to her costs here and below. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Second appeal by plaintiff against the decree of the District Judge of Guntur in A. S. No. 332 of 1920.

The question to be considered in this appeal is one of limitation, and the facts are as follows:—The defendant executed a hypothecation bond Ex. A on 10th October 1917. Under this bond a sum of Rs. 2,000, was due to the plaintiff and the defendant undertook to deliver  $7\frac{1}{4}$  candies of paddy every year for a period of eight-years. The paddy was deliverable on Pushya Bahula 30th of every year, and in case default was made in the delivery of the paddy, the defendant made himself liable to pay the market value of the paddy in Ponnur market on the 30th Phalguna Bahula of the same year. There is also a provision in the bond to the effect that in case the first instalment was not fully paid, the last instalment also became due and that in case the second instalment was not paid the seventh instalment also became due; and so on. For the first instalment a small quantity of paddy had been delivered; and on 20th November 1918 the plaintiff instituted a suit for the recovery of the amount due with respect to the first and eighth instalments. The plaint in this suit was returned for presentation to the proper Court on 24th February 1919, and it was presented in the District Munsif's Court of Baptla on 26th February 1919. The present suit out of which this second appeal arises was in respect of the second and seventh instalments. One of the contentions urged was that the suit was barred under O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. Both the Courts below upheld this contention and dismissed the suit.

It is contended before me that the cause of action in the present suit which was instituted on 31st August 1920 did not arise on the date when the plaint for the first and eighth instalments was filed and that, even if it did arise the date of the cause of action was not 30th January 1919 as stated in the plaint, but 30th of Phalguna Bahula which would be about March 1919. For considering when the cause of action really arose, reference has to be made to Ex. A. This document recites that the paddy was deliverable on Pushya Bahula 30th of every year, and that in case there was failure to deliver the paddy, defendant was to pay the value of  $14\frac{1}{2}$  candies at the rate prevailing in the Ponnur market on Phalguna Bahula 30th. Before the parties went to trial, the plaintiff put in a petition to amend the plaint by stating that the cause of action arose on Phalguna Bahula 30th and this application was refused by both the Courts below on the ground that a change in the cause of action would prevent the suit being barred and thus deprive the defendant of his right to have the suit dismissed. Both the lower Courts were of opinion that the amendment would make a change in the cause of action, but this does not appear to me to be so. The change would be only in the date when the cause of action arose and not in the cause of action itself which would remain the same. The document distinctly provides that the value of the paddy as and on Phalguna Bahula 30th was to become payable in case the paddy was not delivered. For the purpose of instituting the suit the plaintiff would, therefore, have to wait till Phalguna Bahula 30th for the purpose of ascertaining the price on that date. It is only after ascertaining the price that he could have valued his suit and come in with his plaint. The cause of action remains as it was, namely, the failure to deliver paddy, but the only variation which the plaintiff wanted to make was as to when the cause of action arose. Therefore such an amendment could be allowed as laid down by this Court in Sevugan Chetty v. Krishna Aiyangar (1). The Vakil for the respondent relied upon a case in Balkaran Upadhyaya v. Gaya Din Kalwar (2); but all that this case lays down is that no amendment should be allowed when there is a change in the cause of action and not when there is a change in the date when the cause of action arose. The grounds on which the lower Courts declined to allow the amendment seem to me to be untenable; and the amendment, in my opinion, ought to have been allowed. In this view the suit would not be barred by limitation.

Other pleas were also raised which form the subject-matter of Issues Nos. 2 and 3. No evidence was let in and no finding given on these issues by the Trial Court.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, and the suit is remanded to the Trial Court for disposal after receiving evidence on the remaining issues.

Costs in this Court will be paid by the respondents. Costs in the lower Courts will abide and follow the result.

The appellant will get refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal, and in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by father to pay off encumbrance on property acquired by pre-emption, validity of.

A mortgage of family property executed by a Hindu father in order to pay off an encumbrance on property acquired by him under a pre-emption decree, is not binding on the sons unless it is shown that it was for the benefit of the family that the encumbrance should be paid off by hypothecation of the family property.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Basti.

Mr. Shankar Saran, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Upadhia, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that this appeal cannot succeed. The suit was for a declaration that a hypothecation bond executed by the plaintiff's father of ancestral joint property was not binding on the plaintiff, not having been executed for legal necessity. Both the Courts have decreed the suit and the defendants appeal. The bond in question was for a sum of Rs. 177 of which Rs. 165 was paid in discharge of a mortgage on certain property which the plaintiff's father had acquired under a pre-emption decree. The decree was given him on payment of Rs. 130 which had been paid into Court. The pre-empted property was, however, subject to an encumbrance, and the hypothecation bond in suit was executed to pay off this encumbrance. Reference has been made to the decisions in Nathu v. Kundan Lal (1) and Chatur Bhuj v. Gobind Ram (2) which dissented from the decision in Nathu v. Kundan Lal (1). Neither of these decisions is strictly applicable. In these cases the question arose whether payment of an amount which the father was required to deposit under a pre-emption decree amounted to antecedent debt or not. In this case there was no question of any debt. The amount which the father was required to deposit under the decree had already been deposited. The question is, therefore, reduced to this whether it was more advantageous to the family that the encumbrance on the pre-empted property should be paid off at the cost of encumbering the ancestral property or not. On this there is a finding of both the lower Courts that it is not established that the discharge of the encumbrance at the cost of hypothecating the family property was for the benefit of the family. The Courts have pointed out that the hypothecation bond in suit carried compound interest at a fairly high rate. In face of this finding the appeal cannot succeed and we accordingly dismiss it with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 17th January 1924, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Third Class, Amritsar, dated the 3rd May 1923.

Mr. Durga Das, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for India for Rs. 1,505-9-6, on the ground that half of a consignment of 820 tins of molasses, namely, 410 tins, had not been delivered to him by the North-Western Railway. The goods were delivered to the Bengal North-Western Railway by Dana Mal-Babu Ram of Naukhar, District Gorakhpur, on Risk Notes A and B. The plaintiff refused to make the Bengal North-Western Railway a party to the suit. The North-Western Railway pleaded that no suit lay against them under the provisions of s. 80 of the Railways Act, and that they were protected by the Risk Notes. The Trial Court decreed the claim to the extent of Rs. 1,328-0-6, but on appeal, the learned District Judge allowed the plaintiff only the sum of Rs. 268-14-0 being the freight paid for the undelivered half of the consignment. He held that the North-Western Railway was not liable by reason of the provisions of s. 80 of the Railways Act, as it had not been proved that the loss occurred on that Railway, and that further the Risk Notes on which the goods were booked protected the Railway. Against this decision, the plaintiff has filed this second appeal.

There is a finding of fact that it has not been proved that the loss occurred on the North-Western Railway, and it seems to us that on this finding the decision of the lower Appellate Court must be upheld, as in order to make the North-Western Railway liable it is necessary under s. 80 of the Railways Act, that the loss should have occurred on that Railway. There may have been loss to the owner by the fact that the goods in question were not delivered, as laid down in Hill Sawyers and Company v. Secretary of State for India (1); but in that case it was clearly established that the "loss" to the owner was caused by the North-Western Railway, and, therefore, it was not protected by s. 80 of the Railways Act. In the present case, however, the North-Western Railway is clearly not liable as the concluding portion of s. 80 is to the effect that, when goods are delivered to one Railway Administration, another Railway Administration can only be sued if the "loss" occurred on its Railway. This appeal must, therefore, fail and we dismiss it with costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chittoor, in A. S. No. 282 of 1921, (A. S. No. 138 of 1921, on the file of the District Court, Chittoor), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Sholinghur, in O. S. No. 55 of 1920.

Mr. C. V. Ananta Krishnier, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Jagadisa Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the decree in A. S. No. 282 of 1921, on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Chittor, preferred against the decree in O. S. No. 55 of 1920, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Sholinghur. Both the lower Courts have dismissed their suit and plaintiffs appeal.

A Chetti firm contracted with a Mudali firm to supply the Mudali firm with twenty-five bales of yarn: Exs. A and A-1. On 24th October 1918, the Mudali firm wrote Ex. II cancelling the contract because the supply had been irregular. The Chetti firm not accepting this cancellation gave notice of suit and in due course filed O. S. No. 27 of 1919 in the Court of the District Munsif of Chittor. The matter was referred to arbitration and apparently settled by award, but the award is not in evidence. Then on 9th December 1919, the Mudali firm wrote Ex. D to the Chettis that under the previous contract they were still bound to supply them with  $11\frac{1}{2}$  bales, and if these were not supplied within two days, they would file a suit. Hence the present suit brought by the Mudali firm, the plaintiffs and appellants.

The point taken in this appeal is that the contract was never cancelled and the appellants rely for this position upon Frost v. Knight (1). There it is laid down at page 112*, that if one party to a contract repudiates it, the promisee may treat the repudiation as inoperative, and at the end of the period of the contract, treat the other party as responsible for all the consequences of non-performance, thereby keeping the contract alive, or, on the other hand, he may treat the repudiation as a wrongful putting an end to the contract, and may at once bring his action as on a breach of it. The Chetti firm evidently adopted the latter alternative when it brought O. S. No. 27 of 1919. But relying upon a passage in the plaint of that suit, the appellants would have it that the Chettis availed themselves of both alternatives. They sued upon the breach of the contract, and in the same breath kept it open, because in para. 11 of their plaint there is a statement that they were still entitled to deliver the rest of the bales. The short answer to this is that they had no right to make any such reservation. Frost v. Knight (1), is recognised authority prescribing the remedies open to a promisee and he cannot both sue upon the breach and also keep the contract open.

The appellants then proceed to argue that, if so much must be conceded, the Chetti firm closed the first portion of the contract, but re-opened a new contract by their 11th para. This plea can have no force unless the Mudali firm can show its acceptance of this fresh tender, and so far from accepting it, that firm in its written statement utterly repudiated the 11th para. as false (Ex. III, para. II). Therefore, there was no fresh contract between the parties.

Apart from contesting this plea of the plaintiffs, the respondents have a good case as set forth in para. 8 of their written statement by way of waiver and estoppel. A party cannot repudiate a contract, wait a year, and then suddenly insist upon its performance. The question turns upon whether his conduct gives rise to an implication of abandonment [cf. Pearl Mill Co. v. Ivy Tannery Co. (2).] Delay coupled with repudiation does give rise to such an implication. "Where one party by acts and conduct evinces an intention no longer to be bound by the contract, the other party will be justified in regarding himself to be emancipated." Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. VII, para. 865.

For the above reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where a co-occupant in a survey number sells his share in the survey number to a co-occupant and a stranger, the sale cannot be described as being one in favour of a co-occupant and s. 210 of the Berar Land Revenue Code has no application to such a case.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 22nd of February 1924, reversing that of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, Morsi, dated the 24th of October 1923.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a co-occupant of survey No. 1. Bhojaji and Sitaram, the owners of Pot-hissa No. 2 in the same survey number sold their share to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 2nd May 1922, without giving notice to the plaintiff. Plaintiff, therefore, claims to pre-empt Pot-hissa No. 2.

The defendants admit that the plaintiff is a co-occupant in survey No. 1. They plead that defendant No. 2 has acquired no interest by the purchase, his name having been nominally inserted in the sale-deed, and that defendant No. 1 having a share in Pot-hissa No. 6 which his father acquired on the 10th April 1916, by purchase, the plaintiff cannot claim pre-emption under s. 210, Berar Land Revenue Code.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the purchase was solely for the benefit of defendant No. 2 and that he was not a purchaser merely in name. No reason has been shown why the finding should not be upheld.

On the above finding there is no room for the application of s. 210 since defendant No. 2, the real purchaser, is not a co-occupant in the survey number.

Assuming that both the defendants are purchasers and defendant No. 1 is a co-occupant, still s. 210 will not apply, for the transfer is not to a person already a co-occupant, but to a body consisting of a co-occupant and a stranger which cannot be called a co-occupant.

There is no question here under s. 209 of priority in pre-emption, because defendant No. 1 does not claim pre-emption against defendant No. 2.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Custom—Pre-emption—Village Badnauli, Tahsil Hapur, Meerut District.

A custom of pre-emption exists in village Badnauli, Tahsil Hapur, Meerut District. [p. 338, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

Messrs. Nehal Chand and Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nehal Chand Vaish and Surendra Nath Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by a sale-deed, dated the 15th of July 1920, transferred their shares in village Badnauli in Tahsil Hapur, District Meerut, in favour of two sets of defendants. Half of the property was transferred to defendants Nos. 3 to 7 and the other half to defendants Nos. 8 to 12. There is a clear specification of this in the sale-deed. The plaintiffs alleged in the plaint that under a custom of pre-emption existing in the village they were entitled to pre-empt as against the defendants who were strangers to the mahal. As to the sale consideration it was alleged that out of the sum shown before the Sub-Registrar a sum of Rs. 2,000 was actually returned afterwards and was a fictitious item. It was further asserted that the property sold covered standing sugar-cane crop of the value of Rs. 1,500 which had since been appropriated by the vendees.

The defendants vendees denied the existence of any custom of pre-emption and also asserted that the sale consideration mentioned in the sale-deed was true.

We may note that a considerable portion of the sale consideration mentioned in the sale-deed was left in the hands of the vendees for payment to certain specified creditors.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the evidence produced by the plaintiffs is insufficient to establish that a custom of pre-emption existed in this village. On this finding the suit has been dismissed in toto. He has, however, gone on to record findings on the other issues which arose in the case and has come to the conclusion that it is not established by the plaintiffs that a sum of Rs. 2,000 was returned by the vendors after registration. He has also come to the conclusion that the value of sugar-cane crop was only Rs. 1,000 and not Rs. 1,500 and, therefore, Rs. 1,000 would have to be deducted from the sale consideration. There was also an allegation by the plaintiffs that the defendants vendees had cut away certain trees of wild growth worth Rs. 150, but this was not substantiated by any evidence.

The plaintiffs have come up in appeal before us and two main points arise for consideration, (1) The existence or non-existence of the alleged custom of pre-emption and (2) the amount of sale consideration.

In support of the alleged custom of pre-emption the plaintiffs relied on the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 prepared by Mr. Nasir Ali, a Settlement Deputy Collector. They also relied on two suits for pre-emption instituted in 1886 and in 1892 respectively. The defendants, on the other hand, produced what purports to be a wajib-ul-arz prepared by Mr. Mohar Singh another Settlement Deputy Collector, and of which the learned Subordinate Judge says the year is 1860. The document which is produced, however, bears no such date. The defendants also produced a rubkar of 1836 drawn up by Sir Henry Elliot and the dastur dehi prepared by Mr. Gillan for 1303 Fasli. The last two documents do not contain any mention of the right of pre-emption.

The learned Subordinate Judge has made a great point against the plaintiffs by pointing out that there are some variations in the entries regarding the right of pre-emption as contained in the wajib-ul-arzes prepared by Mr. Mohar Singh and Mr. Nasir Ali respectively. It is necessary for us to consider as to the exact nature of the wajib-ul-arz prepared by Mr. Mohar Singh. In this document, it is shown that the entire village had been settled with Girwar Singh, lambardar, from the year 1242 Fasli to the year 1262 Fasli (corresponding to 1835-1855 A. D.). It goes on to say that subsequently as sanctioned by the Board of Revenue the term of the Settlement was extended by a further period of 10 years and the aforesaid revenue was maintained. It is clear, therefore, that the Settlement which was made by Sir Henry Elliot in 1835 continued till 1865. The wajib-ul-arz prepared by Mr. Mohar Singh is said to have been prepared in the year 1860. A reference to the Gazetteer of the District of Meerut shows that after the Settlement of Sir Henry Elliot the next regular Settlement was made by Mr. Forbes and Mr. Porter between the years 1865 and 1870. It is quite clear that there was no Settlement, in the strict sense of the word, in the year 1860. It is, therefore, impossible to regard the wajib-ul-arz prepared by Mr. Mohar Singh as the final Record of Rights prepared at the Settlement. There are no materials on the record to show when the Settlement which was completed in 1870 actually commenced. It is possible that some preliminary operations may have been started in 1860 in course of which the wajib-ul-arz drawn up by Mr. Mohar Singh might have been prepared. The clause containing the verification is not filed and it is difficult to say whether that wajib-ul-arz represents a final record of a custom or contract enforceable in the village. It is possible that the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 may be the revised and corrected record.

In this view of the nature of the document it cannot be seriously urged that the presumption arising from the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 which was admittedly a Settlement period, has been negatived by a different entry contained in Mr. Mohar Singh's document.

The defendants have also produced a rubkar issued by Sir Henry (then Mr. Henry) Elliot, dated the 25th of February 1836, which contains no reference to any right of pre-emption. That, however, is not the complete wajib-ul-arz. The defendants further relied on the absence of any entry of a right of pre-emption in the dastur dehi prepared by Mr. Gillan in the subsequent Settlement. As to this we may point out that Mr. Gillan's Settlement was completed in the year 1901 and the settlement of Tahsil Hapur came into effect in 1898 (vide page 132 of the Gazetteer). On the 19th of November, 1897, however, a fresh set of Settlement Rules had been issued by the Board of Revenue under which directions were given to Settlement Officers to make certain entries in the Record of Rights. A comparison of the directions then issued with the previous directions makes it clear that no specific authority was given to Settlement Officers to make an entry of custom like pre-emption, prevailing in the village other than those covered by certain specified clauses. Accordingly under the new rules no entry was ordinarily to be made by the Settlement Officers as regards a custom of pre-emption and it is on this account that in wajib-ul-arzes prepared subsequent to 1897 there is no mention of any such rights either way. The omission, therefore is not so conclusive.

We are, therefore, left with the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of the year 1870, which was of the second regular Settlement, and which contains a clear recital of a right of pre-emption. Paragraph 17 states that if any share-holder wishes to sell his share he can do so first to his bhai hakiki (own brothers), then to qaribi (near) and then to share-holders in the thok. If the share-holders in the thok refuse to purchase it the vendor is at liberty to transfer it to any share-holder of the village. Then follows a clause regarding the settlement of price by arbitration in case of a dispute. This entry raises a prima facie presumption of the existence of a custom of pre-emption. This wajib-ul-arz was prepared at the time when the Board's Circular No. 24 of 1868 had come into effect, under which the Settlement Officers were expressly authorised to make entries as regards customs prevailing in the village. We are, therefore, entitled to presume that this entry is a record of custom. There is nothing in the previous or subsequent history of the village which necessarily negatives the existence of such a custom. All that is shown is that the village was settled with Girwar Singh, lambardar. There may have been many other co-sharers besides Girwar Singh and in any case he may have represented a joint Hindu family. There is, therefore, no ground for holding that during this period the entire village was owned by a single proprietor. As to the circumstances that various other proprietors became co-sharers between 1860 and 1870 we may point out that the Gazetteer at page 130 mentions that in Hapur old proprietors were replaced to the extent of 20 per cent. mainly by money-lenders, that no less than 69 estates were confiscated owing to the action of proprietors during the Mutiny, and of these 49 were sold by auction and 16 were given away in reward while 4 were held for a time under the direct management. Therefore, it might well have been that some of these strangers became co-sharers by purchases at auction.

The learned Subordinate Judge has been influenced by two main points. The first is that the preamble of the wajib-ul-arz indicates that it was a record of an agreement. The inference is not quite correct because all wajib-ul-arzes are in stereotyped forms and contain similar preambles: vide Raturaji Dubain v. Pahalwan Bhagat (1). They are primarily records of engagements of co-sharers with the Government for payment of Government revenue. The second circumstance relied on is a supposed variation between the wajib-ul-arzes of 1860 and 1870. As to this we have already stated that the wajib-ul-arz of 1860 cannot be regarded as a complete and final record of any regular Settlement. In any case the variation does not make the two wajib-ul-arzes necessarily contradictory. In the wajib-ul-arz of Mr. Mohar Singh the right of pre-emption was given first to the true brother, then to a near brother, but not specifically to a co-sharer. It is, however, to be noted that in that year there might have been no other co-sharers but the three brothers Baldeo Singh, Jagdish Singh and Gurdal Singh, sons of Girwar Singh, whose names are entered in the opening portion of the wajib-ul-arz. This circumstance might explain the omission of a reference to co-sharers. The other discrepancy relied upon is that under the first wajib-ul-arz a right was given in the case of transfer by mortgages as well as sales, whereas in the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 the right was confined to sales and it was expressly stated that there was no right of pre-emption as regards mortgages. We may say that even if a custom of pre-emption as regards mortgages had existed in 1860 there was nothing to prevent the co-sharers in 1870 from abrogating that part of the custom.

The plaintiffs relied on two pre-emption suits in order to show that claims of pre-emption had been asserted. In 1886 a suit was instituted for pre-emption and in para. 3 of the plaint it was expressly alleged that according to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz and the custom of the village the plaintiffs were entitled to claim pre-emption. In the written statement which was filed the substantial plea taken was that the plaintiffs were not proprietors at all and there was no express denial of the existence of a custom of pre-emption. This suit is said to have been ultimately withdrawn and is, therefore, not of very great importance. The second suit was instituted in the year 1892 where the plaintiff merely asserted that he had a right of pre-emption, [1892] I. C. 552, 33 A. 196; 7 A. L. J. 1040.

not expressly mentioning that there was a custom under which this right existed. That suit also was ultimately dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not the absolute proprietor by virtue of which she was claiming pre-emption. As the Settlement of 1870 was then in force no conclusive inference can be drawn from this litigation also. Having regard, however, to the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 which, in our opinion, stands un rebutted, we must hold that the custom of pre-emption exists in this village.

As regards the sale consideration, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that there is no satisfactory evidence that Rs. 2,000 were returned after registration, cannot be seriously challenged. We are satisfied that that finding must be accepted.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs has not challenged the finding that there is no satisfactory evidence to prove that dhak and other kind of timber worth Rs. 150 had been removed by the defendants vendees. Therefore this finding must also stand.

On behalf of the defendants there is no cross-objection with regard to the finding that out of the sale consideration, sugarcane crops worth Rs. 1,000 had been appropriated by the vendees. So this finding of the learned Subordinate Judge also must stand.

There is, however, some dispute between the parties as to the exact amount which has been paid by the vendees to the creditors named in the sale-deed, for whom money had been left in the hands of the vendees. The vendees are entitled to claim from the plaintiffs pre-emptors only that much of the amount which they have actually paid to the vendors or to the prior creditors named in the deed. If there is any sum still left in their hands for payment the plaintiffs will make this payment as they have stepped into the shoes of the vendees.

We, accordingly, allow this appeal and setting aside the decree of the Court below, decree the plaintiffs' claim for pre-emption subject to the payment of Rs. 21,000 to be deposited in the Court below within two months from this date. Out of this sum Rs. 1,000 will be paid to the vendees, and out of the balance of Rs. 20,000 the vendees will be entitled to get as much as they have actually paid to the prior creditors mentioned in the sale-deed. The balance will be paid to the creditors themselves directly. In case of default of payment by the plaintiffs within the time specified the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in all Courts. In case of payment within the time allowed the plaintiffs will get their costs in both the Courts. The fees in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Bengal Regulation (XXVII of 1793)—Permanent Settlement—Income from jalkar, hat and ghatlaggi, whether taken into account—Income, whether liable to assessment to income-tax—Darbhanga Raj.

The Permanent Settlement left to the zemindar the ground rents of land, shops, etc., in all the then existing hats except such, if any, as were specifically excluded and if more hats are now shown to exist than appear in the Settlement papers it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that they have sprung up since the Settlement. If they existed at the time of Settlement they were left under the general regulations to the zemindar in the absence of any specific exclusion. The onus is not on the assessee to prove inclusion but upon the Crown to prove exclusion. [p. 341, col. 1.]

The Permanent Settlement Regulations apply as much to subsequently settled lands as to lands settled in 1793. [p. 341, col. 2.]

Where a ghat has been settled with a zemindar, the latter has the right to collect mooring dues as well as tolls or ferry dues. [ibid.]

The income derived from jalkar, hat and ghatlaggi was included in the assets of the Darbhanga Raj when the jama was assessed at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and such income is, therefore, not liable to be assessed to income-tax. [p. 340, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This matter came before the Court in January last upon a reference* by the Income Tax Commissioner for determination of certain questions of law, one of which was whether income derived from jalkar, hat and ghatlaggi was liable to income-tax. The decision of the Court on that occasion was that if these items were included in the assets when the jama was assessed at the time of the Permanent Settlement the Income Tax Act was not sufficiently specific to indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature to vary the bargain made at the time of the Permanent Settlement and that income from such sources was not chargeable to income-tax. As there was some doubt, however, whether jalkar, hat and ghatlaggi rights had been taken into account as part of the assets of the assessee's zemindari in assessing the jama at the time of the Settlement the case was remitted to the Income Tax Commissioner to determine the question of fact whether the jalkar, hat and ghatlaggi rights in respect of which the exemption was claimed did form a part of the assets taken into consideration in settling the jama at the date of the settlement with predecessors in title of the assessee.

The Commissioner of Income Tax has considered the question submitted to him and has made a report containing his findings. These findings, however, have been qualified in certain respects and the assessee now challenges the qualifications upon various grounds. With regard to the jalkar or fishery rights no serious question arises. The Commissioner finds that jalkar was included in the assets of the Permanent Settlement and points out that in the rules for the resumption of sayer passed in 1790 which are referred to in Regulation XXVII of 1793 the rights of phalkar, bankar and jalkar, were exempted from the resumption and remained vested in the landholders. He has submitted an opinion, however, at the end of his report that under Art. 2 of Regulation I of 1793 it was only the jama assessed upon the lands which was fixed for ever and that there was no undertaking not to enhance the assessment upon incorporeal rights, whether or no, the assets of such rights were included in the Permanent Settlement. In offering this opinion the Commissioner appears to me to be travelling outside his province. This question was determined by the Court on the previous occasion and after consideration of the Regulation relating to the subject.

With regard to hat or markets his general finding is that in so far as hats or gunjes are concerned the general Regulations leave the zemindar the right to take ground rents and if the assessee is now being taxed only in respect of ground rents it is not necessary to consider his claims based on specific documents. There can be no doubt from a perusal of Regulation XXVII of 1793 that in resuming the sayer the Government did not intend to divest the landholders of collections made by them as consideration for the use of grounds, shops or other buildings belonging to them and that ground rents whether in markets or in other parts of the zemindari were the exclusive property of the zemindar. The Regulation states "In the adoption of the above arrangements, the Governor-General-in-Council had no intention to divest the land-holders of any collection they had made, under the denomination of sayer not in reality a duty but a consideration for the use of grounds, shops, or other buildings belonging to them. As, however, the rent of warehouses (golah) and shops (dokans) had in general been received by the officers employed to collect the gunje, hat, and bazar duties, and had frequently been let in farm with them, and as the rent paid for orchards, pasture ground and fisheries had been sometimes included in the sayer under the denominations of phulkar, bankar, and jalkar, the Governor General in-Council thought it necessary to declare expressly, that it was by no means his intention to include in the resumption of the sayer then ordered, the monthly or annual rents paid for grounds, or buildings erected thereon, of whatever description or the phulkar, bankar, and jalkar, such rents being properly the private right of the proprietors, and in no respect a tax or duty on commodities, the exclusive right of Government." The exemptions claimed in respect of hats in the present case are claimed as income derived from ground rents of the land or house in the hats. The Commissioner, however, is apparently not satisfied that the rent so received by the assessee did not include some illegal exactions in the nature of internal duties or tolls which were reserved by the Permanent Settlement as the exclusive property of Government. He says "It is common knowledge that wherever bazar dues are realised not only ground rent is collected but also other duties, which may be levied either on every person who brings goods into the bazar or from both purchaser and seller in every transaction or in other ways. No doubt, the zemindar who lets out a bazar in thicca does not himself collect internal duties but I think it is safe to say that the thiccadar invariably does. In so far as this question is one of fact no evidence whatever has been offered that the zemindar's receipts for bazar settlement are really ground rents. If they are not ground rents the assessee has to prove that these internal duties were included in the assets of the Permanent Settlement. In my opinion he has failed to do this." Whether by this finding the learned Commissioner intends to exclude from exemption the whole of the income derived from hats or only a portion thereof is by no means clear, but in his summary of his findings at the end of his report it would appear that he intended to find that the ground rent of the gunjes or markets specifically mentioned in the Schedule prepared at the time of the settlement were included in the assets although it would seem that his view is that such ground rents as were not specifically mentioned were not included. Nor does he arrive at any definite findings as to how much of the exemptions claimed may be justified as ground rents or how much he regards as payment in respect of internal duties. It seems to me, however, that the Commissioner is not entitled to deprive the assessee of his right to exemption of income received by him as ground rent payable by the lessee for the land and houses in the markets. It is quite clear from the Regulation that these ground rents were included in the assets as the property of the zemindar at the time of settlement and the mere fact that the lessee may in some instances abuse his rights and enforce illegal exactions from those using the markets, is not itself any ground for depriving the zemindar of his legal rights. The rents from markets are, I think, just as much mal rents as the rent from agricultural or any other species of land. The exemptions are claimed as being ground rents from markets, ferries and fisheries and if the Commissioner is not satisfied that the income received is in fact ground rent he has ample power to call upon the assessee to produce his books or other documents relating to the collections and to enforce the attendance of witnesses to give evidence upon a question about which he has any doubt (sees. 22 (4) and 37 to 39 of the Income Tax Act, 1922). The Commissioner may if he thinks fit, investigate further into the matter by calling for the production of evidence or documents to show the exact nature of the collections made under the head of ground rents for which exemption is claimed but he is not entitled on mere suspicion to assume that that which was received in the name of ground rent is not in fact that which it purports to be. It does not appear that the assessee has been called on to produce his collection papers or his contracts with the thiccadars which would show the nature of the income derived from the sources named.

The next question which arises on these findings is that the Commissioner would apparently exclude from exemption the ground rents in respect of all existing hats except those specifically mentioned in the settlement papers as then existing. It is not contended that the ground rents of markets which came into existence subsequently to the Permanent Settlement would not be part of the zemindar's assets, but the Commissioner points out that in the settlement documents relating to the different parganas of the assessee's zemindari only a few hats or gunjes are specifically mentioned and argues from this that there may have been others then existing, and still subsisting about which nothing is said and which were, therefore, not included. It is probably correct to say that there are hats now existing within the Darbhanga Raj about which no specific mention is found in the settlement papers, but Regulation XXVII of 1793 is so clear and emphatic in stating that such rents were to be retained by the proprietors that it cannot reasonably be presumed that any markets then existing were intended to be excluded without specific mention of the fact in the settlement papers. I do not think that any inference can be drawn that any markets now existing in fact existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement although they were not mentioned in the settlement papers. The natural and only proper inference appears to me to be the exact opposite, for we find in the rules for the resumption of sayer passed on the 17th June 1790 and set out in Regulation XXVII of 1793 the following Article:—

"2nd, no monthly or annual payments now made or which may be hereafter made for the use of the land or houses, shops or other buildings erected thereon, being clearly of the nature of rents and not duties or taxes, are to be understood to be within this prohibition but all such rents are to be enjoyed by the proprietors entitled thereto as heretofore."

The irresistible inference, therefore, is that the settlement left to the zemindar the ground rents of land, shops, etc., in all the then existing hats except such, if any, as were specifically excluded and if more hats are now shown to exist than appear in the settlement papers it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that they have sprung up since the settlement. If they existed at the time of settlement they were left under the general Regulations to the zemindar in the absence of any specific exclusion. The onus is not on the assessee to prove inclusion but upon the Crown to prove exclusion.

The learned Commissioner appears also to have had some doubt as to the proper rendering in idiomatic English of the word "sewa" where it appears in the application of the assessee's ancestor for settlement of Pargana Hati a part of the Darbhanga Raj. According to his view the proper translation of the word was "with the exception of." If this be accepted as accurate he thought that the application excluded settlement of gunjes or markets although he states he had been shown a dictionary dated 1802 prepared under the orders of the East India Company which says that the word may also mean "in addition to." The truth is that the meaning of this word appears to depend upon the context in which it is found and it may be in many cases rendered into English either by the words "in addition to" or by the words "apart from." A simple example may be given where either rendering would be accurate in English. The sentence "apart from this house I have many others" might equally well be expressed by saying, "in addition to this house I have many others." The matter, however, is not one of much importance as it is clear from the settlement papers that ground rents for markets as distinguished from tolls or other internal duties in connection therewith were included in the schedule of the assets settled with the zemindar. In fact the Commissioner states, "I agree that the gunjes mentioned in the schedule must apparently be included."

With regard to Pargana Haveli Kharagpur which was settled for 20 years in 1844 and permanently settled in 1866 the Commissioner has pointed out that although the markets were included in the settlement, the Income Tax Act of 1860, was then in force and he states, "It is clear that non-agricultural income of this pargana must have been assessed or at least assessable to income-tax under the Act of 1860 and there is nothing in the rubakar of 1866 to indicate that such income would in future be exempted from income-tax". With respect to the Commissioner the exemption is claimed under the Permanent Settlement Regulations which apply as much to subsequently settled lands as to lands settled in 1793. Moreover this question is one which was disposed of by this Court at the previous hearing and it is not open to the Commissioner to re-open that decision.

With regard to ghatlaggi it is agreed that the ghats were settled with the assessee's ancestors. The Commissioner takes the view, however, that settlement of ghats ordinarily means the right to collect tolls or ferry dues and not the right to mooring dues. In my opinion this is giving much too narrow a construction to the rights incident to the settlement of ghats. The proprietor is just as much "entitled to be" paid for the use of the ghats for purposes of mooring as he is to take dues from those using the ghats for other purposes.

The case must be remanded to the Commissioner of Income Tax to be dealt with according to our ruling upon the questions dealt with in this judgment. He is at liberty, however, if he should think fit, to call for further evidence as to the exact nature of the exemptions claimed by the assessee under the head of ground rents for hats.

It is necessary to deal with the costs of the hearing originally as well as the hearing after remand. We think that the petitioner, having substantially succeeded both in the original petition upon the case stated and in the application to us after remand, is entitled to his costs and we assess the hearing fee in respect of both the applications together at a sum of Rs. 500.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art 134, scope of—Transfer by mortgagee—Suit for redemption—Honest belief of transferee—Limitation.

In every case where Art 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act is set up as a defence by a transferee from a mortgagee, it is material to see what interest the mortgagee purported to transfer, and where both the seller and purchaser honestly believed that the entire interest of an owner was being transferred, the Article is clearly applicable. [p 345, cols 1 & 2]

Obiter—The omission in Art 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Acts of 1877 and 1908 of the words 'in good faith' which appeared in the corresponding article of the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871 now render it unnecessary for a transferee from the mortgagee to prove that he acted in good faith before he can plead limitation [p 343, col 1]

Per Ramesam, J.—The possible cases that may arise in the case of a transfer by a mortgagee are four:—

(1) Where the transfer on its face purports to be an assignment of the mortgagee's interest only, to such a case Art 134 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act can never apply. [p 344, col 1.]

(2) Where the transfer purported to be a sale-deed but as a matter of fact only an assignment of the mortgagee's interest was all that was bargained for, to such a case also Art 134 does not apply. [ibid.]

(3) Where the deed of transfer is a sale-deed and what was bargained by the transferee is also an absolute sale, though he knew that the transferor had only a mortgagee's interest, in such a case though under the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871, Art. 134 may not apply, under the Acts of 1877 and 1908 it does apply. [ibid.]

(4) Where the transfer is in the form of a sale-deed and the transferee bargained for an absolute interest and acted bona fide throughout, to such a case there is no doubt that Art. 134 will always apply. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Kanara, in O. S. No. 21 of 1919.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title, namely, Parameswari Hengsu and others mortgaged such of the properties as are comprised in Sch. A and the properties in Sch. A-1 to one Manjinatha Naicker by Ex. I, dated the 12th January 1872 for Rs. 14,000. The mortgagee conveyed the properties in Sch. A by Ex. II, dated the 16th July 1878 to one Venkappa, the ancestor of the defendants and the defendants obtained them for their share at a family partition. The mortgagors assigned the equity of redemption in the properties by Ex. B, dated the 12th September 1906 to one Boobashetti from whom it devolved on the plaintiffs under the Aliyasantana Law. We are not now concerned with the properties in Sch. A-1 as to which the interest of the mortgagee also has come to the plaintiffs' hands by various transactions. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. In appeal, the claim for the properties in Sch. A 2 has not been pressed and no reference need be made to them and we are only concerned with the properties in Sch. A. Two points have been argued by the learned Vakils for the appellants.

(1) Whether Ex. I is a mortgage by conditional sale or a sale with an agreement for re-purchase?

(2) Assuming it is a mortgage, whether the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 134 of the Limitation Act?

In the view I take of the second question, I think it is unnecessary to discuss the first. For the purposes of discussion I will assume in favour of the appellant that Ex. I ought to be construed only as a mortgage by conditional sale. The question now is whether the properties having been sold by Ex. II, Art. 134 of the Limitation Act does not apply.

Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer the learned Vakils for the appellants contends that

Art. 134 of the Limitation Act can only apply where the transferee from the mortgagee took the properties in the belief that the transferor was absolutely entitled to them. That this was the law under the corresponding articles of the Acts of 1859 and 1871 admits of no doubt; see Radhanath Doss v. Gisborne and Co. (1). But the words "in good faith" which appeared in that Article have been omitted in the Acts of 1877 and 1908. The question is whether it can be contended that under the Acts of 1877 and 1908 the knowledge on the part of the purchaser of the true nature of the interest of the transferor prevents the application of Art. 134. Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer relied on Singaram Chettiar v. Kalayanasundaram Pillai (2). Though the remarks at page 738* of that decision are somewhat in favour of the appellant, the point was not actually decided in that case. The next decision relied on by him is Tholasinga Mudali v. Nagalinga Chetty (3) where the obiter dictum in Singaram Chettiar v. Kalayanasundaram Pillai (2) was followed by Sadasiva Iyer, J., and Napier, J. The next case relied on by him is the decision in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (4). In that case, it is observed:—

"If the transferee bargained for and believed he is bargaining only for the interest of the mortgagee, he cannot acquire title as the absolute owner of the property. After all, Art. 134 is only a branch of the law of prescription and the question to be determined would be, what it is that the purchaser prescribed for. The fact that he knew that his vendor had only a mortgagee right would not be conclusive on this question. The real test would be, did he ask for and obtain an absolute right in the property and believe himself that he was having an absolute interest in it? In Pandu v. Vithu (5) that is the test that was suggested". I do not see how these remarks of Seshagiri Iyer, J., help the appellant. If the transferee purported to purchase the absolute interest even though he knew that the transferor had only the interest of a mortgagee, the Article would still apply according to this view. Bakewell, J., added that "If the title adduced by the vendor and the deed of transfer to the purchaser are consistent with an intention to transfer an absolute interest, the burden will lie upon the plaintiff to show that the circumstances of the transfer negative such an intention". He made no reference to the case of Singaram Chetti v. Kalayanasundaram Pillai (2) unlike Seshagiri Iyer, J. The finding shows that the deed of mortgage in that case was styled a sale-deed though construed by the High Court as a mortgage by conditional sale. The period for redemption fixed in it had expired and it was said that the vendee would naturally suppose that he was purchasing an absolute title. The finding accordingly was that the transferor intended to transfer an absolute interest and that the intention of the parties was that there should be an absolute transfer of title of property. The finding was accepted by the High Court and the second appeal was dismissed. I do not think that this case really supports the appellants.

Mr. Sitarama Rao for the respondent relied on the case of Kannusami Thonjirayan v. Muthusami Pillai (6) in which my learned brother took part. He pointed out that the decision in Veerabadra Tevan v. Veerappa Tevan (7) was really a case of an assignment of the mortgagee's interest. He also referred to Prasanna Venkatachella Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (8) which was a case of a transferee from a trustee. He agreed with the decision in Pandu v. Vithu (5) and differed from Chamier, J.'s opinion in Ghasi Ram v. Kishna (9) and held that the purchaser need not prove that he purchased in good faith that is without constructive notice of the restricted nature of the vendor's title. In Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkataswamy Naicker (10), it was held in the case of a transferee from a trustee that knowledge of the limited nature of the transferor's title will not disentitle the transferee from taking advantage of Art. 134 of the Limitation Act. In the case of trusts this is the view also adopted in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maraca- yar (11) which was afterwards affirmed by the Privy Council in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maracayar (12). These decisions were referred to by the learned Judges who decided Muthayya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetty (4) as consistent with their view. To sum up, the possible cases that may arise in a matter of this sort are four:—

1. Where the transfer on its face purports to be an assignment of the mortgagee's interest only, into such a case Art. 134 can never apply.

2. Where the transfer purported to be a sale-deed but as a matter of fact only an assignment of the mortgagee's interest was all that was bargained for, it may be conceded that in such a case also Art. 134 does not apply. And this is all that was decided in Muthayya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (4).

3. Where the deed of transfer is a sale-deed and what was bargained by the transferee is also an absolute sale though he knew that the transferor has only a mortgagee's interest, in such a case, though under the Acts of 1859 and 1871, Art 134 may not apply, I think under the Acts of 1877 and 1908 it applies. This is also the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Ram Kanai Ghosh v. Raja Sri Sri Sri Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur (13) which was also a case of a trustee. Seeing that the Privy Council have come to the same conclusion in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maracayar (12), I do not think any value can be attached to the dissent from the decision in Ram Kanai Ghosh v. Raja Sri Sri Sri Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur (13) in Singaram Chettiar v. Kalyanasundaram Pillai (2).

4. Where the transfer is in the form of a sale-deed and the transferee bargained for an absolute interest and acted bona fide throughout, to such a case there is no doubt that Art. 134 will always apply. Only the third case is the one in respect of which there seems to be some difference of opinion. But it seems to me that the preponderance of opinion in this High Court, in Bombay, in Calcutta and in the Privy Council is in favour of the view that Art. 134 applies. In the present case, though we may now construe Ex. I to be a deed of mortgage, it is impossible to say that the purchaser under Ex 2 acted otherwise than bona fide. According to the terms of Ex. 1 the debt was to be paid off after the 12th of January 1876 and before the 12th of January 1878 and in default of payment on the latter date, it was to operate as an absolute sale; under the law as it then stood, the mortgagee might have honestly thought that he obtained an absolute title by the default of payment within the stipulated date and the transferee might have also similarly thought that the transferor had an absolute title. That both were acting perfectly bona fide is clear from the recitals in Ex. II. It must be remembered that the Transfer of Property Act had not been enacted in 1878. The Privy Council held in Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken (14) that the principle that a mortgage is for ever redeemable was not known to the ancient law of India. It is true that in a later case Thumbuswamy Moodelly v. Hossain Rowthen (15) their Lordships indicated a different rule in the case of mortgages after the year 1858. But the parties to Ex. II might well have thought that in the case of mortgage documents between 1871 and 1875 the decision in Pattabhiramier v. Vencatarow Naicken (14) applied. It is true that the Madras High Court repelled such a contention, but this was long after 1878. In the above remarks I assumed that the parties to Ex. II knew that the proper construction of Ex. I is that it was a mortgage by conditional sale. But even this is extremely doubtful. Whatever view we may now take of Ex. I there is nothing to show that the parties to Ex. II did not honestly suppose it to be a deed of absolute sale which is what it purported to be. I think the present case is a case where the transferee acted bona fide according to the strictest meaning of the term, and Art. 134 applied. There is nothing to show that he did not pay the full value, according to the prices that ruled in 1878. I think the appeal fails on this ground and ought to be dismissed with costs.

faith" which appeared in the corresponding Articles of the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871, as being without any significance, so as to throw the onus on a purchaser of the full interest from a mortgagee to prove that he acted in good faith before he can plead limitation. The same Art. 134 governs both properties conveyed in trust and properties mortgaged when they have been transferred afterwards for valuable consideration. In the case of trust property, the Privy Council has decided in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maracayar (12) that a purchaser for valuable consideration with notice of the trust can under Art. 134 plead 12 years' adverse possession as a defence to a suit brought by the trustees. I see no reason to suppose that trustees were intended to be put in a worse position than mortgagors as regards recovery of alienated property. The only distinction between the positions of a purchaser from a mortgagee and a purchaser from a trustee is that a mortgagee as such has the mortgagee's interest which is assignable in the property, whereas a trustee as such has no transferable interest. This distinction is pointed out in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maracayar (11), but nevertheless it was held in that case that a transferee of trust property need not prove good faith before taking advantage of Art. 134, and the decision was confirmed by the Privy Council in Subbaiya Pandaram v. Muhamad Mustapha Maracayar (12). My judgment in Kannuswami Thonjirayan v. Muthusami Pillai (6) was quoted with approval in Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (4), and we have not been shown any reason for doubting its correctness beyond a foot-note at page 516 of Rustomji's Commentary on the Law of Limitation (3rd Edition). The view of the majority of the Full Bench which decided Mulla Vittil Seeti Kutti v. Kunhi Pathumma (16), that Art. 134 does not apply to cases where the transferee from a mortgagee does not get possession of the property will not help the appellants before us who are out of possession and ask for delivery of possession. In every case where Art. 134 is set up as a defence by a transferee from a mortgagee it is material to see what interest the mortgagee purported to transfer to him (vide Rego v. Abbu Beari (17); Muthaya Shetti v.

Kanthappa Shetti (4), Veerabadra Thevan v. Veerappa Tevan (7) and Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicker (10). Exhibit II dated July 16th, 1872, purports to be an absolute sale of the properties in Sch. A. and not a mere assignment of a mortgage interest in them. I think that both seller and purchaser must have honestly believed that the entire interest of the owner was being transferred by this document, seeing that if Ex. I dated January 12th, 1872, were to be treated as a sale with an option for re-purchase after five years and before six years, the date for re-purchase had passed and the property had become vested entirely in the purchaser on January 12th, 1878. The present suit was rightly held by the Subordinate Judge to be time-barred and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 32, 33—Presentation, what amounts to—Deed executed by pardanashin woman handed over to Sub-Registrar by husband, effect of.

The presentation of a document for registration is a question of fact requiring no formality.

The husband of a pardanashin lady went to a Sub-Registrar and handing over to the latter a deed executed by his wife requested him to go to his house and register the deed:

Held, that the handing over of the deed to the Sub-Registrar by the husband did not amount to "presentation" and did not preclude a subsequent presentation of the deed by the executant herself.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 23rd of June 1923.

Maulvi Muhammad Abdul Aziz, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that no question of law arises in this appeal. In order to support the argument of the learned (16) 43 Ind. Cas. 31; 40 M. 1040; 33 M. L. J. 320; (1917) M. W. N. 609; 22 M. L. T. 236; 6 L. W. 464.

Vakil on the point of law which he submitted to us, it is necessary for his case that presentation should have been made at the office of the Sub-Registrar. Then the point would have arisen. If presentation had been made at the office of the Sub-Registrar, it would have followed that it had been made by somebody under a power-of-attorney, which was not duly executed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. But the difficulty of considering that question of law in this particular case, is that the learned Judge has definitely held, that the act of the husband in going to the Sub-Registrar and handing over the deed, and asking him to go to the house of the pardanashin lady to have it registered, was not presentation. He has found as a fact that the presentation did not take place until the Sub-Registrar went to the house of the lady. It is admitted that if that is true, the decision of the learned District Judge is correct. As Lord Buckmaster, in the course of argument in the Privy Council in the case of Bharat Indu v. Hamid Ali Khan (1), (the material passage occurs on page 718)* says, "Presentation is a question of fact requiring no formality. The servant (and if we substitute the word 'husband' instead of 'servant' in this case, the cases become similar) really wrongly handed over the document to the Registrar; he should merely have told him to go to the house." Lord Phillimore, in the course of delivering their Lordships' opinion, said that the handing over by Wazir Beg, that is the servant, was inoperative but not injurious to the subsequent presentation.

So the learned Judge had the support of the Privy Council for taking the view of the fact of presentation which he has done. In other words, he has found a fact which is binding upon us. There was evidence to entitle him to do so, and we cannot interfere. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 102, Illus (b)—Mortgage suit—Consideration, receipt of—Burden of proof—Consideration, inadequacy of, effect of.

Where a mortgagor admits the execution of the mortgage-deed, it lies upon him to prove that the consideration mentioned in the deed had not been received by him in full. The mere fact that he had been recklessly borrowing money would not absolve him from discharging the burden that lies upon him. [p. 347, col. 2]

An equity can be founded upon gross inadequacy of consideration only when the inadequacy is such as to involve the conclusion that the party either did not understand what he was about or was the victim of some imposition. [p. 318, col. 1]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for sale upon a mortgage. The mortgage was executed by Jhanda Singh on the 28th of July 1915 securing an advance of Rs. 4,000 bearing interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem in favour of Jiwa Ram, the plaintiff. The detail of the consideration stated in the mortgage deed is as follows:—

(a) Rs. 2,200, in cash, and

(b) Rs. 1,800 in currency-notes.

The deed was signed by the mortgagor and attested by witnesses. On the same date the mortgagor executed a receipt "I have received the payment of Rs. 4,000 as

The mortgagor in his own hand put down the detail of the consideration money in the receipt and signed it. The period fixed for re-payment was six months. The property mortgaged consisted of a two storied house together with shops situated in the Lahore city, Gumti Bazar. The suit was instituted on the 28th of May 1918 claiming Rs. 4,000 principal and Rs. 2,720 interest for two years and ten months from the 28th July 1915 to the 28th of May 1918 at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem, the total claim being put to Rs. 6,720. The suit was resisted by the defendant on the plea that full consideration for the mortgage had not been received and that only Rs. 2,000 had been paid and an oral promise had been made either to confine the claim to Rs. 2,000 only or to pay the balance to the mortgagor whenever required by him. It was also pleaded that the rate of interest agreed upon was 9-annas per cent. per mensem as stated in the mortgage-deed. The mortgagor having refused to get the deed registered the mortgagee applied under s. 36 of the Indian Registration Act for the compulsory registration of the document. The Sub-Registrar having refused to register the deed an appeal was preferred against his order and the Registrar ordered its registration. On these pleas two issues were framed by the Trial Court, namely.

(1) Did the plaintiff advance Rs. 4,000 to the defendant on the 28th of July 1915?

(2) Did the defendant agree to pay interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem?

The burden of proof was laid by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge upon the plaintiff. To discharge this burden the plaintiff called the two marginal witnesses Raghpat Rai (P. W. No. 1) and Ram Chand (P. W. No. 2). The scribe having died could not be produced in Court. The plaintiff also produced his roznamcha bahi and further supported the claim by his own evidence by going into the witness-box. Evidence was produced on behalf of the defendant to prove that his property was released by the Court of Wards on the 1st of July 1915. On the 24th of July he mortgaged this very house to one Ramun Mal for Rs. 4,000 and only four days after this he executed the mortgage in suit in lieu of Rs. 4,000. On the 14th of October 1915 he mortgaged certain property to one Lakhu Mal for Rs. 6,000. The evidence disclosed that between the year 1914-15 the defendant incurred liability to the extent of Rs. 80,000. The defendant tried to prove that he was an inexperienced and impecunious youngman and that he had fallen into the clutches of a ring of money-lenders of Lahore. On those facts the defendant asked the Court to relieve him of the consequences of his extravagance and inexperience. The Court accepted this contention, scrutinised the evidence given by the plaintiff strictly and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove that Rs. 4,000 had been paid to the defendant as consideration for the mortgage. The defendant having acknowledged the payment of Rs. 2,000 the Court granted a decree for that amount with interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem.

Against this decision the present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff. The defendant also has filed a cross appeal questioning the decision of the Court below as to interest.

Mr. Badri Das for the plaintiff-appellant has contended that, having regard to the fact that the execution of the deed was admitted, it lay upon the defendant to prove that the consideration mentioned in it had not been received in full. He questioned the decision of the Court below relating to the onus probandi and contended that the mere fact that the defendant had been recklessly borrowing money would not absolve him of the burden that lay upon him. He relied on Illustration (b) appended to s. 102 of the Indian Evidence Act and cited the ruling reported as Fateh Ali Shah v. Miran Bakhsh (1). The facts of the reported case and the decision thereon are fully summarised in the head-note and it may be usefully quoted here.

"In a suit by plaintiff to recover from defendant No. 1 and his wife a sum of Rs. 10,000 principal and Rs. 2,400 interest on a promissory note purporting to be executed by both defendants on the 29th November 1895, payable six months after date, defendant No. 1 while admitting execution, pleaded that after he had attained majority his extravagance had necessitated his estate being again put under the Court of Wards; that after the time the debt was contracted he was living on a small monthly allowance of Rs. 160 which was inadequate for his wants; that he cast about for a loan; and that plaintiff, whom he described as an astute lawyer's clerk, caught him in his meshes and got him to execute the note for a grossly inadequate consideration. It was, therefore, urged on his behalf that the doctrine of the English Court of Chancery in the case of expectant heirs and necessitous persons should be applied, and a decree passed merely for what he had actually received, with reasonable interest thereon. It appeared that defendant No. 1 was a well grown and mature man of about thirty, who had already succeeded to a large estate, and that, though addicted to extravagance and debauchery he was not a person of weak mental capacity, or in any state of mental or bodily distress, or such necessity as made him incapable of weighing the consequences of the transaction into which he was entering with the plaintiff with whom he had had no previous dealings.

"Held, that under the above circumstances defendant No. 1 could not be placed in the category of those incapable of protecting themselves, and that the case must, therefore, be treated as an ordinary case of debtor and creditor, the onus of proof of all the disputed facts being, on the pleadings, upon defendant No. 1.

"Held, further, that there is an equity founded upon the gross inadequacy of consideration, but it can only be when the inadequacy is such as to involve the conclusion that the party either did not understand what he was about or was the victim of some imposition."

The facts and the pleadings in the present case are peculiarly similar to those in the reported case and every word of the decision applies with equal force to the defendant in the case. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the burden was wrongly placed upon the plaintiff.

The evidence produced by the defendant to prove his allegation is wholly unreliable and inadequate and has rightly been so characterised by the Court below. Mr. M. S. Bhagat the learned Counsel for the defendant, did not rely upon the statement of the witnesses produced on behalf of the defendant and admitted the correctness of the criticism made by the learned Judge of the Court below. We ourselves have carefully examined the evidence and we entirely agree with the learned Judge of the Court below in holding that it is unreliable and utterly useless. The defendant himself made contradictory statement as to the circumstances relating to the transaction. His statement for very good reasons was discarded by the Court below and we ourselves feel unable to attach any importance to it. The defendant has utterly failed to establish that the whole consideration for the mortgage had not been received by him.

We accordingly accept the appeal with costs and modifying the decree of the Court below grant a decree for Rs. 4,000, the principal money, together with interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem up to the date fixed and thereafter on the aggregate amount at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum. The office will prepare a preliminary decree for sale in accordance with the Form No. 4 given in Appendix D of the C. P. C.

The defendant's appeal has neither been seriously pressed nor do we find any force in it. We accordingly dismiss it with costs.

ANANDI LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss 40, 100—Charge created by decree—Enforcement against transferee for value without notice.

The general rule is that where the owner of property creates successive rights by different transactions entered into at different times, the rights will, in the absence of special circumstances, take effect in order of priority. The rule laid down in s 40 of the Transfer of Property Act that a right arising out of contract and not amounting to an interest or an easement, cannot be enforced against a transferee for value without notice has no application to an obligation creating a charge upon property. [p. 319, col 2; p. 350, col. 1]

A charge created by a decree is enforceable against a transferee for value without notice. [p. 350, col 1]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Allahabad, confirming that of the Munsif, Allahabad (West).

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju and Pandit S. S. Sastry, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law which is raised in this appeal is whether a charge which does not amount to a mortgage can be enforced against a transferee for value without notice of the charge. The Court below, relying on the decision in Maina v. Bachchi (1) has held that it can. The appellant contests this proposition. The plaintiff-respondent supports it, but in addition contends that on the finding of fact of the Court below the question does not really arise. He relies also on the fact that the appellant's title was acquired at execution sale and not by private conveyance.

The property in dispute consists of a half share in three houses Nos. 29, 45 and 66, situated in the city of Allahabad. The plaintiff, Anandi Lal, was at the institution of the suit the holder of a decree for Rs. 701-9-0 against the first defendant, Sham Lal, and seeks to enforce his decree by the sale of these houses. The houses originally belonged to the plaintiff and his cousin, Kalyan Chand, in equal shares. One Sheo Nath obtained a decree against Kalyan Chand and attached his half share in the houses before judgment on 5th February 1918. The suit was finally decreed on 13th June 1918 on the basis of a compromise which provided that the amount decreed in favour of Sheo Nath should constitute a charge on the property already under attachment. As an additional precaution the decree was registered. The rights of the decree-holder were purchased by the plaintiff, Anandi Lal, who proceeded to put the decree in execution. The houses were put up to sale and purchased by one Badri Prasad, but the sale was set aside on the application of Sham Lal, and the plaintiff has in consequence brought the present suit to establish his right to have the half share in the houses attached and sold under his decree.

The claim of the appellant arises out of proceedings taken by Bulaki another creditor of Kalyan Chand, who brought a suit, No. 189 of 1918, against the latter and obtained a decree on 30th April 1918. Before judgment Bulaki got an injunction, on 21st January, 1918, from the Small Cause Court restraining the judgment-debtor from transferring the property. It is said by the learned District Judge that the issue of this injunction was ultra vires, and it has not been relied on in argument, in this Court. In execution of this decree, Kalyan Chand's interest in the houses was attached and brought to sale and was ultimately purchased by Sham Lal on 22nd March 1919. Sham Lal got possession of the property on 27th March 1920. He subsequently sold his rights to the appellant, Mahadeo Prasad. The latter was added as a defendant after the institution of the suit. The question for decision is whether Sham Lal's purchase was or was not subject to the charge created by the decree of 13th June, 1918, in Sheo Nath's case, the benefit of which has now passed to the plaintiff.

According to the definition in s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act, a person is said to have notice of a fact, not only when he actually knows it but when he could have been aware of it but for wilful abstention from such inquiry or search as he ought to have made. Now in this case the purchaser, Sham Lal, knew that a previous suit had been filed against Kalyan Chand, for he had actually been summoned as a witness in that suit. He was summoned for the very day on which the compromise decree was passed. As he professes not to know whether he attended the Court or not (a fact which he could not possibly have forgotten), the probability is that he really was there. In any case he knew enough to make it incumbent on him to ascertain, before buying the property, what had happened in the previous suit and whether the creditor having got his decree had taken any steps against the property, which would affect the title of a subsequent purchaser. This is substantially what the District Judge finds, though he has put his finding in the somewhat indefinite form that the facts "strongly suggest" that Sham Lal knew more about the proceedings in the former case than he is now prepared to admit. The learned Judge further points out that the decree-holder, by registering his decree, had done everything possible to give notice to any one who might contemplate buying the decree. On the findings of the District Judge it must be held that there was sufficient to put the original defendant, Sham Lal, on enquiry, and that, if he had made any enquiry, he could not have failed to learn the true state of the case. He must, therefore, be held to have had notice of the plaintiff's charge within the meaning of the definition in s. 3 of the Act.

This really concludes the case. But we may say that we are not disposed to differ from Sir Henry Richards' view, in Maina v. Bachchi (1), that the position of a charge-holder, under the Transfer of Property Act, is stronger than that of a person holding a merely equitable charge under English Law, and that though there may be cases in which a mere equitable claim will not be enforced against bona fide transferees for value without notice, yet

"It is much too broad a proposition to state that in all cases where by act of parties or operation of law, immoveable property of one person is made security for payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the security will not be enforced even against such transferees."

The general rule is that where the owner of property creates successive rights by different transactions entered into at different times, the rights will, in the absence of special circumstances, take effect in order of priority. On the other hand, s. 40 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that a right arising out of contract and not amounting to an interest or an easement, cannot be enforced against a transferee for value without notice. In this case the right was not a merely contractual right but an obligation embodied in a decree. It is also to be remembered that Sham Lal was an execution purchaser who bought the interest of the judgment-debtor as it stood on the date of the decree. There are two Calcutta judgments, Royzuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (2) and Akhoy Kumar Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (3), both delivered by Mr. Justice Mookerjee, which lay down in general terms that a charge cannot be enforced against a transferee for value without notice. But in neither of these cases did the decision actually turn on this question. In the earlier case the document relied on as creating a charge was held to be invalid and in the later case the later transferee was found to have had notice of the charge. For the reasons given, we dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, to valuation

There is no provision of law compelling the decree-holder to bid at an auction-sale up to any sum that may be fixed by the Court. The valuation in the sale proclamation is intended primarily for the protection of the judgment-debtor and for giving information to the bidders at the auction-sale. It is in no sense intended to be an exact estimate of the value of the property and if in a sale properly published and conducted the highest bid, whether of the decree-holder or any other person, is some figure below the figure given in the sale proclamation, it is not competent to the Court to compel the decree-holder to bid higher than that highest bid.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaferpur, dated the 22nd December 1924, affirming that of the Munsif, Sitamarhi, dated the 14th August 1924.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan Singh, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—No one appears to oppose this appeal.

It appears that the decree-holder valued the property for the purposes of sale proclamation at Rs. 1,600. At the sale the decree-holder bid up to Rs. 600, but the Munsif declined to allow him to purchase the property unless he bid up to Rs. 1,300. As the decree-holder was unwilling to do so the sale was not held and the execution case was dismissed. The decree-holder then appealed and the Subordinate Judge, who heard the appeal agreed with the Munsif.

The present second appeal is preferred by the decree-holder.

There is no provision of law compelling the decree-holder to bid up to any sum that may be fixed by the Court. The valuation in the sale proclamation is intended primarily for the protection of the judgment-debtor and for giving information to the bidders at the auction sale. It is in no sense intended to be an exact estimate of the value of the property and if in a sale properly published and conducted the highest bid, whether of the decree-holder or any other person, is some figure below the figure given in the sale proclamation, it is not competent to the Court to compel the decree-holder to bid higher than that highest bid.

The order of the Subordinate Judge will be set aside and the appeal will be decreed and the decree-holder's bid of Rs. 600 must be accepted.

TARMAHOMED—PLAINTIFF—

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR

INDIA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Income Tax Act (II of 1886), s. 39—Declaration that assessment is ultra vires, suit for, maintainability of—Resident of Native State, whether liable to assessment on profits made outside British India.

The provisions of s. 39 of the Income Tax Act of 1886 do not operate to bar a suit in which it is claimed that an assessment is ultra vires.

The profits of a business are earned where the actual excess over the expenditure incurred is earned.

A resident of a Native State cannot be assessed to income-tax in British India on profits made in another Native State, unless it can be proved that those profits arose or were received in British India.

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Broach, in Suit No. 1 of 1921.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. M. K. Thakore), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first plaintiff is the proprietor of the Firm of Haji Tar Mahomed Hasan. The second plaintiff is the manager of the Broach shop of the firm. Plaintiff No. 1 resides in the town of Upleta in Gondal State in Kathiawar. He has various shops in the British territory, and three shops in the Baroda State. The income of each shop is received direct from the shop by the plaintiff at Upleta. The Income Tax Collector of the Broach City assessed the income of the plaintiffs on the income which was earned or accrued within the British territory. He also sought to levy income-tax on the income earned by the shops in the Baroda State. Eventually the plaintiff had to file these three suits for a declaration that the Income Tax Officer could not levy a tax on the income of the shops of the firm of plaintiff No. 1 situate at Miyagam, Karwan and Badharpur in the Native State of Baroda.

The first question is whether the plaintiff was not barred from bringing these suits by the provisions of s. 39 of the Indian Income Tax Act II of 1886, which says that no suit shall lie in any Civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment under this Act. If the assessment is clearly ultra vires then we do not think that the provisions of that Act will apply. In this case the Income Tax Collector of Broach seeks to assess a resident of the Gondal State on the profits made in the Baroda State and unless he can prove that those profits arose, or were received, in British India, then clearly the assessment is ultra vires.

It is not suggested that the profits were received in British India, but it is contended that the profits accrued or arose in British India. The Judge held that the plaintiff had proved that fact, but the argument upon which his conclusion is based is clearly fallacious. He says:—"For plaintiff it is contended that each branch is a separate entity, the branches in British India merely purchase to order and get their commission on the market price and merely act as any other business would do. The decision is a different one, but I think this is a case in which the profits arise or accrue in British India indirectly for the profits arise from the growth of the crops, conversion into grain and purchase here though the ultimate profit is made in Baroda State."

If we take an instance, which must constantly be happening, of the manager of a Baroda Branch of the plaintiff's firm sending an order to his commission agent in Bombay for certain bales of cotton, or bags of wheat, and the cotton or wheat is sent to Baroda and sold there at a profit, it cannot possibly be said that the profit arose in British India because the goods may have come from Bombay or some other town in British India. It is quite clear that the profits are earned where the actual money is earned in excess of the expenditure incurred.

That was decided in In re Aurangabad Mills Ltd. (1) where the Court referred to the case of Commissioner of Taxation v. Kirk (2).

On the question where the ultimate profits arose which would entitle the Income Tax Authority to levy a tax on profits, the Judge admits that the ultimate profits were made in the Baroda State.

We think, therefore, that the profits arose in the Baroda State. The decrees in all the three suits will be reversed on the ground that income-tax was levied without authorization, and the appeal allowed with costs. Plaintiff will be entitled to refund of the money he has paid, except in F. A No. 32, where the refund will be limited to the amount claimed in the appeal, viz. Rs. 460.

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants set up a peculiar custom in their community that widows and daughters were excluded by the reversioners of the last male member of a family and this custom has been found by the lower Appellate Court not have been proved.

The finding is objected to on the ground that it is bad in law, but I have not been referred to any statement in the judgment in which the law has been wrongly propounded and the arguments here have mainly been directed to showing that adequate weight has not been attached by the learned Subordinate Judge to certain portions of the evidence. It is also contended that two important statements made by the plaintiff's witnesses have not been considered at all. The evidence of these witnesses has been dealt with by the Subordinate Judge and there is nothing so vital in these so-called admissions as to make it obligatory on the Subordinate Judge to deal with them in greater detail. The whole of the evidence is oral although the custom is said to be one which is in accordance with the law which prevailed before the present system of Hindu Law came into being and consequently must have been in existence for an incredibly long period, the Judge, therefore, rightly relies on the argument that notwithstanding this fact, there is no documentary evidence to support the custom. Certain documents are alleged to be in existence which have not been produced and the appellants rely entirely on oral evidence. The Subordinate Judge has found that to be totally inadequate and I see no reason to differ from his conclusion. An attempt is made to support the custom by a statement in the District Gazetteer where similar custom in this community is referred to, but the custom there set out is not in accordance with the custom pleaded in this case and, therefore, does not at all corroborate the existence of the custom pleaded. I see no reason for not accepting this finding of the Subordinate Judge and, therefore, confirm it.

A further point is argued, namely, that the question at issue in this appeal was res judicata because in a connected suit tried with this one and decided at the same time no appeal was preferred. This question has been expressly decided by a Full Bench of this Court in Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (1) and I am bound by that decision. It is argued that that decision has been overruled by the Privy Council decision in Bommadevara Naganna Naidu Bahadur v. Ravi Venkatappayya (2). I have already considered this point in a previous case, Second Appeal No. 1643 of 1922, where I came to the conclusion that Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (1) was not expressly overruled and I am still of the same opinion. Applying Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (1) the Subordinate Judge is right in hearing this appeal and deciding it on the merits.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Ordinarily where a partition of a village has taken place, the joint ownership is destroyed, and each mahal becomes a separate unit for the purpose of regulating the rights of the co-sharers forming the proprietary body of that mahal inter se. [p 353, col. 2]

Where, however, the wajib-ul-arz relating to the village recognises the existence of a custom of pre-emption amongst the co-sharers of the village, and when the village is divided by partition into different mahals, the co-sharers agree to the partition subject to the reservation that the custom will continue in force irrespective of that partition, and that a co-sharer of one mahal would be entitled to pre-empt in respect of property situated in another mahal, the reservation operates as a condition precedent to the partition and is as much binding on the co-sharers, who are parties to the partition proceeding, as the partition itself. First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 24th of March 1925.

Mr. N. Upadhiya, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption, and the question for consideration is whether a custom of pre-emption recorded in the wajib-ul-arz framed prior to the partition of the village can be enforced after the village has been partitioned by a co-sharer of one mahal in respect of property situate in another mahal. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim, but the lower Appellate Court, relying on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Digambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayeed Khan (1), held that in the absence of a fresh wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of partition, indicating a contrary intention, it cannot be presumed as a matter of law or principle that the custom of pre-emption in force before partition was no longer to have effect or operation. It referred to the tarz taqsim prepared at the time of the partition, wherein it was stated as a matter of arrangement between the co-sharers, which the partition officer had accepted and the Collector had confirmed, that a co-sharer in a mahal will have a right of pre-emption in respect of the property of the other mahal despite the partition. Section 114 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, III of 1901, provides for the preparation of a tarz taqsim or partition proceeding determining the principles which shall govern the partition, detailing how the partition is to be made, and deciding all disputed questions that may have arisen in connection therewith. A partition is subsequently effected in accordance with the principles so laid down in the partition proceedings. If reservation is made in favour of a custom of the kind here in question, that reservation operates as a condition precedent to the partition and is as much binding on the co-sharers, who are parties to the partition proceeding, as the partition itself. It is not necessary that a fresh wajib-ul-arz should be prepared at the time of partition in respect of each mahal, embodying such a custom. The wajib-ul-arz relating to the village recognised the existence of a custom of pre-emption amongst the co-sharers of the village, and when the village was divided by partition into different mahals, the co-sharers agreed to the partition subject to the reservation that the custom will continue in force irrespective of that partition, and that a co-sharer of one mahal would be entitled to pre-empt in respect of property situated in another mahal. Ordinarily where a partition has taken place, the joint ownership is destroyed, and each mahal becomes a separate unit for the purpose of regulating the rights of the co-sharers, forming the proprietary body of that mahal inter se. But in this particular case the partition was made subject to the reservation that so far as the custom of pre-emption was concerned, it was to continue in force irrespective of the partition, or in other words, as if the interests of the co-sharers of the village in the different mahals had remained undisturbed. The defendant vendee is a stranger. The plaintiff pre-emptor is a co-

On general principles of law, interest is not due on money, unless it was intended to be paid or unless such intention could be implied from the usage of trade, as in the case of mercantile instruments.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in S. C. S. No. 2 of 1923 on the file of his Court.

Mr. N. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. N. Thirumalachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the petitioner. The plaintiff's suit was to recover principal and interest on account of dealings carried on between him and the defendant from the 22nd May 1916 to the 10th of December 1922. The plaintiff has been given a decree for Rs. 196 but he has not been awarded interest on that amount. The question in this case is whether the lower Court was wrong in refusing 'interest' to the petitioner. Interest is claimed under the Interest Act and on general principles of law.

In view of the finding that there was no demand for interest by the plaintiff, the plea that he is entitled to interest under the Interest Act cannot be accepted.

The next question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to interest on general principles of law. It is well-known that under the rules of English Common Law, interest is not due on money, unless interest was intended to be paid or unless it is implied from the usage of trade, as in the case of mercantile instruments. Applying this principle, the petitioner is not entitled to interest in this case because the learned Judge in para. 4 finds that the parties commenced dealings on the assumption that no interest would be demanded. This finding that interest was not intended to be paid is supported by the evidence of D. W. No. 1. Accepting this finding, I am of opinion that plaintiff is not entitled to interest even under the general principles of the Common Law.

The decision in Muhammad Abdul Gaffur Rowther v. Hamida Beevi Ammal (1) and Arunachalam Chettiar v. Rajeswara Setupati (2) are inapplicable to the present case, inasmuch as it has been found that interest was not intended to be charged, when the parties commenced their dealings. I may also mention that interest has not been claimed, based on the usage of trade.

I think, therefore, that the decision of the lower Court is right. I dismiss this revision petition with costs.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar, in Darkhast No. 251 of 1923.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants applied for the execution of the consent decree in Suit No. 350 of 1919, dated November 22, 1920, whereby it was ordered that the plaintiffs should pay to defendants Nos. 1-5 Rs. 13,000 by instalments. If the plaintiffs could not pay the amount, the defendants were entitled to recover the amount by sale of the property in suit which was charged with payment of the decree. The property was sold and the sale proceeds were not sufficient to satisfy the decree. Thereupon the defendants applied for the attachment of certain other property belonging to the plaintiffs. On October 13, 1923, an order was made and it was transferred to the Collector for further execution under s 68, C. P. C. The plaintiffs might have appealed against that order. But instead of doing that, they made a miscellaneous application to the Judge praying that the defendants' darkhast should be dismissed. We do not know how it was competent to the Judge to entertain that application. It is suggested now that he could deal with it under s. 151 of the Code. But it certainly is not intended that where a party does not take advantage of the right of appeal granted him by the Code that he should be allowed to come to the Court and ask the Court to exercise its powers under s. 151.

We think, therefore, that the Judge was not competent to dismiss the darkhast on this application. The appeal must be allowed. The darkhast must proceed. The appellant is entitled to his costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Viswanatha Sastri, J.—Appeal by plaintiff against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, in O. S. No. 39 of 1919. The facts which gave rise to the suit are as follows: One Shanmuga Kumaraswami Mudaliar died on January 15th, 1892, leaving two widows Parasakti Vadivu Anni, and Kaliani Anni (plaintiff) as his heirs. The two widows "to suit their convenience", divided some of the properties into equal moities, and the income from other properties was also similarly divided, as also debts due to the family. Parasakti died on December 10th, 1915, and, on her death, all the properties which she was enjoying accrued to plaintiff by right of survivorship. The properties which were in the enjoyment of Parasakti yielded an annual income of Rs. 6,000. The 1st defendant who is the next reversioner, fraudulently induced Parasakti to execute a sale-deed in his favour with respect to the properties specified in some of the schedules; and he also induced her to execute another sale-deed with respect to certain other properties in favour of the 7th defendant's father, benami for himself. A third sale-deed was executed in respect of certain other properties in favour of one Ramalinga Mudaliar, who is the son of 1st defendant's maternal uncle. Subsequent to these transactions, the 1st defendant obtained two other sale deeds with respect to properties comprised in Sch,

III, and he also obtained a usufructuary deed of mortgage with respect to properties comprised in Sch. XXVI. All these transactions were entered into without any legal necessity and with a view to defraud plaintiff. The 1st defendant also received monies from the Taluk Board, Shermadevi, which were legally due to plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the undivided sons of the 1st defendant. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are the widows of Renganatha Mudaliar the undivided elder brother of the 1st defendant; and the 7th defendant is the son of the 1st defendant's sister. Hence the suit for the recovery of the properties that were in the possession of Parasakti Vadivu Anni, together with mesne profits. The 1st defendant contended that plaintiff and Parasakti effected an absolute partition of the properties, that each gave up the right she had to succeed to the properties that fell to the share of the other by right of survivorship; that the alienations sought to be impeached were for purposes binding on the estate, and that plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 adopted the written statement of the 1st defendant. The 7th defendant contended that the alienations in his favour were for purposes binding on the estate. The 8th defendant was added as a supplementary defendant on the ground that the property specified in Sch. XXV was in her possession, but she disclaimed all interest therein. The 9th defendant was also, subsequent to the suit, added as a party, on the ground that he claimed an interest in Schs. XXV and LIX. He pleaded that the alienations were binding on the estate. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the division between the widows was only for the sake of convenience, that neither of them gave up the right she had to succeed to the properties in the possession of the other, and that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the properties comprised in all the Schedules, except Schs. II, XII, and XIII. The appeal relates to properties with respect to which possession was not decreed and the 1st defendant filed a memorandum of objections with respect to the items decreed and which were in his possession. A similar memorandum of objections was filed by the 7th defendant.

In dealing with the memorandum of objections the question to be considered is, the nature of the estate taken up by the widows by reason of the arrangement said to have been come to between them. The contention of the plaintiff is that they were in enjoyment of separate portions simply for the sake of convenience, whereas the contention of the defendants is that the partition gave each widow an absolute interest in the properties, and that the widows parted with their right of survivorship. There is no document to evidence the partition of the properties now in suit, but it was contended on behalf of the respondents that the partition was on the lines of Ex. L of the date January 30th, 1892. The circumstances which led up to the execution of Ex. L are these. Shanmuga Kumaraswami died on January 15th, 1892; and, on February 10th 1892, Avudaiyammal Anni widow of his deceased brother, presented for registration a document which purported to be a Will, and which was put forward as having been executed by Shanmuga Kumaraswami on 14th January 1892. The registration of the Will appears to have been opposed on behalf of the 1st defendant, as will appear from Ex. AAAAA. Exhibit L came into existence on January 30th, 1892, and it related to houses and house sites which have no connection with the present claim. To this document plaintiff, Parasakti and Avudaiyammal were parties, and the document recites that these three persons had acquired under the Will of Shanmuga Kumaraswami the properties absolutely; and that the properties described in the document were to be enjoyed in the manner stated therein. The concluding words of the document on which reliance was placed are these "the properties belonging to the respective persons, be enjoyed by them alone with all rights." It was urged on behalf of the 1st respondent that the other properties left by Shanmuga Kumaraswami, including the properties now in suit, were also divided in the same manner in which the properties comprised in Ex. L were divided; but there is no document to evidence the partition of these properties; nor is the date of the division ascertainable with any degree of certainty. In her evidence, plaintiff stated that "Ex. L was not brought into force as there were disputes about the Will", and this statement of hers receives support from the circumstance that there was admittedly no division of the properties not comprised in Ex. L into three equal shares, between plaintiff Parasakti and Avudaiyammal, as contemplated in Ex. L. Parasakti gave evidence in the Ambasamudram District Munsif's Court in a suit between her, plaintiff and 1st defendant; and Ex. G is a copy of the deposition then given. This is what appears at page 28 of the paper-book. "After the death of my husband, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and myself were enjoying his properties. We were enjoying them, each one share. For Fasli 1301, we paid theerri in three shares". At page 33 of the paper book she says "Now for the past five or six months the 2nd defendant and myself have been paying in two shares". She gave her evidence in June 1894, and consequently, the payment of kist in two shares must have been only from January 1894, Ex. M of the date July 15th 1893, is a lease deed in favour of plaintiff and Parasakti, and the circumstance that the lease deed was taken in their joint names indicates that on the date of this document there was no division of the properties between them. There is, therefore, strong ground for coming to the conclusion that the division of the properties not comprised in Ex. L was not made at or about the time of Ex. L but two years afterwards. The 1st defendant had not examined himself and we have not been referred to any oral evidence on his side as to the division of the properties in suit in the manner contended for by him.

Parasakti and plaintiff admittedly enjoyed the properties not comprised in Ex. L, in equal shares; and, it was contended on behalf of the 1st defendant that this enjoyment was in pursuance of an arrangement between them to the effect that each was to take an absolute interest in the properties each got; and that there was to be no right of survivorship between them. We are asked to infer such an arrangement from the following circumstances: (1) The division of the debts due to the estate into two equal shares; (2) the liability undertaken by each widow to pay the debts due from the estate, in equal shares; (3) their conduct in pleading that they were each liable to pay only a half share in the debt, when creditors sued them; (4) compromises made by them in such suits under which each agreed to pay a half share in the debts; (5) Succession Certificates got by each of them with respect to half of some of the debts; (6) each of them executing promissory notes in favour of creditors with respect to a half share in the debts due by their husband; (7) mortgages and sales effected separately, giving the alienees absolute rights in the shares enjoyed by each; (8) each contributing half the expenses for the Kattalais that had to be performed; (9) each paying kist separately for the portions enjoyed by her; and (10) each suing the other for contribution with respect to excess payments made by her. It appears to me that all these circumstances are consistent with the division having been made for the sake of convenience. The learned Vakil for the 1st respondent contended that this could not be said with respect to the mortgages and sales effected separately; as also with respect to suits for contribution, although it may be so said with respect to the other circumstances. So far as suits for contribution go, I fail to see why such suits would not lie in case the arrangement had been only for the sake of convenience. The claim may be based not under the Common Law; but under the arrangement between the parties to the effect that each was to pay a half share in the debts due by her husband, and any violation of this arrangement by reason of which one widow was sued by a creditor and made to pay the entire debt, would certainly entitle her to recover from the other widow the portion paid in excess of her share. With respect to mortgages and sales, each widow did, no doubt, sell her half share, but this circumstance could not be taken to indicate that each widow gave up the right of survivorship to the portion enjoyed by the other widow, in case she survived her. Even in case the division had been only for the sake of convenience, the same thing would have been done. The whole question is one of intention, and there is clear documentary evidence in the case which, in my opinion, conclusively proves that such an intention was not present in the minds of the widows at the time they came to enjoy the properties separately. Exhibit C of the date December 10th, 1909, is a sale-deed executed by Parasakti in favour of the 1st defendant, and therein the following appears "What belonged to my husband and what he was enjoying and for what an arrangement was made to the effect that afterwards I and Kaliani Anni (plaintiff) should enjoy in equal half shares for convenience, etc". A similar recital appears in Ex. D which is a document executed by plaintiff in favour of 1st defendant on June 8th 1910. There was thus a clear statement on the part of both the widows as early as 1909 to the effect that their enjoyment separately was only for the sake of convenience. That the 1st defendant was also under the same impression will appear from Ex. A which is a copy of the plaint presented by him in the Subordinate Judge's Court, Tinnevely, to which plaint plaintiff and Parasakti were parties. In para. 6 there is a clear statement to the effect that the widows were "for the sake of convenience" enjoying the properties by halves. In para. 7 there is a statement to the effect that plaintiff (present defendant) was to get the properties after the lifetime of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (plaintiff and Parasakti), and such a statement would not have been made in case the division was absolute. In para. 9 it was stated that the sale effected by the 1st defendant without the consent of the 2nd defendant would not be valid beyond the lifetime of the 1st defendant. If the division was complete and the right of survivorship was given up, the consent of one widow to the alienation effected by the other widow would not have been necessary. Exhibit J is the plaint in another suit instituted by 1st defendant in the District Munsif's Court, Ambasamudram in the year 1902, to which suit Parasakti and plaintiff were parties. Although the name of the plaintiff is given as Medai Dalavoi Thitharappa Mudaliar, he is said to be the son of Medai Dalavoi Kumarasami Mudaliar, and the signature to the body of the plaint, as also to the verification, are of Tirumallappa Mudaliar, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff in that suit was the present 1st defendant. In para. 6 of this plaint, the 1st defendant claims to be entitled to all the properties left by Shanmuga Kumaraswami after the death of the two widows, and such a demand would not have been made in case there had been a complete division in status, and the right of survivorship lost to each of the widows. There is, therefore, strong documentary evidence to indicate that the widows intended the division to be only for the sake of convenience, and that the 1st defendant was also under the same impression. Reference was made to Exs. XV and XV (a) which are sale-deeds executed by Parasakti in favour of the 1st defendant on the 19th of November 1915. These documents were admittedly executed a few days before her death, and she was aged 70 then. It is stated in these documents that Kaliani had no subsequent interest in the properties. It was suggested on behalf of the plaintiff that the 1st defendant acquired influence over Parasakti during her later days, and got from her documents in his favour. The 1st defendant has not gone into the witness-box, and the circumstances under which Exs. XV and XV (a) were obtained have not been explained. The documents relating to the ten circumstances above referred to, have been dealt with in detail by the learned Subordinate Judge and it will serve no useful purpose to deal with them here.

The right of Hindu widows to effect a partition of their husbands' estate in such a way as to release the right of survivorship each possessed, was first recognised in Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (1). It was there held that there was no legal obstacle to prevent one of two co-widows from so far releasing her right of survivorship as to preclude her from recovering from an alienee after the other co-widow's death, property given by way of partition to the latter and alienated by her. In this case there was a formal registered partition deed and, upon a construction of its terms it was held that the right of survivorship was given up. In Gomathi Ammal v. Kupputhaya Ammal (2), the above mentioned case was referred to, and it was held that it was open to daughters while effecting a partition, by apt language to renounce their right of survivorship. In that case the daughters proceeded on the erroneous view that they had not a qualified but had an absolute estate which carried with it no right of survivorship, and it was held that the parties could not have possibly intended to renounce and did not renounce the rights of each to take as the father's heir. The learned Judges observe that it was a question of intention in each case, to be gathered from the deed of partition, if any, and the surrounding circumstances, whether the daughters retained or renounced their rights of survivorship. In Subbammal v. Krishna Aiyar (3) there was a deed of partition between the widows; and, on the basis of the deed it was held that the female heirs holding limited estates can so divide as to preclude the right of survivorship inter se. That this could also be done by means of an oral partition was held in Alamelu Ammal v. Balu Ammal (4). The oral partition was proved; and the learned Judge (Sadasiva Iyer, J.), observes as follows: "In this view, the plaintiffs having effected an oral partition with Subbammal, giving her under the oral partition agreement an absolute right in plaint properties, which gift involves the relinquishment by themselves of their right to claim possession of the property if they survived Subbammal, the said partition arrangement is binding upon them". The Vakil for the 1st respondent referred to the case of Hardei v. Bhagwan Singh (5) but it will appear from the observations at page 440* that the arrangement was supported, on the ground that it was a family settlement, and that the rights of the parties were in doubt when the partition was made.

(1) 22 M. 522; 9 M. L. J. 101; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 373.

(2) 14 M. L. J. 175

(3) 22 Ind. Cas. 399; 26 M. L. J. 479.

The Vakil for the 1st respondent, also referred to the judgment in an unreported case, Nelakanti Sundarasiva Row v. Ivatuary Viyyamma (6) but in that case this Court held that there was an arrangement between the parties to the effect that the division was absolute: although the Trial Judge held that such an inference should be drawn from the conduct of the parties. The trend of the decisions above referred to indicates to my mind that it has to be proved by clear evidence that the widows were conscious of the right of survivorship possessed by them; and that they intended to give up such right. Exhibit L is of no value because the division under it was made on the clear supposition that the widows got an absolute interest under the Will left by their husband. This document cannot, therefore, indicate the intention with which the properties in suit were divided; and there being no other evidence to indicate what the intention of the parties was when the properties were divided; and the circumstances referred to by the 1st defendant's Vakil being not conclusive for the purpose of proving division in status; coupled with the fact that Exs. A, C, D and J prove in unmistakable terms that the division was only for the sake of convenience; the only conclusion that can be come to is the one come to by the learned Subordinate Judge, i. e., that there was no giving up by the widows of the right of survivorship, and that separate enjoyment in equal moieties was resolved upon only for the sake of convenience.

The memorandum of objections filed by the 1st respondent relates also to alienations with respect to properties in the possession of the 1st defendant, which have not been upheld. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer who appeared for the respondent did not urge any arguments impeaching the finding of the lower Court with respect to these alienations.

The 7th defendant also filed a memorandum of objections with respect to the sales in his favour made under Exs. LXI, LXII, LXIII. He is closely related to the 1st defendant, and did not examine himself. Exhibit LXI of the date 4th October 1909 is for a sum of Rs. 700, and it recites that this amount was paid in cash, to meet the pilgrimage expenses of Parasakti Vadivu. There is no evidence to show that Parasakti Vadivu went on a pilgrimage at or about the time of Ex. LXI, and the circumstance that the plaintiff admitted that she went twice to Benares could not be availed of because, she has not stated that Parasakti Vadivu went to Benares at or about the time of Ex. LXI. Moreover, the properties which were in the possession of Parasakti Vadivu were yielding an income of Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 6,000 a year; and it cannot be said that she could not have gone on a pilgrimage without effecting a sale of immoveable properties.

Exhibit LXII dated November 29th 1910, appears to be a rectification deed and is connected with and goes with Ex. LXI.

Exhibit LXIII of the date December 6th 1915 purports to be for a sum of Rs. 2,000 and this amount is said to have been borrowed by Parasakti Vadivu "for the purpose of establishing a fund for the expenses of her funeral obsequies". This document was executed four days before her death, and there is absolutely no evidence to show that the amount was entrusted with any person to perform her funeral obsequies. The case in Sadashiv Bhaskar Joshi v. Dhakubai (7) was relied on, but the facts of that case are that the amount was spent on funeral obsequies; and it was consequently held that the amount spent was a charge upon the husband's estate. The conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge with respect to these documents has to be upheld.

The appeal preferred by plaintiff relates to properties comprised in Schs. II, XII and XIII. The sale-deeds are Exs. III, IV and IX, and [all that was urged was that the properties were sold for very inadequate sums. It was said that the plaintiff sold her share under Exs. XI and XII for Rs. 5,300 and odd, that Ex. IX was only for Rs. 4,000, that Exs. XI and XII had been executed 10 months prior to Ex. IX and that the sale under Ex. IX should also have been for at least Rs. 5,300. It was also said that the 1st defendant purchased under Ex. XIII the properties conveyed under Exs. IX, XI and XII for a sum of Rs. 6,500, and that this circumstance also indicated that the sale for Rs. 4,000 under Ex. IX was for a grossly inadequate sum. Beyond the inference to be drawn from the considerations recited in Exs. XI and XII no evidence worth the name has been let in to prove that the sale under Ex. IX was for a grossly inadequate sum. Exhibit Q was relied upon, but the person who prepared the statement was not examined, and the value of the property as given in it is, therefore, of no evidentiary value. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge with respect to these schedules has, therefore, to be upheld.

Another objection urged by the Vakils for the appellant with respect to alienations evidenced by Exs. III, IV and IX was, that the registration of these documents was invalid. It was stated that certain items of property not intended to be conveyed, were conveyed under them, that this was done with a view to give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar within whose jurisdiction the vendors resided, and that as a fraud on the Registration Law was practised, the registration was invalid. It was conceded that the items said to have been included with this view belonged to the vendors and neither the writer nor the attesters to these documents have been examined for the purpose of proving that the items were never intended to be conveyed. It was said that these items did not pass into the possession of the vendees but this circumstance even if true cannot be taken to imply that they were included in the documents for the purpose of practising fraud upon the Registration Law. This contention cannot, therefore, prevail. Another objection urged by the appellant's Vakils was with respect to the interest allowed on mesne profits. The lower Court allowed interest at six per cent. and it was contended that interest should have been allowed at the rate of 12 per cent. I am not prepared to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court.

The last ground of appeal relates to mesne profits subsequent to suit and upto the date of the delivery of possession. It was mentioned by the 1st respondent's Vakils that a suit had been filed by the plaintiff for the recovery of mesne profits for a period of three years subsequent to suit; but the plaintiff's Vakils stated that he was prepared to withdraw that suit which was still pending and which was stayed pending this appeal, in case this Court gave a direction for the recovery of mesne profits due from the date of plaint to the date of the delivery of possession. The Vakils for the 1st respondent stated that he had no objection to this course.

The decree of the lower Court will, therefore, be modified by adding a direction to the effect that the plaintiff will be entitled to mesne profits from the date of plaint to the date of the delivery of possession, the amount to be ascertained by the lower Court.

The printing in this case appears to me to have been recklessly done. There are two paper-books containing 624 pages. Schedules have been printed which have no bearing with the matters in issue between the parties and our attention was not drawn to more than 30 Exhibits. Excepting the evidence of plaintiff, the remaining oral evidence was not referred to. It appears to me that the costs of printing the two paper-books containing oral and documentary evidence in the case should not be allowed in taxation.

In the result the decree of the lower Court will be modified as indicated above. Appellant will pay the costs of the contesting respondents, the costs not to include the costs of printing the oral and documentary evidence in the case.

The memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 and 7 will stand dismissed with costs, costs not to include cost of printing paper-books.

The water charges sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council as required by s. 15 (1) of the Cantonments Act and levied by a Cantonment Committee under Notifications issued under the said section are in the nature of a tax and cannot be increased or varied by the Committee without the previous like sanction of the Governor-General in Council [p. 362, col. 1].

Rule 157 of the Cantonment Code of 1912 does not empower a Cantonment Committee to limit the quantity of water supplied in proportion to the buying value of the tax levied. This rule is not intended by implication to vest a non-commercial body like a Cantonment Committee with the right to vend water as a commodity [p. 363, col. 2].

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Hyderabad Sind, dated the 2nd December 1924.

Mr. Pahlajsing B. Advani, for the Appellant.

Captain C. C. Lewis, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration that certain water charges levied from him by the Cantonment Committee of Hyderabad were in excess of the water rates sanctioned by Government for refund of the excess amount levied and for Rs. 200 as damages sustained by him during the period his water supply was cut off for refusal to pay such charges.

The plaintiff-appellant has died since the filing of this appeal and his representative has been brought on the record.

The facts leading up to this litigation are not in dispute.

The Cantonment Committee received its supply of water from the Hyderabad Municipality on payment of certain charges settled by the two bodies on some date prior to 1913. The Cantonment Committee recouped itself for the amount paid to the Municipality by recovering certain water rates from the occupants of property within the Cantonment limits, which were sanctioned by Government in 1913. Government Notification No. 5099 of 1923, empowered the Committee inter alia to levy for use of water for domestic purposes a flat rate of 10 per cent. on the rental of all premises within their limits and provided for the mode of fixing such rentals. Government Notification No. 5594 empowered the Committee to charge certain water rates for buildings under construction with a minimum flat rate of Rs. 4 per month where no water main was on the premises, and a graduated but uniform scale of rates where a water main had been laid, the scale of rates to be levied depending on the dimensions of the water main.

In 1923 the Hyderabad Municipality revised its terms for the supply of water and it was agreed between the two bodies that from 1st April 1923 the Hyderabad Municipality was to receive payment at the rate of Re. 0-10-6 per 1000 gallons of water supplied within the Cantonment limits. In anticipation of the sanction of Government and the issue of fresh Notification enabling the Committee to charge higher rates, the Committee fixed metres to the water mains of some of the residential buildings, where they thought that the flat rate of 10 per cent. on the rental was not a sufficient recompense for the supply of water with the object for charging such occupants the actual cost of water consumed calculated at the rate of Re. 0-10-6 per 1000 gallons subject, however, to the payment of the minimum water rate on the 10 per cent. rental basis.

The plaintiff-appellant was the owner of one of such Bungalows. He went to live in it in the beginning of April 1923 and immediately thereafter he commenced to rear a garden in his compound and also to carry out extensive repairs, alterations and additions. He was a retired Executive Engineer and required greater comforts than those afforded by the Bungalow as already constructed. For April and May 1923 the Committee sent him a bill for Rs. 6 per month for use of water for domestic purposes and for Rs. 8 per month for constructional purposes in terms of the two Notifications. He demurred to the payment of a double water rate and contended that Government Notification No. 5594 of 1913 referred to new buildings only. The Committee thereupon decided to charge him for the quantity registered by the metre attached to his house at their actual cost of Re. 0-10-6 for 1000 gallons which was far in excess of Rs. 14 per month. The bill for one of the months alone was Rs. 43. The plaintiff refused to pay the amended bills with the result that the Committee cut off his water connection which was restored to him on his paying under protest his overdue bills. After paying such bills he instituted the present suit.

The points urged before us are the same taken in the lower Court.

The main point at issue between the parties is as to the right of the Committee to claim for supply of water in excess of rates sanctioned by Government and it depends on the question whether such rates are levied as a tax and cannot be increased or varied by the Committee without the like sanction of Government.

A perusal of the two Notifications Nos. 5099/13 and 5594/13 shows without a shadow of doubt that the water rates sanctioned thereunder were intended to be enforced as taxes. Both Notifications purport to have been issued under s. 15 (1) of the Cantonments Act 1910 which reads as follows:—

"With the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government may, by Notification in the Official Gazette,—

(a) impose in any Cantonment which is not included in a Municipality any tax which, under any enactment in force at the date of the Notification, can be imposed in any Municipality within the territories administered by such Government; and

(b) abolish or modify any tax so imposed."

Government Notification No. 5099 of 1913 provides for a flat rate to be imposed in the case of residential buildings on their rental basis irrespective of the quantity of water consumed by the registered occupant or his tenant.

Government Notification No. 5594 of 1913 again provides for a flat minimum rate of Rs. 4 per month for each building under construction irrespective of the quantity of water used in any particular month. Neither of the two Notifications afford an option to the registered occupant to avoid payment of the water rate on the ground that he does not intend to use water supplied by the Committee. An occupant who has a well in his premises or is prepared to dig one or who receives his water supply from a channel adjoining and outside the Cantonment limits is equally liable to pay the flat rates fixed by the two Notifications.

It is likewise not open to a registered occupant to pay less than the sanctioned water rate on the ground that he is consuming less water than his neighbour whose rental is less than his.

The use of the expression "water rate" in the two Notifications does not indicate that such water rate is not a tax. The expression "tax" is more appropriately used in respect of an imperial tax imposed on persons generally without reference to locality as opposed to a local, or Municipal tax levied for the use of a local authority on persons or property within the local limits of such authority and often referred to as a rate.

The learned District Judge has relied on certain observations of Fry, L. J., in Badcock v. Hunt (1) in support of his finding that the water rates referred to in the two Notifications were not taxes but mere charges for the supply of water, and as such liable to be varied without sanction of Government.

Badcock's case (1) is distinguishable and the observations of Fry, L. J., so far as they apply to the facts of the present case on the contrary support the plaintiff's case.

In that case the Court of Appeal was called upon to interpret a covenant in a lease of Warehouse in the City of London by which the lessor had covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes and impositions whatsoever whether Parliamentary parochial or imposed by the Corporation of the City of London or otherwise, however, which were or thereafter might be rated or assessed on the said premises". And the lessee claimed to recover from the lessor under the terms of that covenant certain charges paid by them to the New River Company of London for supply of water to the lessees for domestic purposes. These charges were referred to in the incorporating Statute of the River Company as water rates, and it was not seriously contended that such charges or rates were not the rates specifically referred to in the covenant, and were payable only in the event of the lessee voluntarily receiving the supply of water. The only material question for decision was whether such charges were "imposed" within the meaning of the covenant and it was held that as such charges were payable only in the event of the lessee voluntarily desiring to have the supply of water, they were not imposed on him. The following observations of Fry, L. J. at page 149* are pertinent to the point at issue:

"In my judgment it is not imposed at all within the meaning of the covenant, it becomes payable by the voluntary action of the person who chooses to take the water and thereby incurs the legal liability to pay for it; it is not, like the rates and charges previously mentioned in the covenant, an imposition by some superior authority which a man becomes liable to pay whether he will or not."

These observations support the case of the plaintiff and not that of the defendant. Here the sanctioned water rates are in no way voluntary depending on the plaintiff's desire to have the water supply. The distinction between a voluntary and a non-voluntary liability for water rate payable to a District Municipal Corporation under s. 71 of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901 and that payable to the Municipal Corporation of Bombay under s. 141 of the Bombay City Municipal Act III of 1888 was pointed out by Fawcett, J. C. in The Committee of Management of Hyderabad v. Ramchand Zownkiram (2). The water rate referred to in the two Notifications is not only expressed to be but is pre-eminently a tax imposed by the Crown and could not be modified without the sanction of Government.

It has been urged by the learned Solicitor for the Crown that though the water rate prescribed by the two Notifications be held to be a tax, r. 157 in Ch. IX of the Cantonment Code of 1912 empowers the Cantonment Committee to control the supply of water and that it is, therefore, open to the Committee to prescribe the quantity of water an occupant may consume free of charges in lieu of the water rate or tax imposed on him and to supply to him such additional quantity of water as he may require on such reasonable terms as the Committee may prescribe. And it is urged that in the present case the Committee had prescribed the most reasonable rate of charging the plaintiff the actual cost to the Committee of such supply of water. At first sight this argument may appear to be sound and supported by equitable considerations. But the obvious answer to it is that the Cantonment Committee is a creature of the Statute and can only exercise such powers as are expressly or impliedly delegated to it and any act of the Committee outside the scope of such powers is ultra vires. No express provisions similar to those of s. 71 of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901 empowering the Cantonment Committee to supply water to occupants on its own terms find place either in the Cantonments Act of 1910 or the Cantonment Code of 1912. Chapter IX of the Cantonment Code of 1912 is intended to secure a pure and uncontaminated supply of water and to prevent its waste. It provides adequate remedies by way of punishment for the enforcement of its rules. This Chapter is, however, not intended to empower the Cantonment Committee to deal in water or to fix and charge reasonable rates for its supply. And it is difficult for us to read into r. 157 a provision enabling the Committee to limit the quantity of water supplied in proportion to the buying value of the tax levied or to hold that this rule was intended by implication to vest in a non-commercial body like the Cantonment Committee the right to vend water as a commodity. The two Notifications do not purport to entail any limitations on the quantity of water to be supplied and, however, equitable the action of the Committee may be, it cannot be upheld as ultra vires.

We think the learned District Judge was in error in refusing to grant the declaration asked for.

With regard to the liability of the plaintiff to pay the water rate both for domestic and for constructional purposes, we think on the facts of this case, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff was liable. He was using water for two different purposes. He was occupying the Bungalow and using water for domestic purposes. He was also carrying out extensive alterations which were not confined to mere white-washing of the Bungalow or to ordinary and usual repairs which a landlord is required to carry out to maintain the Bungalow in proper condition, but consisted of building new walls and additional rooms. We hold that, for the period in suit the plaintiff was liable to pay Rs. 6 per month as the water rate for domestic purposes and Rs. 8 per month as the water rate for his building being under construction and that his refusal to pay at that rate was wrongful.

The plaintiff has failed to prove that he suffered Rs. 200 as damages or that he suffered any damage at all. His case, therefore, fails on this count also.

We accordingly vary the decree of the lower Court by granting relief for declaration that the act of the Cantonment Committee in enforcing payment of water charges in excess of the sanctioned rates was ultra vires, and by ordering that the defendant do refund to the legal representative of the plaintiff the excess recovered over and above Rs. 14 per month for the period in suit. In the circumstances of the present case where the plaintiff has succeeded only in part we order that each party should bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 27th August 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 27 of 1924.

Mr. M. V. Abhankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Nilkanth is the nephew of the defendant Gajanan.

The suit was brought in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Nagpur, for partition of two houses in Mouza Nagardhan of Ramtek as well as of moveables and also for Rs. 900 being the plaintiff's alleged share of profits of an occupancy field in Mouza Nandapuri. The pleadings of the parties have been fully stated in both the judgments of the lower Courts and need not be repeated here. On the issues which arise on these pleadings the Subordinate Judge gave the following findings:—

(a) that the plaintiff and defendant were joint on the date of suit;

(b) that in revenue proceedings the defendant had admitted the fact of jointness with the plaintiff;

(c) that one of the houses in the plaint, viz., that facing west, was the self-acquisition of the defendant and was not liable to be partitioned,

(d) that the claim to partition of the house was not barred by ss. 35 and 94 of the Tenancy Act, 1898;

(e) that there were certain family debts binding on the plaintiff, who was then a minor;

(f) that plaintiff was entitled to the half share of the profits of the field and could claim them for 18 years from 1904 to 1922;

(g) that there was no ancestral moveable property;

(h) that defendant and plaintiff's father had not separated in 1901;

(i) that plaintiff was liable for certain debts paid by the defendant.

On these findings a preliminary decree was passed for partition of the one house held as joint property and the defendant was ordered to pay Rs. 537-8 0 as plaintiff's share of profits of the field described above.

The defendant appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur. He only succeeded as regards part of the decree which ordered the payment of Rs. 537-8-0 on account of profits of the field. The plaintiff has now come up on second appeal as regards dismissal of this part of the relief claimed by him.

The Additional District Judge has dealt with the matter of profits in paras. 6 and 7 of his judgment. He has held that there was no exclusion of the plaintiff until his title was denied in the year 1921. It seems to me that in para. 2 of the plaint there was a clear allegation which practically amounted to one of exclusion,

That allegation was to the effect that one year after the death of Jagoba, father of the plaintiff, the defendant made it impossible for the plaintiff and his mother to live with him and he was forced to remove to his maternal . . . . In para. 4 of the plaint it was alleged that when after the plaintiff had attained majority he in 1921 claimed the profits for 18 years during which he had been excluded from the enjoyment of the property, the defendant had refused to pay him any such profits. I cannot, therefore, agree with the following remarks made in para. 6 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment:—

"It is not alleged in the plaint that there was a dispossession or that there was any occasion to prohibit the plaintiff from exercising possessory rights or that the title was denied till the year 1921."

It is true that the plaint as the Judge of the lower Appellate Court himself remarks was inartistically drafted, but if it be read as a whole I think the only reasonable construction to be put on it was that there was a definite allegation of exclusion. If any doubt remained on this point it seems to me to be removed by the allegations of the defendant himself in his written statement dated the 28th February 1923. Paragraph 5 thereof if it means anything at all clearly implies that from 1901 the defendant remained in sole possession of the property. This allegation the defendant has, as we have seen, failed to establish, but it is nonetheless of great value as indicating his possession with regard to the field in question. In para. 6 of the same written statement, there was a clear and unequivocal denial that the plaintiff had ever been the tenant of the field in question. In para. 11 of the same, it was clearly alleged that the plaintiff had been admittedly excluded from the plaint property for more than 12 years before the date of the suit and, as if to make certainty sure para. 12 went on to offer a plea of abandonment of the plaint property, while in para. 19 a definite affirmation was made that the defendant was the sole owner of the field in question. If these allegations mean anything at all they imply that the defendant asserted his exclusive right to the tenancy of the field, that he denied jointness of the plaintiff therein, and further admitted that he had excluded the plaintiff. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court seems to have entirely overlooked this aspect of the case. It is perfectly true that the decision in Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthusawmi Aiyar (1) laid down that a co-parcener, who sues for possession, and who has not been excluded from the family, is not, unless he establishes fraud or misappropriation, entitled to call upon the manager to account for dealing with the family property. But in relying on this case the learned Additional District Judge has entirely overlooked the words "who has not been excluded from the family". The ratio decidendi of the said decision is, therefore, quite inapplicable in the present case.

The learned Additional District Judge remarks that the fact that the respondent may have obtained no share of the income since he ceased to live with the appellant does not affect the principle which is laid down in Balakrishna Aiyer v. Muthuswami Aiyar (1) and other similar cases. The real point, however, in the present case is that the defendant's attitude in this suit has been that from 1904 he was exclusive owner of the property, and that plaintiff had no claims whatever to the share of the profits. In these circumstances I am wholly unable to see how, having excluded plaintiff, as he has, and having, moreover, admitted the exclusion himself, he can be brought within the purview of Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthuswami Aiyar (1). On the contrary it seems to me that the principle enunciated in Krishna v. Subbanna (2) is fully applicable in the circumstances of the present case. That case is to all intents and purposes on all fours with the present one, cf. Bhivrao v. Sitaram (3). In Amritrao v. Govind (4) Mittra, A. J. C. remarked at page 148* as follows:—

"No doubt in cases of exclusion from joint property, accounts may be taken of past profits, but this, I think, can only be taken in a suit for general partition."

There is thus, in my opinion, no absolute rule that in a partition suit each and every claim for mesne profits is necessarily unsustainable. In the case of the present plaintiff, who was excluded as a minor from the property, the claim, therefore, in my opinion, clearly lies.

The decision of Macleod, C. J., and Heaton, J., in Ramnath Chhoturam v. Goturam Radhakisan (5) has been quoted by the respondent, but I cannot see that it is applicable to the circumstances of the present case. For these reasons, therefore, I am of opinion that the lower Appellate Court was incorrect in dealing with the profits in question in the way it did. The judgment and decree appealed against are reversed and instead the decree of the first Court is restored. The defendant-respondent will bear the present appellant's costs both in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. The Judge of the first Court when he passes the final decree will allocate the costs in it according to the result.

A suit for damages for malicious prosecution cannot, after the death of the plaintiff, be permitted to be carried on by his executor or legal representative.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Original Suit No. 20 of 1923.

Mr. V. Rajagopala Iyer, for the Appellant.
Messrs C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer and
S. Sundararaja Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a point of some little interest. A man called Subramanya Chetti started a suit for damages for malicious prosecution and in his plaint, he claimed a sum of money by way of general damages and he also claimed special damages under two heads. The first was Vakil's fees and the second was travelling and other incidental expenses for securing the attendances of witnesses for the purpose of defending the prosecution which was launched against him. We will take it that that prosecution failed and had this unfortunate man lived, he would have got substantial damages against the defendant which would have included the special damages alleged to have been incurred by him. As a matter of fact, he died while the suit was pending, and when the suit actually came on for trial before the learned Subordinate Judge, it was proposed to continue the action with his executor or legal representative substituted as the plaintiff. The learned Judge held that that could not be done and we agree with him.

The thing can be put in two ways: (1) on a narrower and (2) on a broader ground. The narrower ground is this: that his cause of action throughout is the tortious act of which he was the victim and not the fact that he incurred out of pocket expenses, e.g., for getting himself cured by a Doctor in case of personal injuries or getting himself defended by a Barrister or a Vakil in case of malicious prosecution. That goes to swell the bill against the defendant but it is not a cause of action. The cause of action is that which was done to him by running him over or by prosecuting him maliciously as the case may be. When we come to the case of an executor or a legal representative, his cause of action on behalf of the estate is quite different. He can only sue for a tangible, measurable, pecuniary loss caused to the estate by reason of the tortious act, so that it would follow on the narrower ground that although both the plaintiff if living, and his legal representative after his death had a cause of action for the recovery of these out of pocket expenses caused by the wrong of the defendant, nevertheless they would recover them in different rights and for different reasons. The living plaintiff will recover them as part of the damages for his general cause of action, i. e., malicious prosecution; while to the executor or administrator, the expenditure would be the sole cause of action, because to that alone would he be entitled to a judgment. It may be put as it was put in the English case of Pulling v. Great Eastern Railway.

Co. (1) on the broader ground that these expenses are not the losses to the estate of the deceased within the meaning of the Act of Parliament (the wording of which is practically identical with that of the Indian Statute), because they are so submerged and overtopped by the real cause of action which was the tortious (injury here malicious prosecution) that they must be treated as a mere incident of that cause of action and not as giving rise to a separate head of liability enuring after death, to the legal representative. On that the legal representative could not start an independent action for the expenses of the malicious prosecution as in the present case. We respectfully agree but in any event we think that the learned Judge was quite correct in holding in accordance with the authorities in Calcutta and Madras that the cause of action of the deceased man himself and that if any of his executors, are so different that it would be impossible to permit his legal representatives to carry on a suit instituted by him to recover damages. That being so, there is no cause of action and this appeal will be dismissed. One set of costs to be divided.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Letters of Administration, grant of, by Resident at Aden—Residence Jurisdiction of Bombay High Court.

The Bombay High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an appealable order of the Resident's Court at Aden.

An order granting Letters of Administration passed by the Resident's Court at Aden, is a final judgment against which an appeal would lie to the Privy Council. It is not, therefore, open to the Bombay High Court to entertain an application in revision against such an order.

Application against an order of the Resident at Aden.

Mr. Binning (with him Messrs. Crawford Bailey & Co.), for the Applicants.

Mr. O'Gorman (with him Mr. K. N. Koyajee), for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—A petition was filed in this Court by Leoh Moses bin Moses Enoch Levi and Hanna Menahem Haiter, daughter and widow of one Moses bin Moses, stating that the sons of Dawood Moses, brother of the deceased Moses bin Moses had applied to the Court of the Resident at Aden for the grant of the Letters of Administration with the Will annexed of the estate of Moses Enoch Levi, the father of the said Moses bin Moses. The Court of the Assistant Resident issued citations, and the petitioners filed a caveat against the grant of letters. The Assistant Resident finding the matter contentious directed under s. 75 of the Probate and Administration Act that the petition and the documents should be returned to the applicants for submission to the Resident. The Court of the Resident then issued notices fixing April 17, for the hearing of the said application. Thereafter because the petitioners did not file an affidavit in support of their caveat within eight days prescribed by r. 600 of the Rules of the Bombay High Court, their objections were invalidated, and therefore, overruled. The petitioners applied to this Court on June 27, 1924, to set aside this order; but the application was rejected on the ground that the order was of an interlocutory nature. On July 14, 1924, the Resident without hearing the petitioners on their objections granted Letters of Administration to the applicants. The petitioners applied to this Court to call for the record and proceedings in order that the order might be set aside. A Rule was granted. Apparently it was noted at the time that a question might arise whether this Court was competent to entertain an application under s. 115 of the Code, as the judgment or order complained against was appealable. In Rahimbhai Jamaphoy v. Mariam Abdul Rasul (1), it was held that this High Court had jurisdiction to interfere in revision with any order passed by the Resident in the exercise of his civil jurisdiction under the Aden Act II of 1864. I feel doubtful whether such an assumption of jurisdiction is warranted under the terms of the Act, but in any event, the case decided by the Aden Court must be one from which no appeal lies. The Aden Court is a Court of final appeal, and the decision in this case is a final judgment or order granting Letters of Administration to the applicants. There would, therefore, be an appeal to the Privy Council, and it is not competent to this Court to deal in revision with such a judgment or order. The Rule is discharged with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Suit decided on merits—Appeal—Remand for re-decision after adding necessary party—Appeal, whether lies—Buddhist Law, Burmese—Suit to recover share of inheritance—Necessary parties.

Where an Appellate Court sets aside a judgment of the Trial Court which has been given on the merits and remands the case for a fresh trial on the ground that a necessary party has not been impleaded as a defendant to the suit, the order of remand does not fall within the purview of r. 23, O. XLI of the O. P. C. and is not, therefore, appealable under r. 1 (u) of O. XLIII.

In a suit by an adoptive daughter of a deceased Burmese Buddhist couple to recover her share in the jointly acquired estate of her adoptive parents, all persons who are co-heirs of the deceased must be impleaded as parties.

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Court, Henzada, in C. A. No. 74 of 1924.

Mr. R. M. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Heald, J.—Appellant, claiming to be the adoptive daughter of Nga Le and his first wife Ma Po, sued respondent who is Nga Le's second wife, to recover the share of the jointly acquired property of the marriage of Nga Le and Ma Po to which under Burmese Buddhist Law she became entitled on Nga Le's death. Respondent has a minor son by Nga Le who was not made a party to the suit.

The Trial Court gave appellant a decree for a five-eighth share of the property.

Respondent appealed and one of the grounds of appeal was that her son by Nga Le was a necessary party.

The lower Appellate Court, holding that the son was a necessary party set aside the judgment and decree of the Trial Court and remanded the case for a fresh trial with the son added as a defendant.

Appellant appeals but I do not think that any appeal lies. Order XLIII, r. 1 (u) gives a right of appeal against an order under O. XLI, r. 23 but that rule applies only when the Trial Court has disposed of the suit on a preliminary point. It is impossible to say that the lower Court in this case disposed of the suit on a preliminary point and so neither O. XLI, r. 23 nor O. XLIII r. 1 (u) applies.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal on this ground, but I would add that although on the death of Nga Le, his son by respondent was not one of his heirs, nevertheless since he had become an heir by reason of the re-marriage of his mother before the institution of the suit, I think that he was a proper party.

I would also add that the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has evidently read the judgment in the case of Ma E Hmyin v. Maung Ba Maung (1) perfunctorily and has failed to understand it.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs. Advocate's fees to be three gold mohurs.

Usurious Loans Act (X of 1918), ss. 2 (3), 3—Suit to redeem pledged ornaments—Interest, high rate of—Relief, whether can be granted.

A suit by a debtor to redeem certain ornaments pledged by him with the defendant does not fall within the purview of s. 2 (3) of the Usurious Loans Act, and s. 3 of the Act has, therefore, no application to such a case.

Second appeal from the decision of the Acting District Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 95 of 1924, varying a decree of the Joint Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Civil Suit No. 1116 of 1923.

Mr. S. R. Bakhale, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Rele, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to redeem their ornaments by paying the loan amount and interest thereon at eighteen per cent. per annum. They admitted that they borrowed the amount of Rs. 2,000 for their business from the defendant and passed to him a promissory note dated September 17, 1922, for that amount on the pledge of ornaments and Cash Certificates of the Post Office, agreeing to pay interest at 6½ per cent. per mensem, but they alleged that they were orally told by the defendant that they would be charged interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem on the promissory note amount when it was returned. The defendant denied ever having promised to charge interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem.

The chief contention of the plaintiffs was that the Court could give relief against the transaction as being harsh and oppressive under ss. 16, 19-A and 74 of the Indian Contract Act and the Usurious Loans Act X of 1918. It is quite clear that the provisions of the Indian Contract Act would be of no assistance whatever to the plaintiffs. They wanted money for their business and expected to make a good profit out of the business when assisted by the loan from the defendant. The first plaintiff had to admit that she consented freely and willingly to pay a high rate of interest in anticipation of realising a bumper profit out of her own business. The defendant demanded one anna interest and she consented. There cannot, therefore, be any question of undue influence or misrepresentation, and the Trial Judge was right in his decision on this point.

The Judge then referred to the Usurious Loans Act X of 1918 and held that the Act could not apply where the suit is brought by a debtor. Under s. 2 (3) a suit to which the Act applies means any suit, (a) for the recovery of a loan made after the commencement of the Act, (b) for the enforcement of any security taken or any agreement whether by way of settlement of account or otherwise made after the commencement of the Act, in respect of any loan made either before or after the commencement of the Act. I should say that it is possible that a suit for the enforcement of an agreement whether by way of settlement of account or otherwise made in respect of any loan might include a suit brought by a debtor.

The chief argument urged in appeal was that this was a suit to enforce such an agreement, namely, the agreement to charge interest at the rate of 18 per cent. and not 75.

The Trial Judge, in giving the issues against the plaintiffs, directed them to pay the balance due according to the promissory note and the costs of the suit to the defendant, and on their doing so they were at liberty to take back their ornaments lying with the Nazir as produced by the defendant.

The Acting District Judge said :—

"It seems to me that the nature of the suit should be regarded not from the point as to by whom it was filed but from the point as to upon what matter judicial inquiry became necessary and judicial pronouncement made. Plaintiff deposited an amount in Court and asked for release of security pledged and adjudication of the amount due on the promissory note. If the defendant had applied for recovery of the loan made by him the course of the suit would have been exactly the same. In the absence of clear direction to the contrary, I do not consider that the application of the Act can be refused, merely because it is the debtor who came to Court to end the relation between herself and the money-lender.

The security in the present case was ample. The interest was exorbitant. It was excessive within the meaning of the term as explained in s. 3 (2) (a) of the Usurious Loans Act. I think it proper in the circumstances to reduce it to one-third of that specified in the promissory note, that is to say 25 per cent. per annum."

The order of the Trial Court was varied accordingly.

We cannot agree. We do not think this is a suit to which the Act applied. It cannot be said that the plaintiffs' suit is for the enforcement of any security taken. It would only be a creditor who could file a suit for the enforcement of his security. While the fact that the plaintiffs set up an agreement, which, being contrary to the written terms of the promissory note, they were unable to prove, could not be said to change the suit which was really a suit to redeem the ornaments pledged, into a suit to enforce an agreement in respect of the loan. If that were the case, it would always be possible for a debtor to set up an agreement in his favour contrary to the terms of the contract to support a contention that the Court was then entitled to re-open the transaction and exercise the powers given to it under s. 3.

We must, therefore, allow the appeal and restore the order of the Trial Court with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 81, O. XLI, rr. 23, 25—Mortgage of moveable property—Sale of property in execution of decree against mortgagor—Mortgagee, whether entitled to follow property in hands of purchaser—Remand, what amounts to—Case returned for finding, whether remanded.

A mortgagee of moveable property is not entitled to follow the mortgaged property into the hands of a purchaser who has purchased the property at a sale in execution of a decree against the mortgagor.

A case can be remanded only when it is returned for a fresh decision. The word remand is not applicable to an order returning a case for a finding on a particular issue.

Special second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Rangoon.

Mr. Ba Maw, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ankelsaria, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant had a mortgage over a piece of land and a number of logs of timber. Both of these properties were purchased by the respondent at a sale in execution of a decree.

The only question that arises now is whether the appellant is entitled to follow the moveable property into the hands of the purchaser. I agree with the District Judge that he is not. Sufficient authority for this proposition is to be found in the decisions reported as Sreeram Narasiah v. Bammi-reddi Venkataramiah (1), Raman Chetty v. Steel Brothers & Co. (2) and Maung Shwe Hnyin v. Fulchand (3).

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

But some comment on the procedure is desirable. The District Judge "remanded" the case to the Sub-Divisional Court to ascertain the relative values of the immoveable and moveable properties with a view to the assessment of costs. I take no exception to that, except that instead of "remanding" the District Judge should have sent the case back for a finding on this question, and after receipt of the finding should have passed his final judgment. Instead of that he merely held back his decree until the return of the case. I do not, however, think that any exception need be taken to the form of the decree.

The word "remand" should be used only when a case is returned for decision. It is used in this sense in the C. P. C. and is not used there in the provisions for return of a case for findings. This seems to have caused the Sub-Divisional Judge to misunderstand what he had to do. All that he should have done was to ascertain the respective values and report to the District Judge. Instead he had a fresh decree drawn up, dated the 8th August and signed it before returning the case.

This he had no jurisdiction to do. Moreover, the decree was incorrectly drawn up. This decree is of no effect and the decree of the District Court in any case supersedes it.

To make things clear the final decree of this Court will be a mortgage-decree over this immoveable property in suit for Rs. 5,000 with the costs and interest allowed in the original decree of the Sub-Divisional Court and fixing the same date for payment. It will be declared that the liability under this decree of the present respondents is limited to the amount of the sale-proceeds of the immoveable property, and that the costs awarded to him in this Court and the District Court are separately payable to him by the appellant.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Risk Note B, goods consigned under—Loss, damages for, suit to recover—Liability of Railway Company, extent of—Burden of proof.

Under Risk Note Form B, all that is required is that the standard of the carrier should not fall below the common practice of the Railway, and it is only when the loss is due to some act of dereliction of duty which has reduced the standard to somewhat below the ordinary standard of precaution that the Railway Company is liable under the Risk Note. [p. 372, col. 2]

In a suit to recover damages from a Railway Company for the loss of goods consigned to the Company for carriage under Risk Note Form B, it is necessary for the plaintiff to show that the loss was due to wilful neglect or other contingency which renders the Company liable under the terms of the Risk Note. [p. 372, col. 1.]

Mr. Hassomal M. Gurbuxani, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Tolasing K. Advani and T. G. Elphinstone, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff on the 18th March 1920 bought 250 bags of flour from defendant No. 2, the Ganesh Flour Mills. On the 18th March 1920 the Ganesh Flour Mills put these 250 bags on the North Western Railway at Delhi for despatch to Karachi. The North Western Railway is a State Railway and is represented in this suit by the Secretary of State. Only 231 bags, however, arrived at Karachi, the remaining 19 bags having been lost in transit between Delhi and Karachi. The plaintiff having failed to recover anything from either the Flour Mills or the Railway brought an action against both, the Railway and the Mills.

The cause of action was somewhat difficult to ascertain, because in para 3 of the plaint the suit is against the Railway defendant No. 1 for failure to deliver the 19 bags or their price and against defendant No. 2 in the alternative.

The Mills said that their liability to the plaintiff expired as soon as the bags were handed over to the Railway, and they asserted that the Railway took possession of them as a common carrier to deliver to the plaintiffs. They also set up the terms of the contract which exonerates the Mills from any liability in respect of any goods purchased from it as soon as such goods have left the godowns of the Mills.

The Railway set up that the suit was bad in its form and said that the goods were consigned under Risk Note Form B which exempts the Railway from liability from any loss of goods so consigned except under certain special circumstances which the Company pleads are here non-existent. The Court framed various issues and the case has now been heard.

On the first issue, whether the suit is bad for multifariousness, it is certainly difficult for me to understand how the same suit can lie against both the defendants, but I do not think that need detain us. On the second issue, the question as to estoppel of the plaintiff does not arise, it does not appear that the plaintiff has made any admission which would prejudice the right of parties to recover any losses which may have been caused by the failure of the defendant No. 2 to deliver these goods to the plaintiff, at any rate no such statement is proved before me, and no arguments have been addressed to me on the subject.

Issue No. 3.—The consignment was certainly booked at the owner's risk under the Risk Note Form B. Issues Nos. 4, 5 and 6 have been postponed for the present. The remaining issues Nos 7 to 10 can be put more concisely and I propose to discuss them on the following lines:—The goods were bound to be delivered to the plaintiff, but it now appears to me quite clear that it was the duty of the Mills to deliver. Looking at the contract, the contract calls for delivery at Karachi. Clause 4 exonerates the Company from responsibility for late delivery at Karachi Station only if the delay is due to certain contingencies, which do not arise in this case. Under cl. 5 the purchaser is required to take delivery in Delhi only on the condition that waggons are wholly unavailable to transfer the consignment from Delhi to Karachi. Moreover, the bags were put upon the Railway and receipt taken not in the name of the purchaser but in the name of the Mills and the Railway receipt is forwarded to a Bank in Karachi being endorsed over to such Bank and it was only upon satisfaction of the Bank that the receipt was to be handed over by the Bank to the purchaser.

It is true that cl. 3 of the contract says that the Company is not responsible for shortage of goods after they have been removed from their godowns, but that clearly must mean after the purchaser has taken delivery whether in Delhi at the godown of the Company or at the contractual place of delivery from the godown of the agents. That being so, viz, the contract being for the delivery of these goods at Karachi, it is, in my opinion, to the Mills and not to the Railway Company that the plaintiffs must look. The Railway Company has nothing to do with the plaintiffs being merely an instrument by which the Mills were attempting to fulfil their contract for delivery in Karachi. As the Mills failed so to deliver, for whatever cause it might be, it is not I think possible for the Mills to refuse to fulfil their contract. As regards defendant No. 2 there will have to be a decree in respect of these bags.

Coming now on to the question of defendant No. 2 it appears to me clear enough that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the Railway Company. Very likely the Mills may have but with that I am not concerned. But perhaps it is better to record a finding as to the question of the liability of the Company assuming that they were agents of the plaintiffs as common carriers to the plaintiff. The goods were shipped under this shipping note which has frequently been the subject of judicial interpretation, and has been exposed to a great deal of criticism both on account of the rigorous nature of the terms imposed by it, and its obscurity and it is well-established that assuming prima facie that there is a loss, it is necessary, for the claimant to show (as indeed clearly appears from the wording of the clause) that the loss was due to some wilful neglect or other contingencies which render the Company liable for the loss. Now nothing is known about this consignment except so far as the evidence goes that at Bhatinda the waggons said to contain these 250 bags were sealed, and it was reported to the Guard at Mcleod Ganj that the seals were intact and that it was at Bahawal Nagar, which is said to be about 36 miles from Mcleod Ganj that the seals were found broken and on examination the shortage was discovered. There was, therefore, apparently a loss due to theft from a running train. This being so, if it were necessary for me to decide it, I should hold that the Company was exempt under the Risk Note.

It may well be that the Railway Company did not take as many precautions as they might conceivably do, but that is not what is aimed at under the Risk Note. All that the Risk Note requires is that the standard of the carrier should not fall below the common practice of the Railway. It is a reasonable enough clause, in my opinion, because the common contract of the Railway is known to consignors and if they choose to undertake a risk of loss incurring to their consignment consequent upon this common conduct they cannot afterwards complain if they have been unfortunate enough in any particular instance. It is only when the loss is due to some act of dereliction of duty which has reduced the standard to somewhat below the ordinary standard of precaution that the Railway Company is liable under the Risk Note.

It may be observed that I have not decided, whether assuming that the Mills were otherwise free from liability on the ground that they were bound to make delivery to the plaintiff at Delhi and not at Karachi, they would still be liable because they chose to send these goods without specific instructions, by the Risk Note B. There is no specific issue on that question and it would be difficult to decide that without knowing what the natural course of trade was, and without giving the parties an opportunity to lead evidence on that particular point. I, therefore, say nothing about it, and it is not necessary for this suit. As regards the claim for market price of the goods I do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to that. He has not brought his suit as I understand it, for damages but for recovery of a specific number of bags. I think he is only entitled to a decree against defendant No. 2 for Rs. 427-11-0 with interest at six per cent. from 25th March 1920 to date of suit and further interest on the principal amount at six per cent. till the date of payment, with costs. Against these costs are to be set-off the costs incurred in summoning the Manager of the second defendant. I am of the opinion that that summoning was unnecessary and I will set off Rs. 95 in respect of it. There will, therefore, be a decree for the plaintiff against defendant No. 2 with costs as aforesaid with the exception that I award Rs. 95 as counter costs. Suit against the Railway Company is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—All these suits were filed in four batches by the plaintiffs, the first being filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court on the Small Cause side. The Subordinate Judge held that the suits were not of a small cause nature and that they should be filed either on the original side or else in the Revenue Court. The alternative was given for the reason that the plaintiffs claimed both warams, and it was held that if they were entitled to both warams, the suits would lie in a Civil Court whereas if they were not entitled to both the warams, the suits would lie only in a Revenue Court. The suits were accordingly filed in the Civil Court on the original side. The question was then determined and it was found that the plaintiffs did not possess both the warams and the plaint was returned to the Revenue Court. The only question which arises here is one of limitation, i. e., whether the time taken for prosecuting these suits in the Small Cause Court and the Civil Court (original side) should not be excluded. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff has prosecuted these suits with due diligence and consequently under s. 14 of the Limitation Act, he is entitled to exclude the whole of the period. The period allowed is the period from the date of the filing of the plaints to the date on which the plaints were finally returned by the Court for representation. It is now argued that this is not the correct period allowed, the contention being that the proceedings terminated on the date of the appellate order and not on the date on which the plaints were originally returned. This was the view taken by a Bench of this Court in Krishna Variar v. Kunji Taravanar (1) a case decided after the C. P. C. of 1882 came into force; it merely purported to follow the decision in Abhoya Churn Chuckerbutty v. Gour Mohun Dutt (2) which was based on the old Code of 1859 in which there was no provision identical with O. VII, r. 10. When the C. P. C. distinctly orders a Court to return a plaint for representation, and at the same time to endorse on it the date of presentation, the date of return, the party presenting it and the statement of the reasons for returning it. I regret I cannot agree with the view that the proceedings with reference to that plaint can be said to have terminated, when there was still an act to be done by the Court which had seisin of the plaint. With all respect, I am of opinion that the decision in Krishna Variar v. Kunji Taravanar (1) cannot be justified by reason of O. VII, r. 10, C. P. C., and I am supported in this view by subsequent cases of this Court. In Bapu Ammal v. Govinda Padiyachi (3) the time to be excluded is held to be from the date of presentation until the date of return of the plaint and this view is also adopted in Basvanappa Shivrudrappa v. Krishnadas Govardhandas (4) and Bisheshar Singh v. Ram Dhur Singh (5). The District Judge has, therefore, rightly calculated the time to be excluded from the period of limitation.

The next argument is directed to a question of fact, namely, whether the plaintiff was exercising due diligence during the whole of that period. The lower Appellate Court found that he did do so and no facts have been put before me to justify me in interfering with this finding of fact. In fact the arguments are all based on what might have happened, and no assertion is made as to any particular act of the plaintiff, to show that he did not exercise due diligence. I must presume that the lower Court has considered all the circumstances and I cannot interfere with the conclusion at which it has arrived.

The last point taken is with reference to certain suits in which it was said that the amount became payable when the kodai harvest was reaped, namely, in September or October. A large number of plaints were filed in October, three years later. Although some were filed in November, it does not appear in which of these cases the crop was harvested in October, nor whether in those cases, the plaints were not filed also in October, even if it is assumed that the cause of action arises at the moment that the last piece of crop is cut. I am not, however, prepared to accede to this contention, for ordinarily, the rent of each year becomes due on the last day of the year, and there is no evidence that that was not the case in respect of the suit tenancies. If that date is taken, all the suits were within time. I am not at all satisfied either that the cause of action arose in October or that it has been shown that in any particular case, the crops were cut at or before that time. The plaintiff gave the date of the cause of action in the plaint and no objection was taken in the written statements, and consequently that must be taken as the correct date.

The second appeals fail on all these points and are dismissed with costs in Second Appeal No. 855 of 1922. There are 185 appeals to which this judgment applies but the respondent is only represented in Second Appeal No. 855 of 1922; the argument being the same in all the cases. Considering the large number of suits involved I fix the fee at Rs. 75.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 243 OF 1925.

September 22, 1925

Present :—Mr. Raymond, A. J. C.
RUSTOM K. SIDHVA—PLAINTIFF

versus

THE INDIAN MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION, KARACHI, AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS.

Karachi Port Trust (Amendment) Act (VI of 1924), s. 4 (2)—“Becoming registered,” meaning of—Right of election, when accrues

The word “becoming” has been deliberately used in contradistinction to the word “being” in s. 4 (2) of the Karachi Port Trust (Amendment) Act of 1924, and is intended to connote something different to that which would be conveyed by the word “being”. The expression “becoming registered” in the section means in the process of registration as contrasted with “being registered,” which refers to an act previous to the election. Therefore, an association mentioned in the section even though unregistered at the date of election, would be entitled to elect representatives to the Karachi Port Trust Board, provided it was in the process of being registered, that is to say, was making bona fide efforts to become registered. [p. 375, col. 2]

Mr. Srikishandas H. Lulla, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Kimatrai Bhojraj and Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit of rather an unusual character. The plaintiff Mr. R. K. Sidhva, a Parsi gentleman of repute in this city, seeks to set aside the election of two prominent citizens of this place. Messrs. Harchandrai Vishindas and Shivrattan G. Mohatta, defendants Nos. 2 (a) and (b) by the Karachi Indian Merchants Association, defendants No. 1, as their representatives on the Board of Trustees of the Port of Karachi. This election was held on the 23rd February 1925. Three candidates stood for election, the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 (a) and (b). The last two were elected defeating the plaintiff by a very narrow majority of votes.

I am not concerned with the motives that may have inspired the plaintiff in instituting the present suit; they may be good or bad. He raises the question as to the validity of the election of defendants Nos. 2 (a) and (b), and whether as a member of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association or as a public citizen of Karachi, he certainly is competent to do so. He challenges the validity of the election on the sole ground that the Karachi Indian Merchants Association, not being an Association registered under the law for the time being in force before the date of the election was not competent to elect any representatives on the Port Trust Board. This forms the crucial point in this suit. Though no doubt other issues have been raised as to the maintainability of the suit, etc., the main issue in the suit is Issue No. 1 which is as follows:—

"Had the right to elect representatives on the Karachi Port Trust accrued to defendants No. 1 on the 23rd February 1925?"

Bombay Act VI of 1924, which is described as the Karachi Port Trust Amendment Act, was published on the 25th November 1924, but this amending Act was to come into operation only from the 1st April 1925. The immediate purpose of this Act was undoubtedly to extend the right of franchise to important commercial bodies in Karachi. Section 7 of the Original Karachi Port Trust Act VI of 1886 was repealed by s. 4 of the amending Act which now provided for additional representation by the Karachi Chamber of Commerce, and empowered the Karachi Buyers and Shippers Chamber, and the Karachi Indian Merchants Association to elect, each of them two of their members as their representatives on the Karachi Port Trust Board. Until this amending Act came into force the Karachi Indian Merchants Association had no right of representation on the Karachi Port Trust Board, but the Commissioner in Sind under the powers vested in him by the original Act nominated one of their members, usually the President, to a seat on the Board.

Now, the controversy between the parties hinges on the construction to be placed on sub-s. 2 of s. 4 of the amending Act. This sub-section I reproduce.

"The right to elect trustees conferred on the Karachi Chamber of Commerce, the Indian Merchants Association and the Karachi Buyers and Shippers Chamber shall accrue only on such Chamber of Commerce, or such Indian Merchants Association, or such Karachi Buyers and Shippers Chamber being or becoming registered under the law for the time being in force for the registration of Companies or Associations".

It is on the words "being or becoming registered" that the Pleaders for the respective parties have concentrated their attention. There is, of course, no difficulty whatever as to the interpretation of the word "being". If it stood by itself, there could not be the vestige of a doubt that the registration of the Association concerned was to be a condition precedent to a valid election. It is the word, "becoming," however, that has given rise to the controversy between the parties, though, in my opinion, in consideration of the circumstances that prevailed at the time of the enactment of the amending Act, its interpretation ought not to afford much difficulty. Mr. Lulla for the plaintiff contends in substance that the words "being or becoming" connote the same idea, and should be construed in an identical manner. Both these words according to him require as an indispensable condition that the Association should have been registered before there could be a valid election, and, therefore, in his view the elections of defendants Nos. 2 (a) and (b) prior to the registration of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association was invalid and should be set aside.

It is rather difficult to follow Mr. Lulla in his interpretation of the word "becoming". If the meaning underlying this word is the same as that conveyed by the word "being", then it is inconceivable that the draftsman should have used two words, when the word "being" by itself would have correctly expressed the intention of the Legislature. It appears to me obvious that the word "becoming" has been deliberately used in contradistinction to the word "being" and is intended to connote some thing different to that which would be conveyed by the word "being." The words used in the section are "becoming registered," i. e., as I interpret them, in the process of registration as contrasted with the words "being registered," which refer to an act previous to the election. The Century Dictionary explains the word "becoming" as an intermediate stage between "being" and "not being." The literal meaning of the word "becoming" in the sense in which it is used in this Act, would, in my opinion, be the transitional stage between the non-registration and the registration. If the Karachi Indian Merchants Association had taken the necessary steps to have itself registered under the law for the time being in force "before the election was held, though the registration may not have been an accomplished fact before the date of the elections, yet there would have been a sufficient compliance with the terms and conditions as prescribed in sub s. 2 to s. 4 of the amending Act, I cannot, therefore, agree with Mr.

Lulla in his interpretation of the words "becoming registered" as implying that the registration was to be a condition precedent to the elections. It may be that the word "becoming" does not convey the intention of the Legislature very explicitly, it was probably used for want of a better word but I feel no manner of doubt as to the sense in which it was intended to be understood and my province is jus dicere not jus dare. As I have observed the amending Act was passed into law on the 25th November 1924. I am informed by the Pleaders that on this date none of the Associations or bodies to which the franchise was extended, were registered. Whether this be true or not, the Karachi Indian Merchants Association had not been registered.

Now under s. 12 of Act VI of 1886, the elections for a seat on the Karachi Port Trust Board are to be held "not earlier than the 15th and not later than the last day of the month of February next preceding the first day of April from which the term of office of the new trustees is to commence." The term of office of the new trustees was to commence on the 1st April 1925, and as the election was to take place in the month of February such Associations who had the right to elect and had not been registered, would only have a period of scarcely three months to effect the registration. It was, therefore, anticipated at the time when the amending Act was passed that the registration may not be completed within the time the election was to take place, and hence, in my opinion, the words "being or becoming registered" were inserted in the Act not only for the benefit of those Associations that were already registered, but also those that were in the process of registration, and has honestly taken such steps as were necessary to have them registered. This, I conceive, is the reason of the words "becoming registered" being inserted in the amending Act. The object of the registration of the bodies and Associations qualified to return a representative on the Port Trust Board was evidently with a view to placing these Associations under the control of Government, and as long as these Associations had evinced an honest desire to comply with the requisitions of Government, it was not reckoned a matter of any importance whether these Associations were registered before the elections actually took place or later.

Now, I have no doubt that in the present case the Karachi Indian Merchant Association did make bona fide endeavours to have themselves registered. It was on the 26th August, 1924, that they addressed a letter to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay, for the issue of a license as to their registration. This application was made under s. 26 of the Indian Companies Act. The reply to this application from Government is dated the 25th September 1924. The applicants are informed that prior to the registration the memorandum and articles of Association of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association were to be scrutinized by the Solicitor to Government, and that notices were to be published in the local newspapers inviting objections to the registration, and some other formalities had to be complied with. Further correspondence then ensued between the applicants and the Government of Bombay and the Solicitor to the Government of Bombay. The entire correspondence has been exhibited. It will be seen from a perusal of it, that, though the applicants pressed for early registration, the delay in the registration was inevitable. The memorandum and articles of Association were revised by the Solicitor to Government, and sent for approval to the applicants. The public notices in the papers were to be in the form suggested by Government. Sometime had to be allowed to give the public an opportunity of lodging their objections, if any, to the registration. In short, it was not before the 12th May 1925 that the Bombay Government informed the applicants that their petition had been granted, and they were registered as an Association under s. 26 of the Indian Companies Act. The correspondence clearly reveals this indubitable fact that the Karachi Indian Merchants Association was endeavouring from August 1924 to have themselves registered as an Association. In consequence of the time involved in examining the memorandum and articles of Association, and in complying with certain requisite formalities, the Association was not registered till May 1925. But it was in process of registration, and the words "becoming registered under the law for the time being in force" would aptly apply to them. I, therefore, hold that the right to elect representatives on the Karachi Port Trust Board did accrue to the Karachi Indian Merchants Association on the 23rd February 1925, and my finding on this issue is in the affirmative. The election of defendants Nos. 2 (a) and (b), is valid and the plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, fail as it discloses no cause of action.

There are some other issues framed in this suit, which have been based on the defence raised to the plaintiffs' action. They mainly refer to the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit and to the maintainability of the suit. But in view of my finding on Issue No. 1, I think it superfluous for me to embark on a consideration of the other issues in the suit. The foundation of the plaintiffs' suit is the ineligibility of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association to elect any representatives on the Karachi Port Trust Board before the Association had been registered, and it is this factor which according to him supplies the cause of action. As I have pointed out above and personally I feel no doubt as to the correctness of my finding, this argument is based on an erroneous construction placed by the plaintiff on the words "becoming registered." As, therefore, I think, the plaintiff has no cause of action, the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed, and he must pay the costs of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (a) and (b). However, only one set of costs is allowed.

Before concluding this judgment one further point may be alluded to, not indeed as a guide to my decision, but as tending to confirm my interpretation of sub-s. 2 of the amending Act. On the 6th March, 1925, the plaintiff addressed a letter to the Commissioner in Sind bringing to his notice that the Karachi Indian Merchants Association had not been registered on the 23rd February 1925, when the elections took place, and, therefore, the elections were ultra vires of the Association, and must be regarded as invalid. On the receipt of this letter, the Commissioner in Sind had a letter addressed to the Secretary, Karachi Indian Merchants Association, requesting information as to whether the Association was a registered body prior to the elections of the 23rd February 1925. The Secretary replied that the Association lay unregistered on the date of the elections, but that an application had been made to the Bombay Government in August 1924, for its registration, and steps had been taken to comply with the requisitions of Government preliminary to the registration, and the registration was daily awaited. Now under s. 5 of the amending Act which has been substituted for s. 8 of the original Act, the Associations to which the amending Act applies, are required to make a return to the Commissioner in Sind of the names of the persons elected by them as their representatives on the Port Trust Board. Under s. 9 of the original Act, the names of the persons "duly elected" on the Board are to be notified in the Bombay Government Gazette, and the Sind Official Gazette. The names of Messrs. Harchandrai Vishindas and Shivrattan Gordhandas were thus notified as being "duly elected." Now the Commissioner in Sind was aware not only of the allegation made by the plaintiff that the Karachi Indian Merchants Association was incompetent to hold the elections before its registration, but also of the fact that it was not registered when the elections were held and yet it was declared that defendants Nos. 2 (a) and (b) had been "duly elected." The words are "duly elected" not merely "elected", and this would pre-suppose that the Commissioner in Sind was not prepared to accept the allegation made by the plaintiff that the non-registration of the Karachi Indian Merchants Association was a defect fatal to the validity of the elections, as he was assured that the Association had already applied for its registration.

In conclusion I need only briefly refer to the Karachi Port Trust who are defendants No. 3. The plaintiff has stated in his plaint that he impleads them as pro forma defendants. They were represented by Mr. Tolasing who stated that his clients were indifferent as to the result of this suit and they supported neither party. He, however, pressed for costs. The plaintiff has claimed no relief against them, and they need not have appeared at the hearing. I do not think that there was any impropriety on the part of the plaintiff in joining them as co-defendants. They were included ex majori cautela, and if not necessary, they were proper parties. I direct defendants No. 3 to bear their own costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1676 OF 1922.

IV, 39, 42—Execution of decree—Transfer of decree—Death of decree-holder—Legal representatives brought on record—Order confirmed on appeal—Objection by judgment-debtor at subsequent stage to jurisdiction of Court to make order—Res judicata.

A decree was transferred for execution to a Court other than the Court which had passed it. The decree-holder thereafter died and the Court to which the decree had been transferred made an order adding the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder as parties and directing that execution should proceed. The legal representatives appealed against the order, but the Court dismissed the appeal. He then took the objection, which he had not taken in his appeal, that the Court to which the decree had been transferred for execution had no jurisdiction to add the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder as parties to the execution proceeding.

Held, that the objection must be deemed to have been decided adversely to the judgment-debtor in the appeal preferred by him against the order, by virtue of the provisions of Expl. IV to s. 11, C. P. C., and was, therefore, res judicata.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in A. S. No. 726 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Alathur, in O. S. No. 182 of 1920.

Mr. N. J. Lakshmana Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. P. Ananta Krishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first objection taken by the appellant is that the application to execute the decree on behalf of the legal representatives of the decree-holder ought not to have been made to the Court which was executing the decree but to the Court which passed the decree. This question is concluded by a decision of the Full Bench in this Court in Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (1) and also in Amr Chundra Banerjee v. Guru Prosunno Mukerjee (2) and Tameshar Prasad v. Thakur Prasad (3) Sham Lal Pali v. Modhu Sudan Sircar (4). All these cases were decided under C. P. C. of 1882 and there has since been an alteration in ss. 88, 244, 232 and 234 of that Code. It is questionable whether these decisions are correct under the new C. P. C. and I may observe that in the Full Bench decision in Madras, the learned Chief Justice did not come to a determination without considerable hesitation and one of the Judges was of opinion that ss. 234 and 244 of the Code of 1882 are irreconcilable. As these sections have now been amended, it is possible that they may be reconciled by a different interpretation of them. I, however, refrain from discussing this question further in view of the fact that the appeal must fail on another ground.

The appellant was a party to the order in execution proceedings in which the legal representatives were added and although he preferred an appeal against the order, he did not take this particular ground of appeal and the order was confirmed. Under s. 11, Expl. 4 the ground ought to have been decided. It is, therefore, not open to him now to raise the same objection in a suit. It is contended that he can do so, because the Executing Court had no jurisdiction to decide the case. It has been held that the Court had no jurisdiction, but it is not a question of absolute jurisdiction, but a question of exercising jurisdiction wrongly, and it has been held that a similar order passed in these circumstances is subject to appeal and is not necessarily null and void from its inception. I may refer in this connection to Hadjee Abdoollah Reasut Hossein v. Hadjee Abdoollah (5). The order not being null and void from its inception, this plea that it was absolutely without jurisdiction cannot avail the appellant. This suit was rightly dismissed and the second appeal must also be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudamal, for Defendant No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of the class of suits not unfrequent of late wherein minors in a joint Hindu family seek to set aside alienations of immoveable properties, made either by the father or the managing member of the family, as unsupported by family or legal necessity. The present suit has been filed by one Batilal, a minor, through his next friend, his mother, Parvati-bai, widow of Moolji, for a declaration and injunction, and for partition of two immoveable properties wherein the plaintiff states he is interested as a co-parcener in a joint undivided Hindu family. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 Rughnath and Bhagwanji are the two elder brothers of the minor plaintiff. They have filed no written statements, and have raised no defence to the action, and there is but little doubt that this suit has been filed either at their instigation or that they are in collusion with the plaintiff. The only defence to the action is by defendant No. 3 who is the mortgagee of the two immoveable properties in suit which by the suit are sought to be partitioned.

The allegations in the plaint are that one Moolji, the father of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 died in 1915, and left one immoveable property with building thereon situated in the Runchore Lines, and which is referred to in the evidence as the residential house of the family. About a year or two after the death of Moolji, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 bought a building adjacent to the residential house. They were under the necessity of raising money for the payment of the purchase price, and accordingly borrowed a sum of Rs. 11,500 from defendant No. 3 on the security of the mortgage of both the residential house and the new building subsequently purchased. Owing to non payment of the amount there were disputes between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the one hand, and defendant No. 3 on the other with the result that there was a reference to arbitration, and a consent award was passed and made a rule of the Court. The plaintiff contends that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not empowered either to mortgage the property in its entirety to defendant No. 3 or consent to an award decree in his favour inasmuch as the loan taken from defendant No. 3 was neither for the family benefit nor for legal necessity, and, therefore, both the mortgage and the award decree are void and inoperative so far as his interests in the properties are concerned. On the strength of the award decree defendant No. 3 applied for attachment and sale of the two properties on which his lien had been declared, and the plaintiff now seeks for an injunction to restrain him from proceeding with the sale. He also prays for a declaration that neither the mortgage nor the award decree is effectual to transfer his interest in the properties, and finally prays for a partition of the two properties, and being awarded his one-third share in them.

By his written statement the defendant No. 3 states that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the only persons interested in the properties mortgaged, and in the alternative, if it be held, that plaintiff No. 1 has an interest in them, the action of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the former being the manager of the joint family, is binding upon the plaintiff. He maintains that the amount borrowed from him was for the benefit of the family, and that it was utilised to pay antecedent debts and for house-hold purposes. He adds that the decree obtained by defendant No. 3 is binding on the plaintiff and that in this suit the plaintiff is incompetent to have it set aside. He, therefore, prays that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs.

The following issues were framed with the consent of the Pleaders for the respective parties:—

1. Is the property in suit the joint family property of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or the property of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only?

2. Was the amount borrowed from defendant No. 3 for purposes which would bind the interest of the plaintiff, if any, in the property (covers paras. 3 and 4 of the plaint).

3. Is the plaintiff bound by the award?

4. General.

At the commencement of the hearing of the case, the Pleader for the plaintiff stated that he would not press the plaintiff's claim to any share in the immoveable property purchased by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 after the death of their father Moolji I, therefore, confine myself to the consideration of the question as to the plaintiff's right in the residential house.

Now, before I touch upon the legal aspect of the case it is a matter of essential importance to grasp the facts and set out my deductions on the evidence recorded. For, in cases of this nature where the family benefit or the legal necessity are challenged, it is necessary, before the law applicable is discussed, to have a true conception as to the merits of each case.

Moolji, the father of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 died in Africa in 1915. The evidence shows that at the time of his death, and for some years previous he was earning a salary of about Rs. 250 per mensem. He died, however, virtually a pauper, and the only property that he left at his death, in addition to the residential house, was a sum of Rs. 600 only, his contribution from certain funds to which he had subscribed in his life-time. As Bhagwanji said in his evidence it was difficult for his father to save any money as he had a large family dependent upon his earnings. Moolji must have also spent money on the education of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 2 appeared to me to speak English fairly well, and at present according to him he draws a salary of Rs. 105 in the National Bank, but at the time of his father's death, he was schooling. Rughnath, defendant No. 1, is employed in the Port Trust, and earns about Rs. 70 or Rs. 80 per mensem, now, though at the time of his father's death his salary was about Rs. 30 or 40 per mensem. The pecuniary condition of the family, therefore, at the time of Moolji's death is a matter of no little importance in the consideration of this case. As long as Moolji was alive, the family apparently enjoyed some degree of comfort and to which the family had been accustomed. But after Moolji's death, the pinch of poverty was felt, and the meagre income of defendant No. 1 was insufficient to defray the household expenses of the family. I shall revert to, later, the necessity which rendered some loan imperative.

On behalf of the plaintiff it has been urged that the necessity for the loan was dictated by the conduct of defendant No. 1 indulging in speculation. It is said that in or about the year 1916 defendant No. 1 entered into some forward contracts in sugar in partnership with one Ladhuram Vishinji and sustained a loss of Rs. 3,000 and for the purpose of liquidating it a sum of Rs. 2,000 was borrowed from one Haji Ahmad Yusif, and as security for the loan, the residential house was mortgaged with him. In my experience it occurs not unfrequently that in cases of this description the plea that the debts were incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose is set up in order to impeach the binding effect of a loan on the members of a Hindu family who have not effectively participated in it. In the present case on a consideration of the evidence, I find that this forward transaction in sugar imputed to defendant No. 1, Rughnath, is a myth, and that it has been set up for the purpose of cloaking the real nature of the borrowings by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The evidence on the point that Rughnath had been speculating in sugar is confined to himself and his brother, defendant No. 2. It was the latter that was first examined on the opening day of the hearing of the case. When questioned, as to the forward contracts entered into by his brother, he professed not to be acquainted with any details in respect of them; as a matter of fact, he had no knowledge even as to the nature of the contract, whether it was a forward contract or otherwise, and all that he knew was from Rughnath's information that he had entered into some contracts in partnership with Ladhuram Vishinji and had sustained a loss of Rs. 3,000. Rughnath, who was examined as a witness a couple of days after his brother's evidence had been recorded, stated that in 1916 he had proceeded to Tando Allah Yar where Ladhuram Vishinji lived, and that the latter proposed to him that they should be partners in some good business transactions. Rughnath says he agreed to the proposal and also to share the profit and loss with Ladhuram. According to Rughnath however he heard no more of this partnership transactions till he proceeded to Bombay in May or June 1918 and met Ladhuram Vishinji. The latter informed him that he had entered into a sugar transaction in pursuance of the alleged partnership agreement and had sustained a loss of Rs. 6,000 of which a moiety was to be paid by Rughnath. Rughnath says that he trusted Ladharam Vishinji implicitly, and agreed to pay him his share of Rs. 3,000 which he did. The Pleader for defendant No. 3 described this forward contract as bogus, and I am inclined to agree with him. The only evidence as to the partnership between Rughnath and Ladharam Vishinji is the oral, uncorroborated statement of Rughnath. Ladharam Vishinji, has not been cited as a witness to prove the partnership, nor is there any documentary evidence forthcoming as to it. The family of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was in very impoverished circumstances after the death of Moolji, and it is incredible that Rughnath should promptly undertake to pay a large sum like Rs. 3,000 to Ladharam Vishinji without the slightest attempt at any inquiry into the account or as to the circumstances which entailed a loss. In my opinion the alleged loss of Rs. 3,000 on a speculative contract entered into by Rughnath has been falsely set up with the view to proving the immoral nature of the contracts entered into by him, and hence the exemption of all liability on the part of the minor plaintiff in respect of such a tainted debt.

Now, further according to Rughnath, he borrowed a sum of Rs. 2,000 from Haji Ahmed Yusif and paid the same to Ladharam Vishinji towards the loss. The remaining sum of Rs. 1,000 Rughnath at first said that it was borrowed from Manikchand on the pledge of ornaments, but he soon altered his statement and said that he borrowed Rs. 2,000 from one Gangji Seth on the pledge of ornaments which amount he paid to Ladharam Vishinji and that the sum of Rs. 2,000 which he borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif he paid to Gangji Seth and redeemed his ornaments. There is thus no satisfactory explanation as to the payment of the balance of Rs. 1,000 to Ladharam Vishinji, and this is an additional element which throws considerable suspicion on the alleged debt due to Ladharam Vishinji.

That there was a sum of Rs. 2,000 borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif in 1916, and that the residential house had been mortgaged with him in consideration of this loan admit of no doubt but I do not believe that this amount of Rs. 2,000 was utilised towards the payment of a sum of Rs. 3,000 which it is alleged Ladharam Vishinji claimed. Rughnath in his evidence has stated that before he proceeded to

Bombay, and when Ladharam Vishinji for the first time mentioned to him that there was a sum of Rs. 3,000 due by him on the losses sustained by the partnership contract, he had borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,600 or 1,700 from one Chaganlal Inderji. His evidence on this point is as follows :—

“Before going to Bombay I borrowed from Chaganlal Inderji the sum of Rs. 1,600 or 1,700 to liquidate my debts. I do not remember how those debts had been created. It may be that this amount had been borrowed from Chaganlal to pay the household expenses, as our salaries were small”.

This statement of Rughnath appears to me to supply the correct solution of the loan from Haji Ahmed Yusif. As I have observed above, after the death of Moolji, the family were substantially in an impecunious condition. It was only Rughnath that earned a scanty pittance of Rs. 25 or 30 per mensem and Bhagwanji states that he was still at school when his father died. It was impossible for the family to subsist on their slender income which, therefore, had to be supplemented by loans. These loans were first secured on the pledge of the family ornaments and the amount at first borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif which was as I have said on the mortgage of the residential house, was utilised towards the payment of the moneys borrowed for the household expenses, and the family ornaments were thus redeemed. I hold, therefore, that the sum of Rs. 2,000 borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif was for family necessity.

Now, in 1918, the second house in suit was purchased by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the name of defendant No. 2. This house was adjacent to the residential house and its owner Ladharam Dharamsi was a relation of the defendants. From Rughnath's evidence it appears that he was very keen on the purchase of this house. From Karachi he proceeded to Hanjam in Berar and concluded the bargain there with Ladharam Dharamsin for the purchase of the house for the sum of Rs. 8,300. It is significant to observe that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were eager to secure this house for themselves not on account of its situation but as Bhagwanji said the purchase price was low, and they anticipated that owing to the boom in land that then prevailed in 1918, they would be in a position to realise a considerable profit by its sale and thus discharge the family debt that weighed heavily on it. Again, they had recourse to Haji Ahmed Yusif, and borrowed a sum of Rs. 8,000 from him on the security of both the residential house and the house newly acquired. It is important, therefore, not to overlook the motive inspiring the purchase of the second house.

Haji Ahmed Yusif, had advanced to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 a sum of Rs. 10,000 which with interest due thereon amounted to about Rs. 10,700. He pressed for the re-payment of this loan as he was in urgent need of money, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 then appealed to Ibrahim Walli to help them with a loan. The loan was first granted on hundis, defendants equitably mortgaging with Ibrahim Walli the title deed of the two properties. The loan from Ibrahim Walli was utilised in the payment of the amount due to Haji Ahmed Yusif and the mortgaged properties were redeemed. As the amount due on the hundis was not paid to Ibrahim Walli by the due date, fresh hundis were drawn and executed, and finally, a mortgage-deed was executed in favour of Ibrahim Walli on August 21st 1920 by the two defendants, Rughnath defendant No. 1 executing it for himself and as guardian for his minor brother Ratilal. The consideration in the mortgage-deed is shown at Rs. 12,000, Rs. 8,000 being the amount due on the hundis previously executed and Rs. 4,000 was a fresh loan advanced to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. By this deed the two immoveable properties above described were mortgaged with defendant No. 3 as security for the aforesaid loan of Rs. 12,000. Exhibit 9 are a batch of four letters addressed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to defendant No. 3 equitably mortgaging with him the two aforesaid properties in consideration of the loans advanced on various occasions. All these four letters have been signed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the defendant No. 1 has also signed them as guardian for the minor plaintiff. I may here observe that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have not challenged the accuracy of the principal sum which defendant No. 3 claimed from them. Exhibit 10 is the consent award between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and defendant No. 3 and was passed on April 20, 1922. It would appear from the award that the amount due to the defendant No. 3 was not paid in terms of the agreement between the parties, and further, there was a dispute with regard to the rate of interest 18 per cent. claimed by defendant No. 3, whereas the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended that the interest due was only at the rate of 15 per cent. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 also contended that they were entitled to sufficient time for payment of the amount due. When the proceedings were still pending before the arbitrators, the parties entered into an amicable arrangement which is embodied in the award, and in terms of this arrangement interest was allowed to defendant No. 3 at the rate of 15 per cent. only and the amount due was payable in certain instalments, and a mortgage lien was granted to defendant No. 3 with a right to proceed in execution against the aforesaid immoveable property and also to proceed personally against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, if the realisation by the sale of the mortgage properties did not cover the amount due. The reference to the arbitrator was signed both by Rughnath and Bhagwanji the former signing it both for himself and as guardian of the minor plaintiff. The award was filed in Court under the Indian Arbitration Act and no objections have ever been lodged to it.

I now proceed to discuss the legal aspect of the case, as it has been contended for the plaintiff by his Pleader Mr. Kimatrai, that the plaintiff is not bound by the loan transactions entered into by his brothers defendants Nos. 1 and 2, as the loans were neither for the benefit of the family nor for legal necessity. There is no doubt that defendant No. 2 Rughnath, the elder brother, was the manager of the family consisting of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Bhagwanji has admitted this. It was first contended by Mr. Kimatrai that as the sum of Rs. 2,000 borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif was for the purpose of liquidating an antecedent immoral debt, contracted by Rughnath in respect of some satta transactions that he entered into, which entailed a loss of Rs. 3,000 the loan from Haji Ahmed Yusif cannot be regarded as one for the benefit of the family or as creating a legal necessity. As I have shown above, it has not been proved that Rughnath did enter into any partnership with Ladharam Vishinji. Nor has it been established that any loss was incurred by the partnership entering into any forward contracts, nor is there any satisfactory evidence as to the payment of the sum of Rs. 3,000 to Ladharam Vishinji. This argument must fail I hold that the sum of Rs. 2,000 borrowed from Haji Ahmad Yusif was for the purpose of paying the debt of Chaganlal Inderji which had been incurred to defray household expenses, and as the debt was contracted for the benefit of the family by its manager, it is, therefore, binding on the minor plaintiff.

The second point taken by Mr. Kimatrai for the plaintiff was that the sum of Rs. 8000 borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif and utilised towards the payment of the purchase price of the second house cannot be regarded as a debt for the family benefit or as creating any legal necessity for the loan.

In Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Babooee Mumraj Koonweree (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:—

"The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it...is the thing to be regarded".

In Mull's Hindu Law, Art. 200, the following passage occurs:—

"The manager of a joint Hindu family has power to sell or to mortgage 'on reasonable commercial terms' joint family property, so as to bind the interests of adult as well as minor co-parceners in the property, provided that in the case of minor members the sale or mortgage is made for a legal necessity including debts incurred for family business, or for the benefit of the family."

In Nagindas Maneklal v. Mahomad Yusif Mitchella (2) it was held by Shah, J., that:

"The term 'necessity' must not be strictly construed. The benefit to the family may under certain circumstances mean a necessity for the transaction."

The facts of this case throw some light on the consideration of the present case:—

"A Hindu joint family owned several houses, one of which was in such a dilapidated condition that the Municipality required it to be pulled down. The adult co-parceners contracted to sell it to the plaintiffs. The joint family was in fairly good circumstances; and it was not necessary to sell the house. But the house could not be used by the family for residence and would not have fetched any rent. The plaintiff having sued for specific performance of the agreement to sell, the minor co-parceners contended that the contract did not affect their interest in the absence of 'necessity' for the sale. It was held that the agreement of sale was binding on the minor co-parceners, because the adult co-parceners had properly and wisely decided to get rid of the property which was in such a state as to be a burden to the family."

No doubt this was a case of sale, but the Privy Council has held that the same principle would also apply to cases of mortgage. Cases may arise wherein a prudent owner with due regard to the interests of the family which he represents might feel compelled to resort to methods which would have the effect not only of re-habilitating the fortune of the family, but also of supplementing its income. What was the motive for the purchase of the second house in this case? Bhagwanji had supplied the answer. He stated that it was anticipated that a substantial profit would be realised by its sale. The family was undoubtedly in debt at the time of the purchase. There was no possibility of wiping off this debt from the incomes of the two brothers, and the sum of Rs. 2,000 due to Haji Ahmad Yusif which carried interest at 12 per cent. per annum would accumulate to such an extent as to make its liquidation impossible for the family. It was, therefore, necessary to conceive some mode or the other of paying off this debt. In 1918 there was a boon in land in Karachi as is well known the second house was being obtained at a cost fairly low, and a prudent and reasonable man might well conclude that an opportunity was now offered to him of realising a handsome profit on the sale of the house after its purchase and it would be for the benefit of the family to embark on this investment. In my opinion, therefore, the purchase of this house was dictated by the motive to liquidate the debts due by the family and hence was for the family benefit.

advanced by the mortgagee was for the purpose of enabling the mortgagors in a joint Hindu family to purchase some zemindari property, though ultimately it was found that the loan was not utilised for the purpose indicated: It was held that as the purchase of the zemindari was beneficial to the family, the non-application of the loan to the purpose originally stated did not invalidate the mortgage. This case affords an illustration that even the purchase of immoveable property may well be reckoned as contributing to the benefit of a Hindu joint family.

Mr. Kimatrai referred to the case of Vishnu Vishvanath Nimkar v. Ramchandra Sadashiv Nimkar (4) but the facts of this case are divergent in their essentials from the facts of the case before me. It was held in the case cited:—

"That the manager of a joint Hindu family can justify the sale of joint family property only for necessity. He cannot justify it merely on the ground that the sale at the time appeared to be advantageous. Such a sale is not binding on the minor co-parceners".

The property in the present case had not been purchased merely because the purchase was advantageous; it was bought, as I have observed, to liquidate a family debt, and this was a necessity.

Mr. Kimatrai next cited the case of Shankar Sahi v. Baichu Ram (5). In this case it was held that ordinarily a Hindu father cannot encumber joint ancestral property to acquire the necessary funds to pre-empt other property. In the body of the judgment at page 383* there occur the following observations:—

"It is not permissible to a Hindu father to voluntarily go forward and initiate litigation for the purposes of extending the boundaries of his property, and having succeeded in that litigation and having obtained a pre-emption decree, which gives him liberty to do something, can thereby raise money, and encumber the joint... family estate".

It will be seen from the case cited that this was a voluntary action on the part of the father not dictated by the necessities of the family. It was further observed in this judgment: "that an adventure in the hapse of a speculative suit which might possibly bring profit to the estate, could properly be regarded as a 'benefit to the estate' or 'a legal necessity'."

That facts of the present case are entirely different. At the time the second house was purchased, there was a sum of Rs. 2,000 due by the family of defendants Nos 1 and 2 to Haji Ahmed Yusif, and in respect of this loan the ancestral property was mortgaged with him. Apart from the stigma that the mortgage of the residential house carried with it, it became essential to pay up this loan, and redeem the mortgaged property promptly, for otherwise with the interest of 12 per cent. accumulating on the principal sum, the family would have been unable to redeem the house. The second house was, therefore, purchased, as Bhagwanji says, to liquidate the family debt that had been incurred. It was not a case of a mere speculative adventure, for it was reasonably anticipated that the house would realise a profit by its sale, and any prudent man, whether the father or the manager of a Hindu family, would avail himself of the opportunity offered to him of contriving to wipe off the family debt.

Ram Bilas Singh v. Ramyad Singh (6), was cited by Mr. Kimatrai apparently with reference to the following passage:—

"The mere fact that the manager borrowed money in order to purchase immoveable property does not in itself create any presumption that the transaction was beneficial to the family so as to authorise the manager to hypothecate existing family property by way of security for the loan. Some necessity for the transaction or some benefit resulting to the family therefrom must in all cases be shown".

I am in entire agreement with these observations, and, in my opinion, they rather tend to support my view of this case. In the present case the necessity for the purchase of the second house has been established and it has been shown on the admission of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 themselves that the purchase was for the benefit of the family.

In view of my conclusions that the sum of Rs. 2,000 first borrowed from Haji Ahmed Yusif was for the benefit of the joint family, and the second sum of

Rs. 8,000 borrowed from the same individual, utilised towards paying the purchase price of the house purchased was dictated by the family necessities, the question whether Ibrahim Walli made the requisite inquiries as to the necessity of the loan from him is not one of any particular significance. No doubt, a purchaser or a mortgagee must make reasonable inquiry, when he advances a loan to the father or the manager of a joint undivided family as to the necessity for the loan, and the burden lies upon him to do so. Mere recitals in a sale or a mortgage-deed would not by themselves be sufficient to establish the necessity for the sale of the mortgage so as to bind the other co-parceners in a Hindu family. Ibrahim Walli is dead, but his son Karim Ibrahim has been examined. He deposes that he was joint with his father in business, and was present at the time when the conversation took place between his father and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as to the loan. He states that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 told his father that they required the loan to pay off antecedent debts. He adds that his father inquired from Haji Ahmed Yusif as to the status of the family of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and that the latter explained to him that he demanded the re-payment of the loan only because he was in urgent need of money, and apparently gave him to understand, that the loan was needed for the benefit of the family. He also states that his father made inquiries from other members of the caste to which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 belong. The mortgage-deed which was signed by defendant No. 1 as the guardian of Ratilal recites that the loan was needed for the benefit of the family, and Bhagwanji in his evidence has admitted the correctness of the statement in the mortgage-deed that the loan was required for the benefit of the family. I need hardly point out that the amount borrowed from Ibrahim Walli was utilised towards the liquidation of the debt due to Haji Ahmed Yusif which was a debt incurred for family purposes. I have referred above to the consent award that was made a rule of the Court. Mr. Kimatrai objected to the award on the only ground that the minor had not been properly represented. But admittedly the reference to arbitration was signed by Rughnath as guardian for the minor plaintiff and he, as I have held, was the managing member of the joint family. It was lastly urged, that the rate of interest at which the money was borrowed was exorbitant and that this revealed a gross disregard of the family interest. The mortgage-deed describes the rate of interest as being 15 per cent. which has been allowed also by the arbitrator. To Haji Ahmed Yusif the interest payable is 12 per cent. per annum. I do not regard the interest payable to defendant No. 3 exorbitant and unconscionable, or as betraying an utter disregard of the family interest so as to exempt the minor plaintiff from liability.

My findings, therefore, on the issues are:

Issue No. 1.—The residential house was the joint family property of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Issue No. 2.—In the affirmative.

Issue No. 3.—In the affirmative.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XXIII—Withdrawal of suit—Second suit when barred—Two suits involving same relief—Withdrawal of one—Other, maintainability of.

Under O. XXIII, C. P. C., when a plaintiff withdraws a suit without the permission of the Court, he is precluded from instituting fresh suit; but this does not prevent the trial of a subject-matter, so long as such trial is not affected by the principle of res judicata. [p. 387, cols 1 & 2]

A filed a suit and attached certain property before judgment. B filed a claim petition, which was dismissed, and then filed a suit for getting the summary order set aside. Subsequently B filed another suit for declaration of his right to the property and for delivery of possession. Both these suits were filed within a year of the date of the order on the claim petition. B withdrew the first suit as being unnecessary with the permission of the Court, the order allowing withdrawal not mentioning whether it was with or without liberty to bring a fresh suit. A now took the objection that the second suit was not maintainable as B was precluded from agitating the question of setting aside the claim petition therein by the withdrawal of the first suit;

Held, that a declaration of his title claimed by B in the second suit involved a setting aside of the order on the claim petition, and there being no final adjudication of the matter in the first suit, and the second suit being filed within a year of the order on the claim petition, the suit was maintainable. JUDGMENT.—The 3rd defendant is the appellant. The plaintiff's suit was substantially for a declaration of the rights of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 to the plaint lands and also for delivery of possession. During the pendency of the suit plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 sold their rights to plaintiffs Nos. 5 and 6. According to the plaintiffs, the suit property originally belonged to the members of the Racheyla family and it was purchased by the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 one Hampayya of Idukal on the 3rd of September 1912 under Ex. A. The case of the defendants is that the property belonged to the family of Ponpayya and Mallayya, that they took a sale-deed of it from the Racherla family in the name of Mallayya's father-in-law, Haruppya of Idukal, that it was a mere benami transaction, that Pompayya and Mallayya were always in possession, that the lands now belong to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 the children of Pompayya and Mallayya, and that the lands are now being held by the 2nd defendant on a lease given to him by the first defendant as the guardian of the 4th defendant. The 3rd defendant supported the plea of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and also stated that the present suit is not maintainable on account of the order passed in O. S. No. 531 of 1918 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Bellary.

Three questions were argued before me (1) that the purchase by Hampayya of Idukal, the father-in-law of Mallayya was a benami transaction; (2) that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are owners of the suit lands by adverse possession and (3) that the present suit is not maintainable.

The first question, viz., the benami character of the sale to Hampayya, is a question of fact. Both the lower Courts have found that Ex. A evidenced a real transaction and conveyed title to the property to the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4. This finding is attacked by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the appellant. Exhibit A, the sale-deed, recites that the plaint lands were orally sold to Hampayya for Rs. 800 in 1903 and put in Hampayya's possession and that as no proper sale-deed was executed till then, Ex. A was executed and delivered to Hampayya. According to the evidence in the case, out of the consideration of Rs. 800, Rs. 400 was paid in cash for the rest a promissory-note, Ex. C, was executed. This was renewed by Exs. D and E, and when the whole amount was paid, the sale-deed Ex. A was executed in favour of Hampayya. In attacking the finding that the sale to Hampayya was not a benami transaction, the learned Advocate-General mainly relies upon Exs. XLV and XLV (a) 1, extracts from the account-books of the Racherla family relating to the transaction of Hampayya's son-in-law, Mallayya, and his elder brother Pompayya. These accounts show that originally the idea was to sell the plaint lands to Pompayya and Mallayya for Rs. 650, that along with this sum the whole amount due to the Racherla people came to Rs. 1,030 in 1903, of this Rs. 230 was excused and the consideration was fixed at Rs. 800, half of which, viz., Rs. 400 was paid by Hampayya and for the remaining sum he gave Ex. C. Both the lower Courts have found that there is really no reason to suppose that the payments were made by Hampayya on behalf of Pompayya and Mallayya. Though originally the idea might have been to sell the property in their favour, as they were not able to find consideration, Mallayya's father-in-law must be taken to have purchased the property for himself. This is the view taken by both of the lower Courts on an examination of the evidence in the case. Pompayya and Mallayya were in possession of the lands for a considerable number of years; but it must be remembered that Mallayya was the son-in-law of Hampayya. The conclusion that Ex. A evidenced a real transaction in favour of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 is based upon the evidence in the case and I cannot say that that conclusion is not warranted by the facts.

Point No. 2.—As regards adverse possession, both the lower Courts have found that from 1899 to 1903 Pompayya and Mallayya were in possession by virtue of the agreement to purchase entered into with the Racherla family, so their possession was not certainly adverse to the Racherla people. The sale had not been completed, and the Racherla people must be still considered to have regarded themselves as the owners. As the sale had not been completed in 1903 Hampayya decided to purchase the lands and the possession of Pompayya and Mallayya after that period must be considered to be by the permission of Hampayya. I do not think, therefore, that defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the owners of the suit lands by adverse possession. I may state that this argument was only lightly touched upon by the learned Advocate General. Long possession by Pompayya and Mallayya was referred to by him more in support of the agreement that Ex. A evidences a benami transaction than as a basis for separate argument.

As regards the plea of the 3rd defendant that the present suit is not maintainable on account of the order passed in O. S. No. 531 of 1918, the facts are as follows. The 3rd defendant filed O. S. No. 2 of 1918 on the file of the District Court and attached the plaint lands before judgment; plaintiffs filed a claim petition which was dismissed, they, therefore, filed O. S. No. 531 of 1918 on the 9th of October 1918 for getting the summary order set aside and they filed the present suit on the 8th of July 1919. It will be seen that both these suits were filed within a year of the date of the order on the claim petition. In the present suit there is reference in the plaint to the claim petition and a prayer for a declaration of the rights of the plaintiffs to the plaint lands against all the defendants including the 3rd defendant. After the institution of this suit, the prosecution of O. S. No. 531 of 1918 was obviously unnecessary when the 3rd defendant took the objection that the present suit was not maintainable, O. S. No. 531 of 1918 had already been filed against him and the plaintiffs, therefore, withdrew that suit (O. S. No. 531 of 1918). It is the order passed when it was withdrawn that is relied upon by the 3rd defendant as a bar to the present suit. The decree, Ex. XLIV, giving permission to the plaintiffs to withdraw the suit does not say whether it was with liberty or without liberty to bring a fresh suit. As it does not dismiss the suit, I do not think that the plaintiffs are precluded from agitating the question raised in O. S. No. 531 of 1918 in this suit. No doubt under O. XXIII, when a plaintiff withdraws a suit without the permission of the Court, he shall be precluded from instituting fresh suit; but this does not prevent the trial of a subject-matter, so long as such trial is not affected by the principle of res judicata. As Ex. XLIV shows that there was no final adjudication of the rights forming the subject-matter of that suit, I think that the plaintiffs may claim that the summary order passed on their claim petition should be set aside in the present suit. The declaration of title claimed by the plaintiffs in this suit amounts to a setting aside of the order on the claim petition. I have already stated that both this suit as well as O. S. No. 531 of 1918 were filed within a year of the date of the order on the claim petition. The plaintiffs elected to proceed with this suit involving the same relief after dropping the other. I may say in this connection O. S. No. 2 of 1918, in connection with which the plaint lands were attached by the 3rd defendant was dismissed after the filing of this suit. I agree with the learned District Judge that the present suit is not barred by the order in O. S. No. 531 of 1918.

I dismiss the second appeal with costs of defendants Nos. 9 and 10. The memorandum of objections filed by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 raises the same question dealt with in the second appeal. It is also dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 9 and 10.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 2, 15, O. XXX, r. 1—Suit in name of firm—Payment to one partner—Satisfaction of decree.

Where a suit is brought in the name of a firm under the provisions of O. XXX, r. 1, C. P. C., one partner of the firm is competent to receive payment in respect of the decree in favour of the firm and to notify satisfaction of the said decree to the Court. [p. 390, col 1]

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Khanchand GopalDas, for the Defendants.

ORDER.—These three matters were argued together by consent. In each there is an application for execution and a notification of satisfaction and the point is whether the decrees have been satisfied or whether execution should proceed.

The same questions of law arise in all these, and the questions of fact are similar. I shall, therefore, deal in detail with Suit No. 432 of 1924 and thereafter deal with points not already covered so far as they affect or arise in Suit No. 433 of 1924 and Execution No. 273 of 1925.

SUIT No. 432 of 1924.

The decree in this matter was made on 13th May 1921 and is for Rs. 11,744-13-8. On the 19th of May, Yusif Haji Abdullah one of the members of the plaintiffs' firm wrote to the defendant the letter which is Ex 3-A in these proceedings to the effect that the defendants well knew that the firm of the plaintiffs was dissolved and that Mahbub was no longer a member of the firm and that no payment should be made to Mahboob. This was followed by a letter dated the 10th June 1925 and written by the Pleaders of the plaintiffs to the Pleaders of the defendants in the following terms:

"We shall thank you to direct your clients to pay up the decretal amounts in the above two cases as detailed below. Failing payment we have instructions to file execution application immediately the Court re-opens.

	Principal		Costs
	Rs.	a. p.	Rs.	a. p.
Suit No. 424 of 1924	27,906	13 0	2,217	14 9	Interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 20th June 1924 to payment.
Suit No. 432 of 1924	10,192	1 0	£50	13 3	Do.

The judgment-debtors allege that they paid the decretal amount on the 13th of June to Mahbub, one of the members of the plaintiffs' firm, and that, therefore, the notification that the decree has been satisfied is effective. The plaintiffs in the first instance deny that any payment was in fact made, secondly they contend that the payment being to one of several partners of their firm it was not valid, and that Mahbub as a single partner was not empowered by law to give a valid discharge or to notify satisfaction of the decree on behalf of the firm; finally they say that, in any event, there was collusion between Mahbub and the judgment-debtors that the collusive transactions cannot affect their rights: so that assuming that the defendants did pay Mahbub in collusion with him, they are nevertheless bound to pay the amount over again to the plaintiffs.

As to the question of fact I think the defendants have satisfactorily proved payment on the 13th of June. They have produced their books of account which I have examined with some care, and I feel no doubt that those books are properly kept, and that they prove the payment supported as they are by the oral evidence, of Thawerdas and Bhoora who are employed in the defendants' firm. Both these witnesses, especially Thawerdas impressed me favourably.

Doubt was thrown on the payment by reference to five circumstances.

In the first place because it was said that the head of the defendants' firm who was referred to as Saith Osman was not called. I had at a very early stage drawn Mr. Khanchand's attention to the importance of his being called; and I give full weight to this omission: but I am satisfied that the cause of it was merely that the witness was not available at convenient hours. This matter has been heard during three hearings I believe. In any case when Mr. Khanchand offered to have him called so that the plaintiff may have an opportunity of cross-examining him, Mr. Kimatrai said that if I called him as a Court witness he would cross examine the witness, but otherwise he would prefer to rely on the fact that the witness had not been called by the defendants. That reliance, therefore, is on a broken reed.

The next circumstance relied upon in connection with this question, is whether the letter of 19th May (Ex. 3-A) was not sufficient to warn the defendants, and whether apart from its legal effect (which I shall consider later), it did not throw great suspicion on the alleged payment. It did strike me at the start in that light. But it must be borne in mind that Ex. 3-A was written only by one of the three partners.

(assuming that there were only the 3 partners alleged by Seth Ismail Ex. 3 and not the five persons stated to be partners by Mahbub in his deposition Ex. 91. 48 at the hearing of the suit). Exhibit 3-A cannot, therefore, be compared in regard to its formal effect or weight to Ex. 8 which was addressed by the Pleaders of the firm in whose favour the decree was passed. Exhibit 8 may well be described as a demand for payment enforced by a threat. To my mind the natural effect of this correspondence is that the defendants' firm, unless it was in monetary difficulties, would make the payments demanded. As a result, therefore, of the examination of the correspondence I have come to the conclusion that Exs. 3-A and 8 far from supporting the applicant are in favour of the contention of the defendants.

A third circumstance was the fact that on the date of the payment, viz., the 13th of June, Rs. 12,000 are alleged to have been paid in cash into the defendants' firm and that the source of this sum is not further traced. There was, however, a balance of Rs. 4,400 brought forward, and then the large sum of Rs. 23,000 was drawn by a cheque from the National Bank of India, and these two sums sufficed for the payment of the decretal amount, and yet to leave a balance of as much as Rs. 14,000 in hand. After looking over the accounts I think that the sum of Rs. 12,000 was not comparatively so large as to make that circumstance, in itself, sufficient to throw its payment by Seth Osman in doubt.

Fourthly it is said that there is a sum standing in the defendants' account books due from Mahbub, and that this circumstance throws doubt on the alleged payment to him. But the defendants could not deduct the sum that was due from Mahbub personally from a sum due to the firm under a decree of the Court. The two transactions were entirely distinct, and one could not affect the other.

Finally it was said that the firm of Yusuf Mahbub and Co. had been dissolved and was known to have been dissolved as early as 1921. But the plaint in the present suit, dated the 20th of June 1924, is in the name of the firm and describes it as then carrying on business. There is no substance in this point. I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the amount of the decree was paid as alleged.

There is no evidence of collusion between the defendants and Mahbub and the mere suggestions and suspicions that the plaintiffs make or throw out against the defendants are quite insufficient to prove allegations of this nature.

I should like to add with reference to the evidence of Ismail that he did not impress me very favourably. He knows English well enough to write the letter Ex. 3-A in Suit No. 432 and Ex. 9 in Suit No. 433; and yet he wanted to have every question put to him translated and he himself answered in the vernacular. Then his statement in the letter and in the witness-box that the firm of Yusuf Mahbub & Co. had been dissolved in 1921 was opposed to the frame of the suit, where the firm are plaintiffs and are described as still carrying on business. In the witness box he struck me as a shrewd man taking into consideration all the bearings of a question before he was willing to commit himself to a reply, and yet eager to seize points in his own favour.

It remains to be considered whether payment to Mahbub in the circumstance entitles the judgment-debtor to have satisfaction of the decree recorded.

The relevant provisions of the law are contained in the C. P. C., O. XXI, r. 15 and O. XXX. I think the references to the Indian Contract Act, s. 38 et seq were quite uncalled for. Even apart from the fact that the provisions of the Contract Act have caused much difference of opinion in the Courts, it is obvious that the effect of a decree against a firm is quite different and based on entirely different principles and considerations from the effect of a promise to joint promisor; and, in any case, the specific provisions of the Code dealing with procedure and execution must be considered rather than far-fetched analogies drawn from rules relating to contracts. For similar reasons I think O XXX which deals with suits by or against firms should be considered in the first instance, and in priority to the more general rules relating to joint decree-holders.

Order XXX, it must be observed, permits but does not make it incumbent on persons claiming or being liable as partners, to sue or be sued in the name of the firm; and the plaintiffs in the present case adopted this course voluntarily. I say this, as, if the evidence of Ismail Haji Abdul Satar before me was accurate and the firm of Yusuf Mahbub & Co. had been dissolved before the suit was instituted and if it be the fact that there were differences between the partners; then apart from the variance from the truth which there is in the title to the suit, it was not very wise on the plaintiffs' part to sue in the firm name, nor to obtain a decree in favour of the firm. For, in the very first rule of O. XXX it is laid down that where persons sue in the name of their firm, any one of the partners may sign, verify or certify pleadings or other documents required to be signed, verified or certified by the plaintiff. Unless there is something to take away the effect of this sub-rule, it would seem that Mahbub not only could but was under a duty to certify payment which was received by him; and that the Court was then bound under O. XXI, r. 2 (1) to record the same. (The language of this rule is markedly different from that of O. XXIII, r. 3, where it has to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part).

Nothing that was said to me in the course of the elaborate arguments from the Bar seems to me to add to or detract from these provisions which are, in my opinion, sufficiently clear.

I am of opinion that the suit having been brought in the name of the firm under O. XXX, r. 1, Mahbub can certify payment under O. XXI, r. 15; and the Court, unless satisfied that fraud or collusion necessitated some cautionary measures, is bound to record satisfaction. I am not now dealing with any case of fraud or collusion, so I need not consider what course (if any) is left open to the Court when that is proved. I have the less hesitation in coming to the conclusion as the plaintiffs need not have sued in the firm name. They could have asked the Court to impose conditions against any one partner executing the decree (under O. XXI, r. 15); or they could have applied for a Receiver.

If the law empowers a partner to certify receipt of payment, as I hold, then it must follow that he is empowered to receive it. But the general law of partnership is sufficiently explicit on this point.

The decree will, therefore, be noted as having been satisfied in full and the application for execution dismissed with costs.

SUIT No. 433 of 1924.

The amount concerned in this suit is only Rs. 557-8-0 and the evidence is less full. I am not prepared to hold that the evidence of payment and the books of account showing payment are all false. Nor is there any evidence of collusion or fraud.

The decree will, therefore, be noted as having been satisfied in full and the application for execution dismissed with costs.

EXECUTION MISCELLANEOUS No. 273 of 1925.

The evidence in this matter is somewhat more detailed than in the last; for, though the amount concerned is only Rs. 550 it was paid in the settlement of a decree for Rs. 750, besides costs, etc. altogether amounting to over Rs. 1,000. There were also prior overtures for settlement which were declined by Ismail and Yusuf. The sum of Rs. 550 was, I hold, paid in full settlement of the decree. This amount was borrowed for the purpose, and Rs. 500 out of this were received by cheque and Rs. 50 in cash. These details are proved by the witness Tyabali and by entries in his books, and also by Yusufali Noorbhai. These witnesses seemed to me to be speaking the truth. I can quite imagine that the defendants should have preferred settling with Mahbub who was willing to give a full discharge on receipt of Rs. 550, rather than Ismail or Yusuf who would not accept Rs. 750 or Rs. 800 and who further had the judgment-debtor arrested.

The decree will, therefore, be noted as having been satisfied in full and the application for execution dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Aliyasantana family—Maintenance—Junior members, right of, to separate maintenance—Disputes between members, whether sufficient ground for award of separate maintenance.

The junior members of an Aliyasantana family are not entitled to separate maintenance on the ground of mere inconvenience caused by want of harmony between the ejman and the junior members. [p. 391, col. 2.]

In the absence of any evidence that the disputes between the members are of such a nature as to make it impossible or dangerous for the members to continue to live together in the same house and take meals together, a Court should not award separate maintenance to junior members on the ground that the members are not moving well together and that a joint mess would be extremely inconvenient. [ibid]

It is not incumbent on the ejman of an Aliyasantana family to distribute any spare money he has in his pocket amongst all the members of the family or among some of them [p 392, col. 1]

When some junior members of the family reside away from the family for a portion of the year with their husbands or wives, as the case might be, they are not entitled to claim from the ejman a sum equivalent to their maintenance during the period of absence [ibid]
